The progress that has been made in the past fifty years in the spread of the truths of Hygiene, and in the popular knowledge of anatomy, gives great hope for the future of the race. Blood-letting, purging, salivation, tartar emetics, and Thompsonian emetics, with their train of horrors, have quite gone out of fashion. Now we have cooling acid beveradges, and baths instead of phlebotomy, tomatoes for calomel, innocent powders, sugar pills, and prescribed dietetic regimen, in place of these awful emetics. Who can say, in view of all these facts, that the world does not move? Cholera we disarm with cleanliness, simple dry earth and proper drainage give the typhoids no chance for a footing; vaccination robs small-pox of its terrors; and as to the minor scourges, diet, sleep, and proper clothing extract their sting. Ten years ago oat-meal and cracked wheat as food for human beings were almost unknown in this country; now they are as regularly found in the breakfast bills of fare of our first-class hotels as steak or coffee, and are rapidly making their way into private families. Fifty years ago earnest students tried to accustom themselves to four, five, or six hours of sleep and a low diet; crushing down the body in order that the soul might attain a more heroic stature. Only the foolish and ignorant do that now. It is or ought to be well understood that the person who works with his brain, whether at mathematics, finance, literary composition, politics, or even mere worry, requires eight or nine hours sleep to knit up the raveled sleave of care and keep his brain in high working condition.

The analyses made by our chemists of blood, bone, nerve, tissue, muscle, and all the various foods, render it easy for the intelligent mother to feed the members of her household with food "convenient for them" and suited to reinforce the particular wastes of body they may individually suffer. She may know, if she will, how, by the observance of hygienic laws to prevent disease, and how to cure it in its earliest stages without medicine; how to pass from winter to spring without getting spring fever; how to get through the heated term and escape fevers and bowel complaints; how to pass from autum to spring and not suffer serious inconvenience from coughs and colds. It is within the power of every woman to know all these things just as she knows how to adjust her clothing to the various seasons. And when the conscientious mother reflects how almost the entire well-being of her husband and children depends on her posessing this knowledge, she will not be contented until she is thoroughly furnished for the discharge of the duties. Surely no object is worthy of greater devotion. Full are the books, ample are the means, by which a thoroughly practicle knowledge of all the laws which govern body and soul may be attained; observing which health, happiness, longevity, shall be the rule and not the exception.—N. Y. Tribune.

To Kill Insects use hot alum-water. It will destroy red and black ants, cock-roaches, spiders, chinch bugs, and all the crawling pests which infest our houses. Take two pounds of alum and dissolve it in three or four quarts of boiling water; let it stand on the fire until the alum disappears; then apply it with a brush while nearly boiling hot to every joint and crevice in your closets, bedsteads, pantry shelves, and the like. Brush the crevices in the floor of the skiriting or mop-boards, if you suspect they harbor vermin. If, in whitewashing a ceiling, plenty of alum is added to the lime, it will also serve to keep insects at a distance. Cock-roaches will flee the paint which has been washed in cool alum water. Sugar barrels and boxes can be freed from ants by drawing a wide chalk mark just around the edge of the top of them. The mark must be unbroken, or they will creep over it, but a continuous chalk line half an inch in width will set their depredations at naught. Powdered alum or borax will keep the chinch bug at a respectable distance, and travelers should always carry a package of it in their hand-bags to scatter over and under the pillows and in places where they have reason to suspect the presence of such bedfellows.—Germantown Telegraph.

An experienced housekeeper says that flies may be kept out of a butter plate on the table by a simple and novel expedient—by planting in it a thin slice of bread, cut columnwise, and inserted in a perpendicular position. Whether the bread scares off the flies the lady cannot say, but she declares it certainly keeps them off.

If you have been picking or handling acid fruit and have stained your hands, wash them in clear water, wiping them lightly, and while they are yet moist strike a match and shut your hands around it so as to catch the smoke, and the stain will disappear.

A Wisconsin man says that the flames of burning kerosene can be extinguished by throwing on flour. It seems reasonable that any absorbent material not readily combustible might be effective for such a purpose.

One square inch of a lilac leaf has 120,000 mouths, whose office is to give out the moisture in which the food absorbed by the roots has been dissolved.

Recent experiments show that water which remains over night in lead pipes contains one-tenth of a grain of lead to the gallon.

Farm and Garden.

Horticulture for the People.

I feel desirous on this occasion to urge the truth that an intelligent attention to horticulture will enable any man who owns a square rod of land to provide more of domestic comfort, and to gather around his home more of real, substantial attraction, than by an equal amount of labor and expenditure in any other way, I have seen men build for themselves dwellings costing from $5,000 to $10,000 or more, who seemed wholly unaware of the almost infinite amount of attraction which might be added by ornamental planting, and by the cultivation of the yearly circle of fruits. A neighbor built a handsome brick mansion which would now cost $15,000. He then went to a neighboring nursery, and by a great stretch of liberality, as he thought, expended in ornamental trees and shrubs the huge sum of $5, currency. He had been taught, or had taught himself, to believe that it was a waste of funds to buy trees that were merely "good to look at," although he had put several thousand dollars in piles of brick and stucco for no other purpose whatever than show, for his house would have been really more convenient and comfortable if he had reduced its size and pretentions, and made it cost at least $5,000 less. A twentieth part of the amount thus saved would have given him a valuable fruit garden, and have invested his dwelling with a paradise of rich foilage, and with the bloom and perfume of flowers. The truth was he had never read a horticultural book or journal, nor cultivated the dormant tastes, often smothered down and undeveloped, which naturally exists in the bosom of nearly every human being. I say nearly every one, for there seem to be a few in whom from some deficient phrenological development, or from some other cause, a refined taste for these beauties of nature seems to be totally extinct—and should claim our sympathy for this natural deprivation. In the case I have mentioned, the taste of the owner of the elegant brick mansion, if he had possessed it, seemed hidden far down under a ponderous heap of greenbacks, bonds and mortgages, which he had worked 30 years to accumulate. I have had occasion to contrast this bleak and stately mansion with some neat and small dwellings erected at a tenth the expense surrounded with all the attractions of soft masses of green foliage and clustering flowers.

Every man in this country has these delights and advantages within his reach. N. P. Willis very justly observed that "Nature lets the tree grow and the flower expand for man, without reference to his account at the bank." Every man in health in this country can have land enough and means enough to exercise his skill in cultivation. We too often fall into the error of thinking that one must be positively wealthy in order to enjoy a well-planted and well-kept home. Every person may have as comfortable competence as he advances in years. Suppose that a young man at 21 begins merely as a day laborer. If he can lay up only $100 yearly, and add interest to interest at 7 per cent. he will in 40 years, or at the age of 61, have accumulated no less than $20,000. Many however, will easily lay aside $200 a year, in which case they would have at 61 years $40,000. There are some leaks which a prudent man will stop, and thus add to the accumulations. Suppose, for example, he is willing to forego the use of tobacco, which may happen to cost him but $20 yearly—this saving alone will amount to $4,000 in his lifetime of 40 years. These facts shows that every industrious person at least may secure for himself a pleasant and comfortable home. If a mechanic he can purchase a small lot of land; if a farmer, a few acres will suffice to gather around his home all that may be desired of fine fruit and blooming ornamentals.—Prof. Thomas.

A correspondent expresses the reasonable opinion that, considering the value of a cord of hard wood has advanced during the last 50 years from $1 to $8, it would be a good thing if every farmer should at once plant a wood lot for his children. He further says he is now cutting pine saw-logs, 18 inches in diameter, which 30 years ago were saplings only five feet in hight. One of his neighbors 40 years ago, bought a lot of newly cleared woodland for two dollars per acre which is now, with its natural second growth worth over forty dollars per acre.

The last idea about fencing is to plant trees for posts, and when they are strong enough, string wires from one to another. The kind of tree is unimportant, but of course, fruit, nut and maple trees will be more profitable than others. On the plains where fruit trees will not grow without shelter-belts, cotton-wood and white golden willow may be planted.

In extensive farm-yards, where fowls have a wide range and plenty of food, they may be kept in flocks of considerable size, and so long as they have their liberty they will thrive and yield liberal returns. But when it becomes necessary to shut them up, in order to prevent their doing damage, large flocks speedily becomes diseased, and cease to be productive.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, August 20, 1874.

Executive Committee Notice.—The Executive Committee of the National Christian Association will meet at the Cynosure office on Friday, August 21st, at 11 o'clock A. M., for the transaction of deferred business, and such other matters as may be brought up.

By order of the Chairman.

A MODEL CYNOSURE.

"I should be glad to see in the Cynosure, a paper so truthful, so temperate, so consistent with the Word of God, and yet so convincing that I could not only read it myself, but recommend it to others." S. Davis.
Ansonia, Conn.

We are so pleased with the above, published under the heading, "Our Mail," that we reinsert and make it our model. The writer, we assume, does not expect us to overthrow a dark system of falsehood which men have joined to get secret advantages of their neighbors, in a manner "so temperate and convincing" that Freemasons, and those who wish the money and moral support of Freemasons, will not be angry. This would not be "consistent with the Word of God." Witness the uproar at Ephesus of those whose "craft" was in danger.

The question is, Are the American churches now in a state so identical with that of the corrupt Jewish church, in the days of the prophets, that similar treatment is required? We verily believe that our state is morally and spiritually identical with theirs. While some of them worshipped and served the true God in sincerity, except under Josiah, Hezekiah and a few such kings, the Hebrews all practiced strange worships invented by such men as Jeroboam, "who made Israel to sin." The result was, the oath came to mean nothing; justice went down, and Isaiah said, "Oh foolish nation! a people laden with iniquity." "The whole head is sick and the whole heart faint." "Truth is fallen in the street and equity cannot enter." It will not be denied that there is a similar relaxation of morals, in church and state, among us.

And the causes are the same. A Master Mason swears to conceal all crimes but two; and a Royal Arch Mason all crimes, without exception, in a Masonic brother, if given him as secrets. And divers side-worships work the same moral confusion here as among the Jews before their nation fell.

Now how did men inspired and sent of God treat that case. With the greatest possible violence of language the prophets denounced, not only corruption in general, but men in particular and by name.

Their style ran thus: "The ancient and honorable, he is the head; and the prophet that prophesieth lies, he is the tail." They told the popular court-preachers squarely to their faces, that they "prophesied lies in the name of God." And they assured the whole population, from the king down, that those false-worships would be the certain death of the nation unless they were stopped. They succeeded by the help of the Babylonish captivity, in overthrowing the worship of false gods; but they could not and did not suppress the false worships. In Christ's day, the popular preachers thought more of human "traditions" and "commandments of men," such as make up our lodge-worships, than they did of the law of God. John, Christ's harbinger, when he saw such men in his congregations, called them a "generation of vipers" which fell on the popular ear as "O seed of snakes!" would fall on ours.

Now those "Pharisees and Sadducees" were gentlemanly men for the most part. But they taught the people a religion consistent with sin. And they taught the true religion in the spirit of the world; "the fear of God by the precepts of men." The result was, public conscience died out. The oath lost its sacredness, marriage, its sanctity. They became a "sinful and adulterous generation," and their nation went out in blood as ours is going, when corruption and rottenness go a little father among the people and their representatives.

Christ told those preachers, whose chief objects were gain and promotion, and who shunned unpopular truth under the idea of saving their reputations to do good with, that they were "hypocrites," actors of a part in life. And when Paul met a lodge-man of this sort, who practiced the spiritualist sorceries of that age, he soluted him thus: "O full of all subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the idevil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?"

Now will our good Connecticut brother give us, in a written article, (no matter how long, we will print it,) the proof that A. H. Quint, of Massachusetts, Henry D. Moore, of Springfield, Illinois, and other adhering Freemasons who are ministers, and who are filled with the oaths and blasphemies of the lodge, are not to be treated in just this way. In an age of form and of force, Moses said of these worships and worshippers, "Consecrate yourselves to-day to the Lord, every man upon his son, and upon his brother." But Paul said, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness."

THE REASON AND THE REMEDY.

The art of Satan is to puzzle the intellect while he depraves the heart and deteriorates the man. Ever since the Fox girls' rappings in 1849 at Hydeville, N. Y., men have been discussing the question, "What makes the rappings and tippings?" One weak and superficial writer early gave us, "Modern Mysteries, Examined and Exposed." Others deny there are any mysteries to this day; and while this "seeking unto familiar spirits" goes on, corrupting and destroying thousands, the vain and shallow quid-nuncs go on settling the never settled question, What makes the phenomena; while the snake lies hid in the very dust of discussion which he raises.

So with this loathesome Beecherism. To-day, ten thousand thousands pore daily over the question of his adultery, who care little or not at all whether he is guilty or not; or, indeed, any one else. They amuse themselves with crime, and are making this nation a cock-pit and beer-garden of religion, and a brothel of souls. The cause of this state of things is the absence of God's truth and the presence of the world in press and pulpit. The Congregationalist, Independent, and the (Un) Christian Union have long been flying devils' kites with religious tails to them. "The prophets prophesy falsely and the priests bear rule by their means," now, just as of old.

The only remedy now is that practiced by Ezra and Nehemiah of old. We urge the reading of the books of those two good men.

Let us meet next year at Pittsburgh as a "National Christian Association," and observe a season of "prayer and fasting" over fallen doctrine and fallen morals in this great nation. Meantime, let there be monthly meetings of prayer, everywhere, for personal humiliation, prayer and supplication for deliverance from the open shams and secret oaths and blasphemies of the lodge.

Bishop Whitehouse.—Henry J. Whitehouse, Episcopal Bishop of Illinois, died at his residence in Chicago, Aug. 10th inst., aged 71 years.

He was appointed Bishop here twenty-three years ago. In these years so eventful in the history of this country and the world, he took no part at all in the questions of the age; unless praying in a "secesh" convention was such part. Newspaper editors praise his learning, without telling us how that learning showed itself to men. He devoted his whole time and strength to produce the belief that his branch (Episcopal) of the church was "the church of Christ;" though he knew that it was shaped as it now is, substantially, by an act of the British Parliament. A clergyman of his diocese was charged by the oath of respectable women with attempting to lead them to adultery and fornication; and the Bishop showed no zeal or desire to sentence him. Another of his ministers refused to say that an infant was regenerated when baptized by one of his priests, and regenerated by that baptism; and Mr. Cheney was pushed by his bishop with that "will-power" which the Chicago Journal gives him credit for. When visiting Rome, he was reported by the papers to have kissed the toe of the Pope or knelt before him, we forget which. Was it not of such men that Christ said, "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees ye cannot enter into the kingdom of God?"

A GRANGE FIGHT.

Good Hope Grange, of McDonough county, Illinois, was reported not long since as disbanded, and the reasons therefor published to the world, with, we are sure, the approval of reasonable men. The grange disbanded June 20th, and expressed its grievances by the decided vote of twenty-five to two. Grand Master Golder and his lackeys have tried to patch up the affair before the public as a mere secession of an unruly faction; they have, moreover, worked up another grange in the same locality, which organized August 1st, and expelled the disaffected members. The latter also held a meeting at the same time and after a full discussion of their former action passed the following:

Whereas, One or two members of said grange, [Good Hope] aided by the editor of the Illinois Granger, havs seen fit to publish and scandalously promulgate vile and slanderous terms and epithets against the brethren of said grange, denying their right to dissolve all relations whatsoever with the order of P. H., thereby demonstrating to the world the truth of our allegation in our resolutions of the 20th of June: "That they have, and do now, exercise unwarranted and systematic autocratic authority, ruling as with a rod of iron, from whose edit there is no appeal;" and further we now present to the world, in proof of our allegation in said resolution, that the order was being used by men for their personal political purposes, the following extracts from a letter sent to the officers of this grange by the present Overseer of the State Grange.

"We think we have resoluted long enough, and the time has come when we ought to act and enforce many of our resolutions; we are aware there is nothing to be gained at (1873) fall election in point of having our laws corrected, but would it not be well to try our strength as soon as possible at the ballot-box." I see some counties in the State have already called a convention, &c. I only set out to ask your opinion on the subject of calling a convention, and the best way to accomplish the most good."

From the tenor of the foregoing, and the persistent personal efforts made by a few of the members of Good Hope Grange to make it a political organization, we were forced to the conclusion expressed in said preamble and resolutions; and from the course subsequently pursued by the few members who have persistently impugned the motives of the brethren, and the misstatement of the facts in the letter of A. Golder, Master of State Grange, in asserting there were but fourteen members present, whereas the records of the grange show there were twenty-five voting aye and but two in the negative, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we still adhere to the sentiment expressed in the preamble and resolution adopted at a lawful meeting of Good Hope Grange, held on the 20th day of June last and claim that said grange has been regularly and lawfull disbanded by a large majority of members present.

This is signed by thirty-nine male and eleven female members of the said grange. Their example will have a large following in due time, for sensible men of independent spirit who are not wanting in the rural districts are not supposed to submit to a perpetual imposition and swindle. It is a insignificant fact, which is being frequently corroborated, that wherever a community becomes enlightened on the grange question, the busy agents of the lodge beseige it in vain.

NOTES.

—During a pleasant visit from Bro. J. T. Kiggins, Indiana State Lecturer, on Tuesday of last week, we learn that he has entered a homestead claim in western Kansas, near to his father, and proposes to remove thither in October. This will be a serious loss to Indiana, where Bro. Kiggins has had great success in organizing associations. If a man can be found to do it, this place should be filled without delay. The workers in Kansas will profit by the removal and will no doubt have something for Bro. Kiggins to do in the way of lectures when his lonely left arm is wearied with the plow.

—The Telescope thus notices the efforts of anti-lodge churches to obtain aid from lodge-members: "We have heard it said by United Brethren lips that such and sueh a United Brethren church was built by secret society men. Some also think that we can not hope to get much outside aid for our benevolent enterprises while we maintain our present attitude on secrecy. It would be a blessing to the church if the outsiders would drive the members to build up their institutions with their own money and then be able to say that they own them." The end of Asa, King of Judah, who forsook the Lord for his physicians, should be remembered by churches of Christ who are in financial embarrassment.

—The Ohio State meeting, the General Agent writes, was ripe in earnest feeling, even rivaling the late National Convention. The State Association was fully organized with a Vice-president in nearly every county, who is expected to act as agent in his county to secure signers to the Constitution. "The expectations of the most sanguine were more than realized and the whole community is stirred to the bottom. To God be all the glory!" These are cheering words and full of promise for the work in Ohio. The United Presbyterian churches of central Ohio are taking hold with vigor, and Bro. Caldwell is greatly encouraged. He was heartily endorsed by the Convention. For other notes of the work in Ohio see the "Reform News."

—The New York Times, lately the leading Republican journal of the country, says very reasonably of the college fraternities, "The growth of secret societies in colleges is much to be deprecated. They are a source of heart-burning and jealousy; they tend to separate young men from their fellows; they create unjust distinctions; and, finally, they waste time and money. It should be the settled policy of this country to discourage all secret organizations; and if they are allowed to exist in college, they are not to be resisted outside of it. Nothing worth doing in college can be any better done by means of a secret organization; and nothing which can justly be sought for outside of college needs, in America, to hide its objects or its actions behind a veil of secrecy."

—Masonic orators who prate of the chivalry of the lodge, its regard for woman, and the special arrangements for her reception to its fold, may read the following quoted by the Freemason from the Key Stone:

"The Masonic Tidings admits that the 'Order of the Eastern Star' is a failure, in this language: 'This extra-official, or Adoptive Degree, is conferred on a wife, sister, or daughter of a Master Mason, by a brother of the Masonic order, who officiates as the founder or patron of a Chapter—that being the name given to each subordinate body, the full organization being known as the Order of the Eastern Star. But like many other adoptive degrees in use, the work of instruction pertaining to the Eastern Star is found unsatisfactory—a result mainly attributable to the uninstructive character of its ceremonies and language, marring even the most sacred invocations. So determined is this grave obstacle to the success of an otherwise useful degree, that many excellent Masons refuse to permit their wives or other eligible relatives to join the Eastern Star Chapters. It proposes to remedy the evil by indulging in another, to-wit, the establishment of the 'Order of the Mystic Star,' with a revised ritual. Any new order that seeks to affiliate Ancient Craft Masonry with itself, more especially if it be a female order, merits what it usually attains—an early death.'"

—A correspondent of the Western Rural has a few sensible words on the grange in a late number. He says:

"In my life I have been invited to join the 'Masons.' the 'Good Templars,' the 'Odd-fellows,' and the 'American Nationals;' and, even the 'Grand Order of Sons of Malta' proposed to give me a ride on their goat; but, always remembering my early training of giving freely to the world what little I knew or could learn, without regard to nation or character, I declined them all; even to the request of Secretary Kelley, of the Patrons of Husbandry, that I would act in their ranks. I declined this last honor because I do not believe that any number or mass of men should bind themselves together to aid their interest at the risk of destruction to others. We take this as a free country, each man of credit, industry and intelligence having a vote in its management of general and local guidance. No restriction is now put upon property or color, and when any bond or oath of secrecy comes into a part and parcel of an organization, it violates all of our national republican principles. Generally, as a writer, I have kept pretty quiet upon this matter of Patrons of Husbandry, because I could see that it, like any other grand humbug, was bound to have its day; as the masses generally read but little, while in every community there are a few men ready to take advantage of the ignorance of the people provided it enures to their benefit."

Temperance Address.

Whatever be the cause of it, nothing fills those who are engaged in a wrong practice with such consternation and dread, as to see others forsaking the practice, and honestly striving to avoid all responsible connection with it and with them who follow it. The very instinct of a man tells him that it is no grateful task to oppose wicked conduct and shun wicked men. They know, therefore, that those who do this are honest men. This is what gives separation from the world its power. There is, it is true, a sort of fanatic temperament which finds a furious pastime in opposing evil. But, to a wise and feeling mind, next to the pain of remorse for sin itself is the pain of opposing sinners. And this is what makes his opposition so terrible to wrong-doers. Nor is this all. Numbers embolden crime, and when his associates begin to forsake an incorrigible man, he feels as if he was to be left alone in his sins. For who can tell but his remaining partners may forsake him next? The righteous, though forsaken of the whole world, still has the infinite God on his side. But the transgressor, when forsaken by his associates, being abhorred of God and meeting no sympathy even from Satan, stands isolated and alone, and is filled with insecurity and dread.

Such is the mighty power by which Christ proposes to bring the world back to goodness and to God—"Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord; and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you. And I will be a Father to you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." And such is the might of this woman's movement. Opinion enlightened by discussion, had poured on the dram-seller and his landlord; but what cares avarice, with its clutch on gain, for opinion! The law has marshaled its terrors, but the bandits of all ages have deemed it smartness to escape penalty, heroic to defy law. The dark battallions of grog, backed by the invisible ruler of the world's darkness, walked proudly among men, while wealth made them masters of opinion and the law. And, shivering in the background of our national picture, hid behind clouds of tobacco smoke ascending from the haunts of business and regiments of boosy boys, stand the shrinking forms of women worse than widows, and children poorer than orphans. The very war which has saved our flag, has sunk our morals, while even the professed sentinels of God, the ministers of religion, have stood silent or quailed before the deluge of strong drink, and dealt with their hearers in sentiment and trash. Then came woman; her heart bleeding for her country; pale with the untold agonies of the wives of drunkards, and with horror at the possible fate of her own sex, her eyes meekly turned upward towards heaven, and her foot firmly planted on the promises of God, she has entered this arena, as Wellington's men went into battle, "to die but not to yield!" And the very angels of God, who stood guard at that sepulchre which the women would not leave till they had found the Conqueror of the world's evils, shall, at the coming of these women also, again roll away the stone from the sepulchre of human hope, and another Penticost shall usher in another dispensation of glory to God, and good will to men.

Religious Intelligence.

—This year the first colored student will graduate from the Theological school at Yale College, and also from the Academical Department.

—It is said that there are now ninety-eight Protestant churches in Mexico, an increase of ninety-two in five years. Romanism but little removed from paganism, is the worship of the nation.

—Prof. Patton, editor of the Interior, has been severely ill, a probable result of his effeort as prosecutor in the Swing trial. He is now reported able, however, to resume his duties in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Chicago.

—"A depleted treasury is the argument of mean men for a change in the pastorate, and the murmurs that are heard over the matter compel multitudes of good ministers to migrate, whose permanency in the pastoral relation might be attended with untold blessing."

—A great camp meeting has been held at Battle Creek, Mich., by the Seventh day Adventists. The crowds in attendance have numbered thousands, and a large number have professed conversion. A lady speaker created intense enthusiasm.

—Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, having refused to ordain an insane divinity student was attacked by the latter in the Episcopal church of Fairibault. The bishop forced the would-be assassin into a chair and held him until his pistol was taken from him.

—Antioch, the cradle of the Gentile Church, has scarcely any record in the modern missionary enterprise which is reviving Christianity in the East. It has a small mission congregation of 10 or 15 members, without settled pastor, and at present ministered to by a student from the Bebek Seminary.

—Myah Sah Pokway, a converted Karen from Burmah, was ordained to the Gospel ministry by a Baptist council in Plainfield, N. J., during the last week in July. He is the son of a Karen preacher and has been educated in this country at Hamilton college and Crozen Theological Institute.

—Rev. T. A. Goodwin, a Methodist minister of Indiana, is to be tried on a charge of heresy by his conference for writing a book on "The Mode of Man's immortality," in which his opinions are understood to discard the common doctrine of the resurrection and to hold that the entire personality of the believer passes to the presence of God immediately after death.

—The co-laborers of Mr. Hammond in his work at St. Louis last winter, to continue at brief intervals in that city, to conduct religious meetings on the street corners and court-house steps and in the market places. In several instances they have met with opposition from some of the roughs from the streets, and once or twice have been egged. They have applied to the city authorities for relief from such abuse.

—In twelve years Mr. Wilder, of the Kolapur Mission, has visited and preached in 2,464 towns, with a total population of more than two millions. In 2,114 of them he found no trace of any previous missionary labor, in 2,062 there was not even a school, and in 966 not a single resident was found who could read his own language. However much has been done for India, it is but little compared with what yet remains to be accomplished.

—At the recent annual conference of Evangelical Christians in London, it was stated that (1) there were in England and on the Continent between twenty and thirty thousand converted Jews, among whom there were four hundred ministers of the Gospel, one hundred of these being Church of England clergymen, and one hundred of them being missionaries to their own people. (2)The Jewish mind seemed now opened to the reception of the truth, and the prejudices were dying out. (3) The New Testament was now being very extensively read by the Jews. (4) Jews and even Jewish rabbis and editors were now speaking in the most respeetful terms of Jesus of Nazareth.

—The ladies of St. Louis have instituted a home missionary society for the visitation of the various public institutions of the city by missionaries and traet distributors, who should talk to the inmates, whether patients or criminals, upon their condition and preparation for the life beyond, and conduct religious services as they had opportunity. Six institutions are now regularly and systematically visited, and three, county house, city work-house and quarantine hospital, have small temporary libraries provided, and reading is carried weekly by some of the members of the mission to the other three, viz: the jail, city hospital and house of refuge.

The Home Circle.

The Workman's Cry.

Rest, rest, from Sunday trading!
God's way for man is best;
Six days for honest labor,
The seventh—God's day—for rest.

Rest, rest, from Sunday labor!
The laborer has a soul!
God gives to him the Sabbath,
Oh, let him have the whole.

Rest, rest, from Sunday tra'vling!
Let railroads keep the day;
'Twould hinder many accidents
That now oft "block the way."

All need the precious Sabbath,
God knows man's nature best;
He says, "Six days for labor,
The seventh the day for rest."

Responsibility of Society.

An excellent divine of this city—a friend of ours, said to us one day, "We have not yet learned the responsibility of society to individuals. We talk much of the responsibility of individuals to society, but we forget that society is bound to protect all her children."

I was dining some time since with a distinguished judge of the Queen's bench in London. The conversation turned, as you may imagine, on the condition of the poor. I said to the judge:

"Did you observe those poor children, ragged and encrusted with filth, which you passed to-day driving from your house to Westminister Hall?"

"No, I observed none."

"You must have passed some hundreds."

"It is very likely, but it did not occur to me to observe them."

"And what must be the fate of those poor children?"

"Some of them will die of disease, some will emigrate, and some I shall probably hang."

"What means can they have of obtaining an honest and honorable livelihood?"

"I am sure I do not know."

"Is there any alternative for them but to beg, steal or starve?"

"I presume not."

"And have you considered their condition, ascertained their wants, and done what you could to avert the evils to which they are exposed?"

"Not at all. I have been otherwise engaged."

"Let me tell you, then, sir, that I would rather take my stand at the day of judgment with those you hang than with yourself."

"Sir, do you intend to insult me?"

"By no means. I would simply assure you that those you condemn to be hung are less guilty than yourself. God has given you talents, education, wealth, a commanding position in society, and yet you can pass daily, unnoticed, hundreds of young beings, who, as they grow up, must necessarily beg, steal or starve. You do not see them; you do not think of their wretched condition; you do nothing to save them from that crime, on which you hereafter sit in judgment, and am I to regard them as guilty, and you as innocent?—you, who might, had you put forth your hand, have saved them from falling victims to a corrupting social organization."

The rich man, the man of talents and education, occupying a honorable and important post in society, who can forget the poor and exposed, fail to observe the thousands growing up for the prison and the gallows, and refuse to labor day and night to save them from the doom which must await them, is, of all the victims of society, the one mostly to be pitied, and whose hard lot is the one least of all to be envied.—Quarterly Review.

A Working Man's Plea for the Sabbath.

"Suppose the Sabbath were to be, by all people, instantaneously abolished; let the railway trains, as on other days, dart athwart the land; let the tide of commerce unarrested flow; let the hives of industry still swarm; let the clangor of machinery and the deafening roar of trade continue to resound; let the tramp of traffic still go on; let the greedy grasp their gains, and the slaves go groaning beneath their fetters; in short, let the contentious world proceed as at other times. And what would be the upshot of all this? Should we be the happier? the healthier? the freer? the richer? Would any one of the ends of our terrestrial existence be in any degree facilitated thereby? Would the selfishness of man, unchecked and unreproved, be less grinding or cruel? Would the oppressor be less tyrannical? Would any of the acknowledged evils of society be diminished one iota? Would the competitions, the rivalries, the heart-burnings of men be less crushing and ruinous? Alas! no. Every evil under which we now writhe would be aggravated; every carnal passion would then have full swing; every undamped lust would then burn with increased intensity; health would be prematurely blasted; the nobility of man would be annihilated; and the glorious energies of his immortal spirit would be hopelessly imprisoned. Mammon and Bacchus might continue to be dilligently served; but God would be unworshiped. Mankind, thus ingloriously wedded to the world, would through all their lives grovel in the dust, and never devoutly raise their foreheads to the temple of the sky. Help, ye wearied children of labor! Help, ye Christian ministers and philanthropists! Help, ye statesmen and legislators! Help, ye patriots, whose hearts yearn for the welfare of your suffering kind! Help! that the most distant approach to such a state of things as we have just surmised may be prevented, and that the blessed advantages chartered by the Sabbath may be faithfully preserved and zealously extended."

How Should a Child be Trained.

Train with this thought continually before your eyes—that the soul of your child is the first thing to be considered. Precious, no doubt, are these little ones in your eyes; but if you love them, think often of their souls. No interest should weigh with you so much as their eternal interests. No part of them should be so dear to you as that part which will never die. The world, with all its glory, shall pass away; the hills shall melt; the heavens shall be wrapped together as a scroll; and the sun shall cease to shine, but the spirit which dwells in those little creatures, whom you love so well, shall outlive them all, and whether in happiness or misery (to speak as a man) will depend on you.

This is the thought that should be uppermost in your mind, in all you do for your children. In every step you take about them, in every plan, and scheme, and arrangement, that concerns them, do not leave out that mighty question, How will this affect their souls?"

Soul love is the soul of all love. To pet, and pamper, and indulge your child, as if this world was all he had to look to, and this life the only season for happiness,—to do this is not true love, but cruelty. It is treating him like some beast of the earth, which has but one world to look to, and nothing after death. It is hiding from him that grand truth, which he ought to be made to learn from his very infancy, that the chief end of his life is the salvation of his soul.

A true Christian must be no slave to fashion, if he would train his child for heaven. He must not be content to do things merely because they are the custom of the world; to teach them and instruct them in certain ways, merely because it is usual; to allow them to read books of a questionable sort, merely because every body reads them; to let them form habits of a doubtful tendency, merely because they are habits of the day. He must train with an eye to his children's souls. He must not be ashamed to hear his training called singular and strange. What if it is? The time is short—the fashion of this world passeth away. He that has trained his children for heaven rather than for earth,—for God rather than for man,—he is the parent that will be called wise at the last.—Rev. J. C. Ryle.

MILTON'S DAILY LIFE.—Milton lived in a small house in London, or in the country in Buckinghamshire. Of all consolations, work is the most fortifying and the most healthy, because it solaces a man, not by bringing him ease, but by requiring effort. Every morning he had a chapter of the Bible read to him in Hebrew, and remained for some time in silence grave, in order to meditate on what he had heard. He never went to a place of worship. Independent in religion as in all else, he was sufficient to himself. He studied till mid-day; then, after an hour's exercise, he played the organ or bass violin. Then he resumed his studies till six, and in the evening enjoyed the society of his friends. When any one came to visit him, he was usually found in a room hung with old green hangings, seated in an arm chair and dressed quietly in black. He had been very beautiful in his youth, and his English cheeks, once delicate as a young girl's, retained their color almost to the end. Few men have done such honor to their kind. Amidst so many trials (a scrivener caused him to lose $10,000; at the Restoration he was refused payment of $10,000 due from the excise office; his house was burned in the great fire; when he died he only left $7,500, including the produce of his library); a pure and lofty joy, altogether worthy of him, had been granted to him: the poet, buried under the Puritan, had re-appeared, more sublime than ever, to give to Christianity a second Homer.—Taine.

The Human Heart.

The influence of the intellect upon the heart is similar to that exercised over voluntary muscles.

The direction of thought to the heart has very generally an embarrassing influence on its regular action.

Sir Henry Holland says: "There is cause to believe the action of the heart is often quickened or otherwise disturbed by the mere centering the consciousness in it, without any emotion or anxiety." On occasions where its beats are audible, observation will give proof of this, or the physician can very often infer it while feeling the pulse; and where there is liability to irregular pulsation such action is seemingly brought on or increased by the effort of attention, even though no obvious emotion be present.

I have observed the phenomena in hysterical women who imagine they have heart disease. In these cases a morbid attention to the action of the heart would bring on palpitation and irregular action. Upon the removal of all anxiety by a decided assertion from me, after a careful physical examination, that the heart was not deceased, it would quickly resume its normal action.

From the same cause medical students, when their studies are directed to this organ, are frequent sufferers from its disturbed action. Anxiety, no doubt, comes in here to aggravate the disorder, and will be referred to again, under emotions.

Peter Frank himself, even in advanced life, while devoting especial attention to the subject of heart disease during the preparation of his lectures, was attacked with severe palpitations, accompanied by an intermittent pulse, and felt certain that he was affected with aneurism. The symptoms did not cease until some time after the completion of his labors, after he had enjoyed the relaxation and diversion of a journey. In fact, it is quite a common remark, that medical men often die from a disease that they have made a special study through life.

The question now naturally arises, is it possible for hysterical or hypochondriac persons to bring on permanent structural disease of the heart by a morbid concentration of the mind on it?

It is the opinion of most medical writers that it is not probable that such a result would occur. They admit, however, that it would be likely to aggravate any previous mischief and induce irregular action, and, ultimately, hypertrophy, or some other disease decidedly organic. The physician should, therefore, in treating such patients, exercise his influence and ingenuity to divert their minds from the heart to some other object or organ.

Numerous interesting cases are recorded showing the specific effects of the intellect over the heart's action, as one of a medical student being initiated into the rites of a Masonic society;* his eyes were bandaged, a ligature bound around his arm, and the usual preparations made for bleeding. A pretense of opening the vein was made, and a stream of water spurted in a bowl to represent the sound of the flowing blood expected. As a result the student soon became pale and fainted.

There is the well-known case of the man being bled by the prick of a pin, and warm water running down his arm, who actually died as a result.

The daughter of Sir Charles Lee, at 2 o'clock on a certain morning, saw between the curtains of her bed a little old woman, who told her that at 12 o'clock the next day she would be with her in the next world. She immediately dressed herself very carefully, went into her private closet and did not come out till 9 o'clock, when she went to her aunt, handed her a letter directed to her father, with the request that it be sent to him immediately on her death, telling hear aunt about the apparition. A physician and a surgeon were sent for, but could discover no disease, but on the urgent solicitation of the aunt, bled her slightly. She then took a chair and played on her guitar and sang some favorite pieces, and a few minutes before twelve went to a large arm chair, sat in it, and at twelve raised her hand toward her heart and was dead.

Another case of a young lady who received a similar warning, only it came a year before the appointed time. She became anemic, lost flesh and strength; nothing could apparently be done to save her life, although no organic or structural disease could be found by the closest examination by skillful physicians. The day before the time set for her death a young physician who had some tact gave her a very heavy anodyne and she slept under its influence during the entire day of her expected death. When she returned to consciousness the next day, and was making a few final preparations, she was assured that the time had passed for her to die, and that the oracle knew nothing of such matters and was an impostor. She got up from her bed and rapidly regained both flesh and strength. —Dr. Hall.

Pay Your Small Debts.

There are two causes which enter into and increase the severity of a financial panic. One is, that men will require payment where it cannot be be made, the other is, that they will neglect to pay where they can. The one applies to large debts, the other to small ones.

In times when money is felt to be such a valuable commodity, and everybody seeks it, an immense amount leaves the channels of trade and goes into men's pockets. Everybody clings to it, and pays it out grudgingly. There is hence a temptation to neglect small debts, and to hoard what business is dying for the want of. When each one neglects a small debt, the aggregate becomes enormous.

Forbearance in pressing the payment of large demands is necessary, and ought to be shown, but it alone cannot give complete relief. The small streams, each of which seems insignificant, make up the mighty river; and the small sums which many people owe, and which they can pay if they try, would, if paid promptly, put an amount of money in circulation that would be of incalculable benefit to the country. Pay, then, your small debts, even if it requires an effort to do so. Pay them at once, and owe no man anything but love. Do not be too anxious for the future; do right, and trust in God. Instead of croaking about hard times and putting off those whom you owe, pay down to the bottom dollar, and trust Providence for more. The only way to pump up what is the bottom of the well, is to empty out what is in the top of the pump. And there is no pocket so ready for money as one that has been emptied in the payment of just demands. Remember that the obligation to make times easier rests upon every man in proportion to his ability, and that every one will share, in a nearly proportionate degree, in the blessings of that prosperity he helps to bring about. —Selected.

Those who feel compelled to commence work early, before breakfast, will do well to prepare for it by taking a light lunch, a cup of milk or warm coffee.

Children's Corner.

Thank God for Little Children.

BY MRS. FRANCIS E. W. HARPER.

Thank God for little children
Bright flowers by earth's wayside,
The dancing, joyous lifeboats
Upon life's stormy tide.

Thank God for little children;
When our skies are cold and gray,
They come as sunshine to our hearts,
And charms our cares away.

I almost think the angels,
Who tend life's garden fair,
Drop down the sweet wild blossoms
That bloom around us here.

It seems a breathless haven
Round many a cradle lies,
And every little baby
Brings a message from the skies.

The humblest home with children
Is rich in precious gems,
That shame the wealth of monarchs,
And pale their diadems.

Dear mothers, guard these jewels,
As sacred offerings meet,
A wealth of household treasures
To lay at Jesus' feet. —Witness.

A Story for the Children.

"Wait outside for me, Harry; I shall not be long, and I shall, perhaps, want you to carry a parcel for me."

"Very well, Lizzie; only be as quick as you can."

Harry looked about to see how he could amuse himself until his sister was ready for him, and presently he saw a toy-shop.

"I shall see Lizzie when she comes," he thought, "and I can run to her if I want her."

But why should a strong little boy want to run to his sister?

Well, the fact was that Harry was easily frightened, and when anything alarmed him his first impulse was to run to some one to protect him. He had not been very long looking in the toy-shop before a man came up. The man was evidently not a teetotaler, for he had taken too much drink, and could neither look nor walk quite straightly. It was very sad to see a man in this state; but there is no reason why any one should be frightened by him, for generally he is too stupid to hurt another even if he should be so disposed. This man came near to Harry before he was aware of it.

"Hullo, my little man," he said, "do you want a pënn'orth of marbles?"

He had no sooner spoken, than Harry darted away, and ran into the shop where Lizzie was.

"Why, Harry, what is the matter?" she said.

"Oh, there is a drunken man after me," he said, panting.

"After you? what nonsense! Is that the man standing by the window, yonder?"

"Yes."

"He is not after you."

"No; but I was afraid he was, though," said Harry.

Lizzie laughed at her brother, and so did several persons in the shop, who seemed to think it was very good fun. But though Harry found that the poor, foolish man was harmless enough, it did not cure him of his fear.

That night, after he had gone to bed, he sprang out again, ran down stairs as fast as he could, and suddenly appeared in the midst of his friends.

"What is the matter now?" they cried together.

"Oh!" said Harry, "I dare not stay up stairs. I am almost sure some one is there."

"Are you! How silly you are, Harry!" said his father. "Come back with me and see."

"Oh, no!" said Harry; "please, father, will you go up first? I am so frightened."

So Harry's father went up stairs and looked all around. Then he called him.

"Have you found him, father?"

"Yes."

"Oh, I am so glad! Is it a man?"

"Come and see for yourself, Harry."

Harry went up, and there, walking across the boards, and making certainly a good deal of noise, for so small a thing, was a black beetle.

"Is that all?"

"Yes, that is all."

"I do not think the beetle could have made so much noise."

"Listen."

When it began to move Harry knew that it was that which he had heard, and he certainly felt a little ashamed of himself.

Everybody laughed at him; and no one likes to be laughed at, so Harry told his father that he wished he could overcome his timidity.

"Do you know how I could conquer myself, father? I should be so glad if I could."

"Will you follow my advice if I give it to you, Harry?"

"Yes, indeed, father, I will try."

"Then, in the first place, never get up in the morning, or go to bed at night without prayer. Ask God to take care of you, and believe that he will do that which you ask him. And then never run away from that which frightens you; but always go up to it and see what it is."

"Oh, father," said Harry, "how could I do that?"

"My boy, make yourself do it. Be sure that God will not let anything really hurt you, and do have the courage to investigate that which you cannot at first understand."—Selected

Helping the Minister.

"One thing helped me very much while I was preaching to-day," said a clergyman.

"What was that?" inquired a friend.

"It was the attention of a little girl, who kept her eyes fixed on me, and seemed to try to understand every word, said. She was a great help to me."

Think of that, my little ones; and when you go to church or chapel, fix your eyes on the minister, and try to understand what he says, for he is speaking to you as well as to grown up people. He is telling about the Lord Jesus, who loves the little ones.—Missionary Echo.

Manners.

Manners are more important than money. A boy who is polite and pleasant in his manners will always have friends, and will not often make enemies. Good behavior is essential to prosperity. A boy feels well when he does well. If you wish to make everybody pleasant about you and gain friends wherever you go, cultivate good manners. Many boys have pleasant manners for company and ugly manners for home.

We visited a small railroad town, not long since, and were met at the depot by a little boy of about eleven or twelve years, who entertained and cared for us in the absence of his father, with as much polite attention and thoughtful care as the most cultivated gentleman could have done. We said to his mother before we left her home, "You are greatly blessed in your son, he is so attentive and obliging."

"Yes," said she:—"I can always depend on Charley when his father is absent. He is a great help and comfort to me." She said this as if it did her heart good to acknowledge the cleverness of her son.

The best manners cost so little, and are worth so much, that every boy can have them.—Children's Advocate.

"A person converted in youth," says John Angell James, "is like the sun rising on a summer's morning to shine through the long, bright day; but a person converted late in life is like the evening star—a lovely object of Christian contemplation, but not appearing till the day is closing, and then but for a little while."

Correspondence.

ly generally became very warm advocates of Masonry, believing it to be second to nothing in the world politically or ecclesiastically; he though a prominent member of the M. E. church claimed the Masonic order possessd facilites above the church. This one also joined the Odd-fellows. He lived in high expectations of a "better day coming;" had a good influence in community, paid his dues promptly and seemed fully baptized into the faith of those orders of charity and benevolence as they called them. He trained up his children to believe that when he should die, (though at that time he was well to do in the world) the surviving family should find in the lodge, fathers and plenty of friends, homes, schools and books, and everything that could make one happy in this world; but alas! death came in a very unexpected moment. He was sitting in a chair preparing to go to Sabbath-school, which he superintended. He complained of feeling bad, wished to be helped on the bed, and believed he was a going to die. Help was readily at hand. They laid him upon the bed a lifeless corpse. I was not present to witness the funeral occasion, but learned that the Masons and Odd-fellows showed their respect for the deceased and family very promptly. Both claimed their share of the ceremonies of his burial. One carried him to the grave, the other consigned the body to its last resting place.

Now comes the issue. His financial affairs being not in a condition for a stranger to understand, although the administrator was a brother of the lodge, he is impeached with injustice. Soon the widow with her family moved West. I knew but little about their condition whatever. Not long since I received a letter from her, making pitiful appeals for help. She appealed to the higher courts who would meet out justice to those who had dealt so unjustly with her and her family. I wished to know if the pledges those orders had made in other years had been verified and how it came that she was in such a condition. She answers. No, she has not received a cent from either lodge. She asked the Master for help. They made a big fuss and said her relatives ought to help her. She would never ask them again if she starved to death. How is that for charity. She says she can't send her children to school, for want of books; or to Sabbath-school for want of clothes, and that it is no uncommon thing for her children to go to bed hungry and cry for something to eat.

I have pursued this topic long enough. I am willing to vouch for most of this statement, being personally familiar with the facts. I have heard of similar cases, but the Masons always claimed justification, as, the deceased was delinquent, or was of but little consequence while living, and as he was but little known in life they would not make him conspicuous in death by their charity.

I am requested not to use these facts against these orders, but give them a chance to redeem themselves; but I think all of those cataracts or whirlpools should be marked so that our young mariners just launching out on the voyage of life can take warning.

An anti-secrecy brother for the truth,
G. W. HUTCHINGS.

Strange Doctrine.

In a recent letter Bro. Hinman, the Illinois agent, writes: Yesterday at a Methodist (not M. E.) quarterly meeting held here, the officiating minister told the people, that among the good institutions which are doing good in the land he would enumerate Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, the grange, etc., and that he had no fellowship with the croakers who deride those institutions. Doubtless the poor brother thought he would thus gain the favor of the ungodly men who control these institutions; and perhaps he will. But still the words of the ancient prophet are true: "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil, that put light for darkness and darkness for light."

Grand Jury Business.

FALL RIVER, Wis., Aug 12th, 1874.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

Some ten or twelve years ago I was numbered with the grand jury in Eau Claire county. A case was brought before us for adultery (the man was a Mason.) and after examining witnesses, the foreman said: "What have you to say, gentlemen?" "Find a bill of course," says one. This foreman replied "What good will it do?" Another asks "Is not the evidence sufficient?" He answered, "Yes, and no one doubts his guilt. He is more noted for this than anything else." "Why not find a bill then?" He answered, "The court will not convict him and only make the county costs for nothing." After a parley of an hour the foreman and seven other Masons voted against a bill and six that were not Masons for it.

JOSIAH SHAW.

A. K. Tullis, of Tiskilwa, Ill., Explains.

MR. EDITOR:—Will you give this short artical a place in your column's by way of correcting some verry serious mistake which occur in the number of July 23, under the head of Reform News, which refers to the Lecture of the Rev L N Stratton at Tiskilwa The statement that the M E church of this place requested the conference not to send them a minister that was a mason; These are the facts Three years ago this fall I came here by request of the church; Two years ago, By a unanimos request I was returned One year ago I was returned, by a second invitation which was also unanimous I was known as a mason before I came here; I had no reasons for keeping it dark, if fact it was known here and no man thought any less of me for it.

The statement that my name appeared on masonic posters as a manager of a masonic ball is both fals and unjust, and that I left town that night is a cowardly misrepresentation I was at home (and your informent is an anti mason) the night of the only masonic ball, in this place, since I lived here; But if possible a still wors misrepresentation if made in the articl In stateing that I did report through town that Bro Stratton was not considered verry bright at school, and the inference was that he was not much of an editor or Lecturer; The statement is untrue; I did say that I was glad he was to lecture, and did chearfully read a notice in my Pulpit of his Lectures That I attended the lectures is true; and that I differed in my views from the lectures is also true.

But these differences caused me to misrepresent and prejudice the minds of the peopl against Bro Sare not the facts, I invited Bro Stratton to my house, he came and to me and my family it was quite agreeable.

All I ask and it seems to me but Just, that I and my church be truthfully represented, in the matter; and I am prepaired to meet the above here at home; And with this prayer on my lips; Lord Let thy kingdom come, and over all prevail, I close with charity to all, A K TULLIS
Pastor of M E Church in Tiskilwa Illinois.

NOTE—We have endeavored to give friend T. the full benefit of his correction in his own language and style, and he must not blame us if it is not understood. There is more to be said in the case which is best in connection. It is difficult to understand how Mr. T. could have been twice returned by "unanimous" request of his people. It might have been so on the part of a few Masons who sent the request. But that the church was unanimous, as would be inferred from the above, is doubted.

As to the Masonic ball, we believe this to be the true statement: Mr T. has preached strongly against dancing (for which his people should thank him,); as chaplain of the Tiskilwa lodge he was expected to make the prayer at the Masonic ball, or entertainment of which dancing was to be a part. He had the consistency to absent himself. Whether he left town or not is immaterial. As for the story about Bro. Stratton's wit, it is known that it was circulating about Tiskilwa, and what other individual could have known "all about Stratton and the Blanchards," but Mr. Tullis, who was with them a few weeks at college before he went to Evanston to complete his education. Some one else may have been so deceived in Bro. Stratton, until they heard him. We hope it was. The Anti-masonic brethren of Tiskilwa should be grateful for the notice of the lectures. Ministers, not Masons, often refuse. We hope they will follow up the work so well begun until the Tiskilwa lodge disbands, and its members, Mr. Tullis among them, learn to abhor its very name. There will then be no more need of lectures from Bro Stratton or for letters correcting misstatements, and every body will feel better.—ED.

News of the Week.

The City.

The Times and Staats-Zeitung daily papers have been engaged of late in a lively war with the peculiar grossness of speech they know well how to use. Hesing, proprietor of the German paper kicked a Times reporter down stairs the other day.—A large and successful picnic for the poor children of the North Side was brought about last week through the aid of a number of wealthy citizens. Others will follow soon.—— Lord Dufferin, Governer-General of Canada, paid Chicago a visit of several days, arriving in a Dominion steamer on Saturday last.—— Judge Williams has rendered a decission in the celebrated church quarrel over Rev. Mr. Cheney. Its effect is to put the bill of the complainants out of court, and to declare that Mr. Cheney was not lawfully deposed from the Episcopal ministry.——The remains of a woman were lately found in clearing away the ruins of the great fire of '71, on Kinzie street. This is probably another victim of that calamity.

The Beecher Case.

The Investigating Committee heard Mr. Beecher's defense and cross-examination two hours on Thursday last. A denial is made of all the charges brought against him and direct blackmailing laid to the charge of Tilton. The explanation of the letters is weak and generally unsatisfactory to the public. The press of the country is not changed in tone by the document. A few journals in New York think Beecher has cleared himself, but throughout the country the opposite opinion prevails. Moulton, the "mutual friend," had prepared a full statement for the committee, to be presented on Monday, the 10th, but a long consultation on Monday forenoon with Ben Butler, Tracy, Beecher's lawyer, and one or two others, led him to suppress it and substitute a brief statement presenting no facts or letters not before published. A previous interview with a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune which could not be suppressed, and a challenge from Mr. Beecher to all men to publish all they can, may yet bring out Moulton's whole document, which is now said to be in the hands of Ben. Butler.

Political.

Judge E. R. Hoar has written a letter to the electors of the Seventh Congressional District of Massachusetts declining a renomination to Congress. ——Georgetown county, South Carolina, is at present the scene of a dangerous contest between two Republican negro factions. Some fighting occurred last week.——The elections in Tennessee have generally gone Democratic. During the canvass, Senator ("Parson") Brownlow took a bitterly hostile position to the Civil Rights Bill.

Foreign.

—There is now confirmation of the report of the recognition of Spain by England, France and Germany. The announcement caused general rejoicing in the capital. A special dispatch from Berlin reports that Austria and Italy have also recognized the Republic. The London Times, in an editorial article, says England would have recognized Spain some time since, but the reluctance of France and the indifference of Germany prevented.——There was considerable excitement in Paris last week at the escape on the 9th of Marshal Bazaine from his confinement in the island of St. Marguerite. It is believed that the authorties of the island guarding him were bribed.—— The latest war reports are of trouble between Russia and China. The latter power is sending troops to the north.

Country.

One hundred and forty thousand houses in Philadelphia were searched by the police lately to find the missing boy, Charley Ross, but without success. The latest opinion from the detectives who are at work on the case is that the family are privy in some way to the abduction or secretion of the boy.—— Collisions between the whites and blacks occurred last week at Austin, Miss., and the week before at Somerville. Reports were full of horror at the number of killed and wounded, but it seems that but one or two fell in in either case. Such altercations, though now of small proportions, threaten to increase in the South.—— On Saturday an excursion train on the Trenton (N. J.) Railroad ran into a freight train and five persons were killed.

The Capitol.

A despatch to the N. Y. Tribune tells the following story of official corruption: The Attorney-General's office is not the only one against which charges of a misappropriation of public property has been made. Every other department provides carriages at the public expense, and some of them are quite as elegant and costly as the now famous landaulet. Each of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States has a room in his residence furnished by the government complete, from a library to a carpet, book-cases, chairs and sofa, with a servant who waits on him at the court and at his residence. The same course, somewhat modified, is practiced in both Houses of Congress. Senators and members have their secretaries and short-hand writers quartered on the government, and fine stationery and newspapers are supplied almost beyond limit. Workmen and messengers at the capitol are employed as house servants, and the carriages of the government are used as market wagons and private vehicles for the families of public officers. Following in the practice of the Supreme Court are members of the Cabinet, each of whom, with perhaps one exception, has a room in his private residence very handsomely furnished by the government. In many cases members and senators have in their houses furniture belonging to the United States, which they, no doubt, intend to return; and other abuses of a similar nature are on every hand. The latest abuse which Secretary Bristow has discovered in the Treasury Department is the employment by the supervisors and collectors of internal revenue of members of their families in sinecure positions at the expense of the government. The practice, it seems, has been quite general and lucrative. One revenue officer has carried the name of his wife on the rolls, paying her $1,000 a month; another has employed his daughter, eight years old, at a salary of $75 a month; and other cases are mentioned of an equally improper character. The Secretary has directed that supervisors, collectors and other officers shall not employ their relatives on behalf of the government, and that no accounts for them shall be passed, dating from Aug. 1.

CHURCH'S MUSICAL MAGAZINE is an excellent journal of its kind. Its department of musical news is full and interesting. J. Church & Co,, Cincinnati.

THE GALAXY for September has a few good pieces, chief of which is the first part of a sketch of MacMahon, President of France, and an entertaining history of events connected with the celebrated Holland House in London. Gen. Custer tells how he fights Indians and despises the peace commissioners. Several useless stories fill up the magazine. Sheldon & Co., New York.

REBEKAH, OR LADIES' DEGREE.

HISTORY OF THE DEGREE.

The degree of Rebekah was originated by Schuyler Colfax, of South Bend, Indiana, and was authorized by the Grand Lodge of the United States in September, 1851. The committee appointed by the Grand Sire to prepare it was Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana, William T. Martin, of Mississippi, and E. G. Steele, of Tennessee. The degree went into operation January 1, 1852

OBJECTS OF THE DEGREE.

Mr. Colfax, in Donaldson's Pocket Text Book, p. 410, gives the following reasons for the establishment of this degree:

"1. It will tend to increase the resources of subordinate lodges by the advance of members in the degrees. It affords an additional incentive* for brethren, and an additional argument for those allied to them, to induce them to progress upward in the order.

2. It will complete the present imperfect system in force in most of the jurisdictions by which wives' and widows' cards are now authorized.

3. It will lessen and ultimately destroy the prejudice felt against the order by many of the fairer sex in various portions of the Union; and which, undeniably, often tends to prevent accessions of members in subordinate lodges.

4. It can be made to assist Odd-fellowship in peculiar cases of brothers' sickness. In many such the kindly nursing of woman is needed far more than the assiduous and constant attendance of man: for she was formed to minister at the couch of affliction; and in the watching which our laws so strictly provide for, we only strive to compel the observance of what is, in her, instinct—the promptings of nature, the impulse of the heart."

QUALIFICATIONS FOR MEMBERSHIP IN THE LADIES' DEGREE.

"The degree of Rebekah is an honorary degree, to be conferred on such Scarlet members and their wives as may desire to receive it. · · · · And it may be conferred upon the widows of Odd-fellows who were in good standing at the time of their death, upon application therefor in open lodge—they being accompanied by other ladies who have received or are to receive the degree."—Grosh's Pocket Manual, p. 326.

Donaldson's Pocket Text Book says in a note, p. 414: "The degree of Rebekah is an honorary degree to be conferred under the regulations adopted by the Grand Lodge of the United States upon such Scarlet members and their wives as may desire to receive it; but the officers of all lodges which are in possession of the work ought to be in regular possession of the degree, upon the same principle that they are required to assume other obligations belonging to their official stations. The annual pass-word of the Ladies' Degree should be given at the outer door, and the lodge may sing any part of the odes at the time that ladies are introduced by the Conductor.

Widows (of brothers in good standing who may have deceased after the adoption of the degree, September 20, 1851), if they still remain widows, may receive the degree in the lodge of which their husbands were members, by the assent of the lodge, and providing that other ladies with their husbands are also present for the purpose of initiation in the degree.—Decisions of the G. L. of the U. S., Session of 1852."

MALE MEMBERS OF THE LADIES' LODGE.

It is the privilege of every member of the Scarlet Degree, in good standing, to have the Degree of Rebekah conferred upon him if he shall desire it, but it can only be conferred at a special meeting called for that purpose. The brother receiving it is not required to give previous notice to the Initiatory Lodge of his intention to take the degree, but, if present at such a meeting as is above described, whether it be of his own or any other lodge, he may receive the degree, on assuming the obligation attached to it.‡ · ·

In the absence of applications to have the degree conferred upon ladies, the members of a lodge can have a special meeting called for the purpose of having the degree conferred upon such of themselves as are qualified to receive it.—Instructions of Grand Sire, Grand Lodge U. S., dated January 27, 1852.

SISTERS SUFFER FOR THEIR HUSBANDS' SHORTCOMINGS.

"As the daughter's standing depends on her husband's, it is her interest (and her right) to know that he is 'free from all charges,' moral and pecuniary, that she may retain her 'good standing' and the benefits and advantages accruing to her family through his connection with the order."—Grosh's Pocket Manual, p. 227.

THE REBEKAH DEGREE NOT GENUINE ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

"No business whatever, except that of conferring, can be done in the degree of Rebekah. The preliminaries must all be settled in the subordinate lodge. We particularly make this statement, because an erroneous impression has prevailed that 'women are to be introduced to the lodges!'"—Donaldson's O. F. Pocket Text Book, p. 412.

"The simple truth is this: Woman is not entitled to and seeks not a place among us. Our institution was originally intended and framed exclusively for men, and the various modifications it has undergone have not adapted it to the other sex. They could not, with propriety, in conformity with the usages of the world, take part in our private assemblages, without exposing themselves to the censoriousness of the age."—Donaldson's O. F. Text Book, p. 416.

*None but Scarlet, or Fifth Degree Odd-fellows and their wives are entitled to this degree.

‡From this it is plain that nine-tenths of the members of a Ladies' Lodge may be men.

Same book, page 418: "It is a secret society for gentlemen only."

OPENING CEREMONY, REBEKAH DEGREE.

[Noble Grand takes his position, gives one rap, and calls upon the officers to take their stations.]

Noble Grand to the Lodge. Officers and Members: We have assembled for the purpose of transacting business in the degree of Rebekah, and in this, as in all other degrees of the order, we are enjoined to keep inviolate our secret work, and see that no unworthy person is allowed to be present at the performance of our sacred rites. Therefore, those who are not entitled to a seat with us in this degree, are kindly requested to retire to the anteroom. The Guardian will close the door, and the Warden will prove those present according to our laws and usages.

Noble Grand to Inside Guardian. Inside Guardian, what is your duty?

Answer.—To see that none but the qualified are allowed to enter, and permit all members to pass out on the order of the proper officer.

Noble Grand to Conductor. Conductor, what are the duties of your office?

A.—To conduct candidates through the mysteries of the degree, and to assist the Warden in the duties of his office.

Noble Grand to Warden. Warden, what is your duty?

A.—To see that the room is neat and in order, that members may be comfortable and spend a pleasant as well as a profitable evening whenever they meet together.

Noble Grand to Secretary. Secretary, what is your duty?

A.—To keep accurate minutes of all transactions and business of the lodge when open in this degree.

Noble Grand to Vice Grand. Vice Grand, what are the duties of your station?

A.—To officiate in my station and for the Noble Grand in his absence, and to give my assistance in the performance of the business of the lodge.

Noble Grand to Chaplain. Worthy Chaplain, what are the general duties prescribed for our members?

A.—To live peaceably with all men—to do good unto all men as we have opportunity, and especially to obey the Golden Rule: "As ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so to them."

Noble Grand to the Lodge. Such are the duties—see ye that they are duly performed.

[Calls up the lodge.]

Noble Grand to the Lodge. The members will sing the opening ode.

OPENING ODE.

Brethren of our mystic Union—
Sisters of our social Band—
Here in peaceful, pure communion,
We at FRIENDSHIP'S altar stand.

Love unfurls her banner o'er us—
TRUTH will guide us on our way—
FAITH illume the path before us—
HOPE a future bright display.

CHARITY that faileth never,
Falls to worship at her shrine,
Here we bow and pledge forever,
Labor in her cause divine.

When the clouds of sin and sadness,
Shroud in gloom the weary head,
There in peace, and joy, and gladness,
Shall the light of LOVE be shed.

Noble Grand to Chaplain. Worthy Chaplain, will you invoke the blessings of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe upon our convocation.

[Prayer by Chaplain.]

Noble Grand to Warden. Warden, you will proclaim this lodge duly opened.

Warden. By order of the Noble Grand I proclaim this lodge open in the degree of Rebekah for the transaction of any business that may be legally brought before it.

Noble Grand. Officers and members, so be it.

Members. So be it!

[Noble Grand calls down.]

INITIATION, REBEKAH DEGREE.

The lodge being regularly opened in this degree, with the officers and such brethren of the Scarlet Degree as see fit to attend, clothed in full regalia, the Warden shall examine the brethren in the pass-word of this degree, and if any brother of the Scarlet Degree present is found wanting, he shall be required to take the obligation of this degree before instructing him therein or permitting him to remain.

Upon the Inside Guardian announcing the ladies as waiting admission in the ante-room, the Noble Grand shall call the lodge up, and direct the Conductor to introduce them (after they have removed their bonnets and shawls) to the hall, entering with one rap, which is the usual alarm of this degree. After passing once around the hall, two by two, the brethren remaining standing, the Conductor shall present them to the Vice Grand, which officer shall call the brethren down.

Conductor to Vice Grand. Worthy Vice Grand, I present to you these ladies, who are desirous of obtaining the privileges and honors of a degree that will enable them more fully to cooperate in the work of our beloved order.

Vice Grand: Ladies, are you desirous to unite in this degree of Odd-fellowship with those who have devoted themselves through life to death—in sunshine and in storm—through good or evil report—to visit the sick—relieve the distressed—bury the dead—and protect and educate the orphan?

A. by Conductor—We are! [The ladies also bow assent.]

Facts and Figures.

—The basis upon which Congress figures for army appropriations is about $1,000 per man. The British army is said to cost $400 per man.

—The following items were contained in the last report of Post Master General Cresswell: During the year 302 persons were arrested for various offenses against postal laws and regulations. Of these, ninety four have been convicted, and, of course, sent for longer or shorter periods to State prisons and penitentiaries, and have thus had their characters among men ruined, and all their prospects blighted. Twenty have been acquitted, 193 are awaiting trial, and ninety-five have been discharged for want of proof sufficent to insure conviction. The number of missing letters for the past year is 6,165, of which 3,980 were unregistered, 2,185 registered. The former contained bonds, currency, etc., to the amount of $309,-123.50. The latter, $70,421.90. Thus about $400,000 were lost in letters.

—There were nine colleges in America before the Revolutionary War broke out. The first was Harvard College. The second, that of William and Mary, founded in 1692, and Virginia and Yale colleges are of the seventeenth century. Princeton College was established in 1746. Eight years after the New Jersey College was founded, and New York city took its turn by founding the King's College. A huge iron crown was placed upon it as the emblem of royalty, but this badge was subsequently removed, and the institution took the name of Columbia College. In 1775 Philadelphia procured a charter for the University of Pennsylvania. Then Rhode Island College was established, but it aftewards took the name of Nicholas Brown, and is known as Brown College. In Connecticut there lived a devoted pastor, named Willard, in the town of Hanover, and this man took it into his head to do something for the red men. He founded a school in New Hampshire, and out of that school there grew, in 1765, the institution known as Dartmouth College. There was one more founded in New Jersey, in 1770, and called the Queen's College, so named by King George, in honor of his wife; but, fifty years after the Revolution, this institution, like the King's College, changed its name, and took the citizen's name of Rutger's College.

—The Romish clergy of St. Louis are engaged in a most unministerial warfare. For some time an indebtedness of $70,000 has been hanging over the congregation of St. Alphonsus Church of that city. The people were not wealthy, and the priest set about to discover some plan by which the debt could be cancelled without oppressing the laymen. Well knowing the superstitious estimation in which masses for the future safety of their souls were held by their ignorant followers, they decided to reduce this commodity to a present value and sell it for any sum it might bring. The city was divided into districts; over 300 collectors were appointed to solicit and gather in; cards were printed for the use of the collectors bearing the promise that 200 masses should be said for each person contributing one dollar or more for the liquidation of the church debt. These promises were signed by Father Meredith, the priest of St Alphonsus, and the offer was published in the St. Louis papers. Thus far all went swimmingly. But operations were hardly commenced when Father Henry, pastor of St. Lawrence O'Toole's Church, published a protest in the Globe denouncing the scheme and warning the people not to contribute. The committee having the collection in charge followed and branded Father Henry as willful and malicious falsifier. Father Phelan, editor of the Watchman (Romish), also wrote an article denunciatory of Father Henry. Now the latter has demanded an apology from Father Phelan and has instituted suit against the committee for libel, laying his damages at $20,000.—Ex.

Temperance—Barley Raising.

It is not of the best methods of growing and marketing barley, of which we are thinking, but the question of right to raise and sell it in the general market, with the expectation that it is going into the manufacture of alcoholic drinks.

We do not deem it necessary at this day, to prove that making intoxicating drinks is a crime. The great wave of desolating ruin, like the death-plague of Egypt, has left one dead in every house and blotted out the love-lights from millions of hearts. This is a standing witness to the criminality of manufacturing and dealing in this agent of ruin.

There seems to be a strange and awful moral darkness gathered over the minds of thousands who are engaged in this horrid work. Good moral men, even professed Christians; yes, even the official membership of our churches, year after yea, are earnestly pushing on the manufacturing of lager and ale, in the raising of barley, hops and other porducts, with the full expectancy of their produce being made into intoxicating drinks.

What is the moral difference of position, between the man who is producing the material and the one who takes up the uncompleted work where the former leaves it, and puts on the finishing manipulations that realize, to both, the end sought, viz: drunk-material.

Lager and ale are the results of a process beginning with the fitting the soil for the barley-crop, continued through the sowing of seed, harvesting, threshing, marketing, malting, and brewing,—all one work, one gang of hands—the devil's husbandry— are engaged in it.

No matter how benevolent some of the members of this fraternity may be; it matters not what their professions of Christianity or even morality are; no matter what their excuses are; this work of ruin is of them, and God will hold them accountable.

One word to that professing Christian farmer. When the coming spring opens, we advise you to go out to that ten or more acres that you were going to devote to barley-raising, on your knees, ask God's direction in this matter, and then sow the barley if you dare.—The Reformer.

The Chicago Tribune reports the following remarkable case at Woodstock Ill. "A well-dressed stranger walked into one of the saloons of this place leading a little boy by the hand and called for a drink of whiskey. The little fellow burst into tears and begged his father not to drink, and the saloon-keeper, to his credit, be it said, refused him, whereupon the man jumped behind the bar and seized a bottle of the article in question. The bar-keeper attempted to take the bottle from him, and a scuffle ensued, during which the liquor was spilled, and the stranger ejected. A man of family who was present was so struck by the conduct of thr boy that he left the saloon, and made oath that he would never drink another drop.

Levington's Key to Masonry.
This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:
"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."
The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:
"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."
This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed hy many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Grcene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y,., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abducted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS. in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

PHELPS' SECRET SOCIETIES Ancient and Modern.

A NEW BOOK OF GREAT INTEREST.

This work is particularly commended to the attention of Officers of The Army and Navy, The Bench and The Clergy.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

"THE ANTIQUITY OF SECRET SOCIETIES, THE LIFE OF JULIAN, THE ELEUSINIAN MYSTERIES, THE ORIGIN OF MASONRY, WAS WASHINGTON A MASON? FILMORE'S AND WEBSTER'S DEFERENCE TO MASONRY, A BRIEF OUTLINE OF THE PROGRESS OF MASONRY IN THE UNITED STATES, THE TAMMANY RING, MASONIC BENEVOLENCE, THE USES OF MASONRY, AN ILLUSTRATION, THE CONCLUSION."

Notices of the Press.

The author traces back the origin of Masonry and its evil influences, particularly as seen and felt in our own country; the Tammany Ring, Credit Mobilier, &c. He shows the subserviency of some of our public men, such as Fillmore and Webster, to its dominating power.—United Presbyterian.

The author has presented information concerning the Old Mysteries and their antagonism to Christianity; the Masonry of Washington and his virtual secession from it; the harlotry of Masonry, English and American, in assuming charge of international politics, and treaties between England and the United States; the disgusting intervention of the lodge at the close of the French and German war; the Masonic baptisms; all these and more Gen. Phelps has given, accompanied with clear philosophical dissertations of his own.

SERMON ON MASONRY,

BY REV. W. P. M'NARY,

Pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind.

This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry.

TRACT NO. 1:

HISTORY OF MASONRY.

BY PRESIDENT J. BLANCHARD, OF WHEATON COLLEGE.

This is now published in three tracts of four pages each. Price of each, 50 cents per 100; $4 per 1000.

TRACT No. 1, PART FIRST—Shows the origin of Speculative Freemasonry, and is entiled "HISTORY OF MASONRY."

TRACT No. 1, PART SECOND—Is entitled "DESPOTIC CHARACTER OF FREEMASONRY"

TRACT No. 1, PART THIRD—Is entitled "FREEMASONRY A CHRIST-EXCLUDING RELIGION."

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 2:

MASONIC MURDER,

By REV. J, R. BAIRD, of Pleasantville, Pa., a seceding Mason who has taken 17 degrees. A 2-page tract at 25 cents per 100; $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 3:

SECRETS OF MASONRY,

BY ELI TAPLEY.

This is a 4-page Illustrated Tract, showing the signs, grips and pass-words, of the first three degrees. 50 cents per 100, or $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 4:

GRAND! GREAT GRAND!!

BY PHILO CARPENTER.

This is a 2-page tract, calling the attention of the public to the despotic and ridiculous titles of Freemasonry. Price 25 cents per 100; $2.00 per 1,000.

TRACT. NO, 5:

Extracts From Masonic Oaths and Penalties, as Sworn to by the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island.

This tract is a reprint of a tract published in 1834, and is a very weighty document. A 4-page tract at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 6:

Hon. John Quincy Adams' Letter.

Giving His and His Father's Opinion of Freemasonry (1831.);

AND

Hon. James Madison's Letter,

Giving His Opinion of Freemasonry (1832).

Both of these letters, in one 4-page tract, at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 7:

SATAN'S CABLE-TOW.

A 4-page tract. This is a careful analysis of the character of Masonic oaths, and shows them to be most blasphemous and unchristian; and the Masonic Cable Tow is clearly shown to be the Cable Tow by which Satan is leading thousands to eternal death. 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 8:

Is a 2-page double tract, "ILLUSTRATED." The first page represents a Mason proclaiming the wonderful wisdom and benevolence of the order, with an article below, entitled "Freemasonry is only 152 Years Old," and gives the time and place of its birth.

The second side is entitled, "Murder and Treason not Excepted," and shows that the Masonic order is treasonable in its constitution, and is both anti-Republican and anti-Christian. Price 25 cents per 100; $2 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 9, ILLUSTRATED:

FREEMASONRY IN THE CHURCH.

Copy of a petition for the higher degrees of Freemasonry, in which Blasphemous and Despotic Titles are enumerated and prayed for. The Copy was printed for the use of "Occidental Sovereign Consistory S. P. R. S." 32d degree—a Chicago Lodge—and was ordered by a deacon of a Christian Church who is Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge of Ill.

TRACT NO. 10:

CHARACTER AND SYMBOLS OF FREEMASONRY.

A 2-page tract, (ILLUSTRATED) by its "Grand Secretaries, Grand Lecturers, Perfect Prince Freemasons, Grand Inspector, Inquisitor Commanders, Grand High Priests," etc. The wonderful symbolical meaning of "the Cable Tow," "the Square and Compass," "the Lamb Skin, or white Apron,'' and "the Common Gavel," are given in the exact words of the highest Masonic authority. 25 cents per 100 or $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 11;

Address of Niagara County Association, New York.

TO THE PUBLIC;

Concerning the Morgan Murder, and the character of Freemasonry, as shown by this and other Masonic murders. 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 12:

JUDGE WHITNEY AND MASONRY.

This tract contains a condensed account of Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois, on charge of unmasonic conduct in bringing Samuel L. Keith the murderer of Ellen Slade, and a member of his Lodge, to justice, with Judge Whitney's subsequent renunciation of Masonry,

An 8-page tract, $1.00 per 100; $8.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 13:

DR. NATHANIEL COLVER ON MASONRY,

and

HOWARD CROSBY, D. D.,

Chancellor of the University of New York, on SECRET SOCIETIES. A double 2-page tract 25 cents per 100; $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 14:

GRAND LODGE MASONRY.

ITS RELATION TO CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

Opening address before the Monmouth Convention, by PRES. J. BLANCHARD of WHEATON COLLEGE. This is a 16-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 15:

MASONIC OATHS NULL AND VOID.

A clear and conclusive argument proving the invalidity of any oath or obligation to do evil. By REV. I. A. HART, Secretary National Christian Association. Published by special order of the Association. 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 16:

HON. SETH M. GATES ON FREEMASONRY.

PROOF THAT THE INSTITUTION THAT MURDERED MORGAN IS UNCHANGED IN CHARACTER

This is a letter to the Monmouth Convention by Hon. Seth M. Gates who was Depnty Sheriff of Genesee County, and also Secretary of the Leroy Lodge at the time of Morgan's Abduction. A 4-page tract, 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 17:

Origin, Obligations and Expenses of The Grange.

WITH A CONSTITUTION OF A FARMERS' CLUB.

This little tract ought to he put into the hands of every Farmer in the United States. Four-page tract, 50 cents per 100; $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 18:

HON. WM. H. SEWARD ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

Extracts from a Speech on Know-Nothingism in the U. S. Senate in 1855.

TRACT NO. 20:

OBJECTIONS TO MASONRY.

By A SECEDING MASON, of Cornton, Vermont.

This tract contains many strong arguments against the Lodge drawn from personal experience, observation and study of its character. A 4-page tract at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 21:

MASONIC CHASTITY.

BY EMMA A. WALLACE,

The author, by wonderfully clear illustration and argument, shows the terribly corrupt nature of Freemasonry. No true woman who reads this will ever speak with approbation of this institution A 4-page tract 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

GERMAN CYNOSURE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason

By REV. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church,

WORCESTER, MASS.

This is our first German tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

A Good Example.

Let no one fail to read the letter from a naged brother in "Our Mail," who is making a good use of "the Lord's fund." There should be more consecration of the pocket in this work. Christians seldom now-a-days give enough to refresh their Christian life. That life is strong in proportion as we give—give first ourselves to Christ and his church, and then keep daily renewing the offering. If we give ourselves, we give our property and its increase. Let this be a question to be prayerfully pondered: Am I wholly consecrated?

In spending funds as we may prayerfully set apart for Christian enterprises do not fail to consider the reform against the lodge. It is yet weak and seems to accomplish little, but it is God's truth and he will vindicate it. You can help carry it on by direct contributions to sustain the lecture work, or you may be your own agent in circulating books, papers and tracts. At least try to do something and you will have a present and much more a future and glorious reward.

There is no explanation needed to show that so useful a work as is described in the letter from southwestern Missouri may be greatly forwarded by a judicious circulation of good tracts and books, explain the character and practice of secret societies. Such reading matter may be thought over at leisure when the warmth of discussion has passed off, and while yet the mind is yet interested and inquiring. It is a great victory for the truth, when a church is redeemed from the ensnaring associations of secrecy; one worthy the most faithful, patient and persevering effort. And this work should be undertaken in the name of the Lord and in his strength, in every church which is not wholly separate from this sin. Readers of the Cynosure, look around! Is there not work waiting for you?

TO ALL SECEDING MASONS.—The National Christian Association at its late meeting in Syracuse, N. Y., appointed to the Recording Secretary the duty of securing the names of all the seceding Masons of the country with their endorsement of Bernard's Revelation. In accordance with this vote all seceding Masons are requested to send their names and the endorsement as stated; and they are desired in order to make the statement more complete to send also their post-office address, the number of degrees taken, number of years connected with the lodge, the date of their leaving it, and where residing when they joined. These facts will be preserved with the records of the National Association, and their value in the future progress of the reform will be undoubtedly great.

Friends of the reform everywhere are earnestly desired to co-operate in extending this notice and securing the desired information, which should be sent to

H. L. KELLOGG,
Recording Secretary N. C. A.,

Topics of the Time.

THE BEECHER SCANDAL.—The developments of the week in this vile business are chiefly the publication of Moulton's statement, which is generally believed to weaken Beecher's case. Its importance rests on the fact of the mediatorial position of its author, the confidence placed in him by both parties, and its dispassionate character, being prepared before Mr. Beecher's statement was published. Moulton is a member of the firm of Woodruff and Robinson, the heaviest dealers in salt and salt fish in the country. He is a friend of Tilton from boyhood, and has been acquainted with Beecher four or five years, having attended Plymouth Church part of that time. He is not, however, a member nor a Christian, but is a profane, shrewd man of the world. In his letters he is called by Mr. Beecher "my dear Frank," and "the friend whom God has sent me," etc. His statement was prepared for the committee, but suddenly suppressed and a very brief paper with a few letters submitted instead. Mr. Beecher's challenge to all men for evidence brought the first paper to light on Friday last. It contains the direct assertion that both Mrs. Tilton and Beecher confessed their guilt, and explains letters and transactions in that light. This he affirms is the only and acknowledged basis of all the negotiations. His statement, therefore, stands over against Beecher's, and, though discredited by the latter's friends, the regard shown him by Mr. Beecher in letters written hardly a month ago greatly strengthen the evidence. Both Tilton and Moulton are preparing replies to Beecher's charge of black-mail for the public. Tilton has entered suit against Beecher for $100,000, and suits for libel against several New York journals are said to be in preparation. The Investigating committee were to have reported on Friday evening, but the publication of Moulton's statement caused a postponement for a week. It is understood that they will exhonorate Beecher of the crime of adultery, and there is a report that two members, Sage and S. V. White, will not sign it. The evidence is probably now all before the public, which after all will be the final earthly tribunal.

Mr. Beecher's statement was apparently candid and truthful, but the explanation of his letters weak and unsatisfactory; his lawyers have dallied and petifogged from the beginning; and the testimony against him is uniform. The fact of his guilt seems to be the only satisfactory explanation of the whole vile affair.

LIBERAL THEOLOGY.—The standing of Unitarianism in this country in comparison with other denominations is noticeable for nothing probably but a retrograde. Dr. Bellows, of New York, for a long time the Nestor of the denomination, has dropped out of active service in its rank, and no man seems willing to undertake the management of his church in the metropolitan city. At the meeting of the American Unitarian Association lately in Boston, Freeman Clarke called attention to the fact that out of forty cities, one-half did not contain a single Unitarian society; and out of New England these were very weak. If this is the actual condition of the Unitarian church, the fact is explanable. This denomination since it broke off from the old churches of New England, has, not unreasonably, been considered heretical. Its doctrines have sheltered the subtlest and most dangerous infidelity. Rev. Mr. Schermerhorn, the former pastor of Unity Church, Boston, describes it as that body "composed of Universalists, Unitarians, Orthodox, Free Religionists, Spiritualists and Atheists, with a large percentage of Nothingists. The evident decline of the denomination, which is said to have its parallel in England, must be caused by the agressive influence of true spiritual poper in the churches called orthodox, or the latter must have become so conformed to Unitarian practices that the masses recognize little or no difference, and choose those churches whose names and history still have some attractive power. No one who has carefully noted the drift of the churches for the past ten years can hesitate at the reason. Many pulpits in Massachusetts have been open to the preachers of Unitarianism. Clarke and Bellows and Collyer have popularized the humanitarianism of their system, while Beecher, Swing, Fowler and a score of popular preachers of opposite professions have met them more than half way. "Liberalism," falsely so-called, is fast taking the place in Christian thought and discussion which Bible charity should fill, and the distinctions, once existing between those who "love the world" and those "born of God," are losing their sharpness and outline. The great shock some well-meaning people are experiencing in the Brooklyn scandal will do good if it brings a calm and Scriptural examination into the causes that have for years been operating to produce that vile eruption. The churches everywhere need to be called back to their "first love," to purge out the Balaam doctrines, before the swift coming of the Son of God.

Build Well the State.

BY GEORGE W. BUNGAY,

Oh, builders of the State,
Be brave and wise and great.
Make equal rights for all—the base,
Mortice the granite deep,
True to the plummet keep,
Build above clique, or caste, or race.

Wall out the trust in creeds,
Wall in the faith in deeds,
Wall out the traitor's corner-stone,
Wall in the church and school,
Wall out the tyrant's rule,
Wall in fair Freedom on her throne.

Oh, men in Washington,
Build in the rock and on.
Build well—build for all future time.
Let all the nations see
Justice and Liberty
Clasp hands above a task sublime.

The Dumb Devil.

FROM A DISCOURSE BEFORE THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH, BETHLEHEM, CONN., BY X. A. WELTON, PASTOR, A RENOUNCING MASON.

There is no intimation in Scripture that the devil now possesses men's bodies in the same manner he did when Christ was on earth; but that his dominion over men's minds still continues, is too evident to require proof. And this power is gained through the yielding up of the human will. When men consent to have the organs of speech fettered, so that they cannot tell the whole truth, but only a part of it, or, when they consent to hide some truth from the church and the world, are they not, in a measure, ruled by a dumb spirit?

Says old Bishop Hall: "Such a dumb devil as our Saviour found tyrannizing over the bodies of possessed men, is in the pulpit when the prophets of God smother or halve or adulterate the message of their Master. When we hold back the truth which we should speak, for the information of our brethren, we yield to this dumb devil." And we might add that such a dumb devil do men invite into their hearts, whenever they bind themselves by unholy bonds not to speak the truth concerning any matter whatever, or to keep other people's secrets without knowing what those secrets will be; for such a vow, if kept, must render him that is bound thereby, incapable of telling the whole truth, whenever God's ministers, of religion or of justice, have a right to know it. Such a man's tongue is partially paralyzed; not from causes beyond his control, but through a voluntary yielding up of his own will and conscience. Men whose lips are sealed by the obligations of secretism are perhaps the truest representatives among us in this age and people, of those who, in our Saviour's day, were possessed with a dumb devil, and their only hope of deliverance is the same incarnate Son of God.

The oaths and obligations administered in secret assemblies, are all of the same kind; however much they may differ in degree, all hinder, more or less, the progress of the truth as it is in Jesus. Secretism is a dumb spirit, whose influence is so wide-spread and powerful that it has very nearly muzzled both press and pulpit; and, of all the secret fraternities, the best known and most respectable, is the Masonic; which is called the mother of all the other secret societies. I shall therefore speak of it as the representative of them all, using the word "secretism" as synonymous with "Freemasonry." By comparing secretism to the dumb devil spoken of in the text, I have broadly insinuated that the "genius of Masonry," so-called, is an evil genius, or spirit, opposing and obstructing the work of Jesus Christ in men's salvation. I shall endeavor to make good this charge, by proving that the giving and taking of Masonic obligations is the very process of binding the organs of speech and the placing of them, to some extent, under the control of a devil that is dumb. If the word "devil" seem too strong, the Freemasons in their temples sing hymns of praise to a personification which they call the "Genius of Masonry." A "genius" is a spirit, and "Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is a devil; and, I may add, that all religious worship that is not offered in the name and through the merits and intercession of Jesus Christ, is, in the Scriptures, called the worship of devils. (Compare 1. Cor. x. 20. with Rev. ix. 20; Lev. xvii. 1. Deut. xxxii. 17; Ps. cvi. 37.)

The gift of speech is from God, and to be used for his glory, and man's good; and it is the standing boast of every freeman that "freedom of speech is one of the dearest of all God-given rights. No man has a right to assume an obligation that curtails or abridges this freedom. And besides the restraint is all in the wrong direction. Masonic oaths hinder men from telling the truth but do not hinder them from telling what is not true, except of and to Masons. The Mason is actually bound to decieve all the rest of the world, in regard to Masonry. But what are the obligations? I reply. The essence of the oaths of the first three degrees in Freemasonry is, in brief, to obey the power of the lodge, and to succor and defend each other as members of that body. Now, if we should admit, for the sake of argument, that there is nothing wrong in the matter or substance of these obligations, still it can be shown that the manner of them is wrong, and this I shall proceed to do.

1. All oaths administered in secret assemblies are profane: (a) because the men who give them are not legally qualified to administer oaths—i. e., not authorized by the civil government; (b) and, because the oaths themselves are not required by church or state. They are the taking of God's name in vain, to no purpose, or unnecessarily; and are therefore a violation of the third commandment of the Decalogue,—the moral law that binds all Christian men.

2. They are that "vain and rash swearing" which is the subject of our 39th article of religion. (See also Art. 25th M. E. church.) They are "rash" as well as "vain," because they are of the same nature of that oath of King Herod, to give a wicked woman "whatsoever she should ask." How did Herod know she would ask him to commit murder? And how does the "Entered Apprentice know, when he swears to keep undefined secrets, that he will not sometime be required to conceal crime? If these oaths bound men to do good only and not to do evil, they would still be vain and therefore profane. They are "rash" also, because they do not limit or define the duties of those whom they bind. We have no right, perhaps, to suppose—at least Christian charity does not require us to suppose—that Masons intend, when taking these oaths, to put upon them the worst construction they will bear; but it is certain that they will bear an evil construction, quite as clearly as a good one. Few men we may believe, would assume them at all, if they were not told beforehand that they would not conflict with their duty to God or their country. But every man who has taken the obligations of the first three degrees in Masonry has sworn under penalty of death, to obey all signs and summons, from the lodge, or by the hand of a brother; to apprise a brother of all approaching danger, when in his power; to go on a brother's errand, within a limited distance; and to keep his secrets, (when given in charge as such,) murder and treason excepted. There are some things he swears not to do; but I have given the positive part of these obligations. Now it is plain that to help a man to escape the penalty due to crime, would be to obstruct the administration of those who are called the "ministers of God," and to keep the secrets of a guilty brother might be to refuse to testify against him in a court of justice. To go on his errand, (two or three miles) might be to go on a wicked errand to help him to do evil; and to apprise him of approaching danger, might prevent his arrest and trial for an infamous crime,—even murder or treason,—for these are not positively excepted. The pledge is not limited.

I know how good men would construe their oaths in such cases; but I do not know how far wicked men apply them in the service of Satan. The most harmless of these obligations will admit of an evil interpretation, and may be used as an engine of wickedness. But when one is made to swear to "keep a brother Master Mason's secrets, murder and treason excepted," "and these left to his own election or option," there can be no doubt of the intention of the framers of this oath. . . .

The least objectionable of these obligations is so framed that it makes no distinction between right and wrong, between virtue and vice; but the last named, demands the commission of sin, the violation of the law of God. The spirit of any and every body, or corporate institution, is to be looked for in its obligations. I have now shown that the Masonic obligations are positively evil; the spirit of Masonry is therefore an evil spirit; the "Genius of Masonry" is an evil genius,—it is a deaf, a dumb, and a blind devil. And the matter of this discourse is of vital importance, because it relates to the grand distinction that the Saviour himself makes between those who serve him, and those who serve him not. If a man will not be a Christian, let him be a Mason; but if he be a Christian he "must renounce the devil and all his works." He should put no bond but that of heaven upon his liberty of speech; and when set free from the bondage of the devil let him go and tell what great things the Lord hath done for him. But, whether Christians or not, my hearers, do you not see that when a free man binds himself to keep undefined and unlimited secrets, or to obey a power whose constitution and limitations he knows nothing about; he has yielded up his manhood and become a bond servant or slave? May God preserve or deliver you from such a snare as this, and from every other device of the enemy of souls, for Christ's sake! . . . .

The testimony I have now laid before you against the evil spirit of "secretism," I have given on the authority of an embassador of Christ; in God's own house and in his presence. It is your duty to recieve it as by his authority. But it is you precious privilege, and probably also your duty, to verify this testimony by the study of the Scriptures, and all other books within your reach, that contain evidence for and against secret societies. Nearly fifty years ago a convention of a hundred Freemasons published to the world what were commonly called the secrets of the institution. Their work has been often endorsed as true. Examinations of Masons under oath by committees of the legislatures of several States verified these revelations, as far as the first three degrees. All these records are accessible to the searcher after truth. All publications of this sort may be tested by the ordinary rules of criticism. They may be shown as reliable or unreliable by the same process we would employ in regard to any other book. You have a right to weigh all such testimony. You ought to do it if you are not already confident that it is true. But you must not be deceived by those advocates of "the mysteries," who tell you it is impossible for any one to know what Masonry is, unless he has been in the lodge; and that if he has been in the lodge it is thenceforth impossible for him to tell the truth about Masonry. This bold and unscrupulous assertion has, no doubt, done much to deceive the public; but as it proves too much, it proves nothing; for, as when the ancient poet of Crete branded all Cretans as liars, he left the question of his own veracity forever doubtful; so if it is impossible for an initiated Mason ever to tell the truth about Masonry, then what do these advocates, but confess their own untruthfulness? And if they are really bound to conceal the reality of what is hidden in the lodge, how can they do this unless they either keep silence or falsify. They certainly do not keep silence. You will see, from these facts, that Masons cannot defend their loved mysteries without falling by their own sword.

But, on the other hand, the seceder from the lodge is the most reliable of all witnesses, because he testifies against his own worldly interest,—he bears witnesses against himself,—publishes his own shame. No man will be likely to do this except from a sense of duty; for how can he expect any earthly reward or advantage in the doing of what he knows will bring upon himself the hatred of all the evil-disposed members of a powerful fraternity?

Once more. Do not allow yourselves to be deceived by the presence of good men (so-called) in the Masonic ranks. "How can an institution be essentially evil," they ask, "which is patronized by so many great and good men from all ranks of society?" I have shown that the essence of Masonry is in its obligations, as much so as the essence of Christianity is in the laws of God which every Christian solemnly swears to obey. If good men adopt bad principles, their individual uprightness, honesty, or piety, will not sanctify those principles. Men are sometimes better than their principles, when their characters were formed before they adopted those principles. No man can be a Freemason till he is twenty-one years of age; and many are not till they are much older. But it is for those good men themselves, and not for me, to reconcile their Masonic oaths with their civil, or Christian, or ministerial obligations. Yet we may say, in passing, that this, the strongest argument put forth by the lodge against adverse criticism, also proves too much, and, therefore, proves nothing. For, if the institution be good because some of its members are good, then by the same rule it is a bad institution because some of its members are bad. The one inference is as logical as the other. No doubt the good Christian men that are in the lodge are the salt that preserves it from utter corruption. But these are stolen jewels,—the livery of heaven that the dumb devil puts on. They are the lamb-skin that hides the wolf.

But let me ask, are you or I a competent judge of who is or who is not a good man? The Bible definition is, one "full of the Holy Ghost and of faith." We cannot presume to be infallible judges of men's characters or motives; but we may, and can, and ought to judge of the character of every institution that professes to make men wiser or better. We are exhorted by that St. John to whom the lodges are dedicated, to try all such spirits whether they are of God. We have tried the spirit of Masonry and found that it is not of God.

It is enough for me to know that every one of its secret oaths are forbidden by God's law, and the testimony of Jesus. It ought to be enough for every free-born American to know that if he bind himself by an oath of secrecy, he renounces his liberty of speech, and just so far impairs his manhood; and, however much he may vaunt his freedom, he is really a slave. I wish I could say he is nothing worse than the slave of men. I wish I could honestly believe he is not the bond-servant of a dumb devil! What if he has not given up all his liberty! Why should he give up any part of it? If he is a good man, would he not be a better man still if he were not thus "unequally quoked with unbelievers?"—if his tongue were altogether free, so that he might tell the whole truth, and at all times?

People now are filled with wonder when they see a man actually freed from the spirit of dumbness—delivered from a bond which they are told cannot be broken. But they should remember that even "this kind" may "come forth by prayer and fasting." Jesus Christ is, even now, both able and willing to deliver every slave of Satan, whatever form the bondage may have assumed. Come to him, then, and ask him to pardon, cleanse and save you. And if any of you have a friend near and dear who is so hopelessly bound that he cannot come—cannot even cry, "Lord, save me,"—bring him—not as did the friends of him that was bodily possessed of a devil that was dumb, for Christ is not physically present on earth—but bring them in the arms of earnest, importunate, interceesing prayer. Ask the ministers of Christ and the whole church to plead for him before the throne of Him that is mighty to save. It may be the Lord will hear your prayers and grant to all such a happy deliverance, and enable them to sing with the holy David, "Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers; the snare is broken and we are delivered."

Convention Correspondence.

LETTER FROM REV. D. MCALLISTER.

245 West 49th St., New York, May 27, 1874.

DEAR BRO. STODDARD:—Other duties and engagements prevent me from complying with your request. If the way were open both duty and inclination would draw me to the Convention at Syracuse. The movement in the interest of which the Convention is to meet is one of the most important of our land and day. It is the cause of light against the works of darkness; of simple and earnest manhood against puerile trickery and display; of liberty and patriotism against bondage and social wrong; of Christ's church against a rival and supplanter. One consideration is sufficient to show the essential hostility of secret brotherhoods to the church of Christ. That divine society seeks to gather within its benificent embrace all members of our race, that all alike may share in the fullness of her blessings. So with every subsidiary organization worthy of support. On the contrary, the very spirit of secret brotherhoods is their exclusiveness. They are possible only when a part of the human family is separated and distinguished from the rest. They profess to confer blessings, like the church o Christ, but the actual communication of the boasted favors and privileges to all men and women and children, in the spirit of the Gospel, would utterly obliterate secret associations from the earth. Professing to do what would be necessarily suicidal to themselves, their whole life is a falsehood. Unlike the Sabbath and every other divine institution, they are not made for man, but for themselves. Man is of importance to them only as they can use him for their purposes. They are in principle the final end of their own existence. Hence they cannot, as they never in fact do, carry out their professions of beneficence toward suffering humanity. Whatever incidental good they may do they sacrifice, by the law of their being, the welfare of men in every true and universal relation in the family, the state and the church, to their selfish and narrow interests.

May the Convention hasten their extirpation.

Truly yours, D. MCALLISTER.

Weapons of the Papacy—Is the Dagger one of Them?

Jesuit history is strangely mixed up with gunpowder plots, conspiracies and assassinations. The code of Roman casuistry is very indulgent to the knights of the dagger when they use it in behalf of the church. In 1570, when Knox had become enfeebled with age, and the Presbyterian church of Scotland, resolute, but beset with foes, was making strong its position by the aid and counsels of "The good Regent" Murray, and when every attempt by open hostility to overthrow the regent's power had failed, the nephew of the Archbishop of St. Andrews, whose life the regent had spared, sent a musket-ball through his body, and while his victim was sinking in his death agony, fled to the Archbishop, where he was received, it is said, "with great applause by the base instigator of his crime." But though Murray fell, the cause of the Gospel did not perish with him. Scotland suffered, and the church suffered, but in 1572, Andrew Melville came back from Geneva to hold aloft the banner which could not perish by the shot of the assassin.

On the 15th of March, 1582, William, of Orange, on whose wisdom and valor the fate of the Dutch Republic had often depended, and who stood like a barrier in the way of the restoration of the inquisition and the Spanish power, was leaving his dining-room on his way to his private chamber, when a young man stepped up to him on pretense of presenting a petition. While in the act of reading the paper handed to him, the treacherous suppliant discharged a pistol at his head. The ball struck under his left ear, and passed out at the right cheek. As he tottered and fell, the assassin drew a poignard to add suicide to his crime. He was arrested in the act, and the papers found on him revealed the instigators of the crime. Besides the 20,000 ducats promised by Philip II. to the perpetrator of the deed, it was found that he had been urged forward by a Dominican monk, too great a coward to be himself the murderer. He had duly heard mass and received the sacrament before making the attempt, and in his pocket was found a catechism of the Jesuits and tablets of prayers, one of which, addressed to the Angel Gabriel, implored his intercession with God and the Virgin to aid him in his attempt. Two of his accomplices confessed their complicity, and all were executed. It is significant that some years after, the Jesuits solemnly gathered the remains of the three pretended martyrs, and exposed them as relics for holy veneration.

The Prince of Orange recovered from what threatened to be a fatal wound, but within little more than a year the attempt upon his life was renewed. The second assassin, Bathasar Gerard, seeking a similar opportunity with the first, was more successful. He lodged three balls in the Prince's body, and this time the deed was accomplished. The greatest statesman of his time, beloved of a whole people, perished, that Rome and Spain over his corpse might pass on to crush the liberties of the States of Holland.

Five years later, 1589, Henry III. of France, who, to resist Spain and the League, had united himself with Henry of Navarre, fell by the stroke of the assassin Jacques Clement. This man was himself a monk, and another monk had purchased for him the knife that was to be used upon the occasion, and which was consecrated with considerable ceremony. The Jesuits took interest in the matter. Clement was often with them, and some of them accompanied him on his way. A Dominican, who gives the details of Clement's execution, adds "that his soul did not fail to ascend to heaven with the blessed." As to the murdered king, he adds, "I pray God that the same may befall all those who are against the Catholic religion, and who now unlawfully besiege us.

Five years later, in 1594, an attempt was made upon the life of Henry IV., then endeavoring to vindicate his title to the throne of France. His would be assassin, Jean Chatel, aimed his blow at the throat of the King, but as the latter stooped, he received the blow in his mouth. Chatel had studied with the Jesuits, and alarmed by conscience for his depravities, sought to accomplish a work that would expiate his crimes. It is not surprising to read that it was with difficulty that the people were restrained from taking vengence on the Jesuits.

Fourteen years later the dagger of Ravaillac accomplished the fatal deed to which Chatel had aspired, and though he denied having accomplices, he found eulogists and others who envied the distinction he had acquired. In the courts of law and at meetings in the market place the Jesuits were believed to have prompted the assassin.

Here we pause in that record suggested by the recent attempt to revive what we might have fancied was one of the lost arts—the assassination of Princes. In each instance the criminal deed took place at a critical as well as opportune moment. The death of Henry IV., paralyzed the energies of the Protestant States of Europe, who looked to him as their military head. Had he lived, there would probably have been no "Thirty years' war" to disgrace the civilization and humanity of the seventeenth century, and by its horrors to inspire the protest which found expression through Grotius' pen. But a necessity that can scarce be said to have existed since his death, demands that Rome should exhaust every resource in order to arrest the course of German legislation. The spirit therefore that was incarnate in Gerard, Clement, Chatel, Ravaillac, and so many others, reappears at the very moment when it is of the highest importance to Rome that Bismarck should be out of the way. This will scarcely be accounted an accident. If it should turn out that the assailant of Bismarck is a Jesuit, or a tool of the Jesuits, it would occasion no surprise, but be accepted as new evidence that the Roman church and Jesuits of the sixteenth century are the proper precursors of those of the nineteenth.

Altogether this record of princely assassinations is a sore matter for Rome to handle. It has an ugly look. That twice the Prince of Orange and Henry IV. were assaulted before the fatal issue was reached, suggests to-day a repetition of the attempt that has just been made to justify the glowing vaticinations of the Pope by means of the dagger. But it is late in the day to put on the old armor, and fight with the old weapons. There are blows to give as well as to take, and Bismarck will not be conciliated by the failure that spared his life.—New York Evangelist.

Selfishness Destructive of Free Government.

[Extract from the annual address before the American Home Missionary Society by Dr. T. M. Post.]

Thus Christ invests society with a law strong and indestructible, and which is, at the same time, a garment of life. With this order only, have our American liberties been able thus far to stand the wear of time, and the shock of political commotion and civil war. Remove this order, and they are certain to perish. No genius, no riches, nor brilliancy of civilization, no wisdom of constitutions, nor strength of armies, can save us. Christ alone, by new creating human souls, rejuvenates society. He alone gives to nations immortal youth; without him as new creator and restorer, we go down as the Old World went down, to death; it had no second birth, no cure for decay.

No scheme of society or polity grounded on mere selfishness, can permanently endure. Adjust your constitutions with checks and balances never so nicely, the machinery worked by the mainspring of selfishness will ultimately clash, and, at last, run down. No governmental mechanism man has ever devised is perpetually self-acting and self-conservative. It has to be wrought somewhere, ultimately, by human spontaneity, by the wills of men; and if these wills are merely selfish, it will be wrought ultimately to corruption, collision and decay.

But Christ opens a life fountain of unselfish action in the bosom of nations. He baptizes men into a solemn covenant of self-devotion and self-sacrifice for the good of others. Hence is bred a true unselfish public spirit, a pure philanthropy, a genuine patriotism and the heroism of love. The church is an association of such men, in such a covenant; so that if nations are not all Christianized, a class at least of the self-devoted is consecrated within them, and thereby a true public spirit may be created, by which alone nations may perpetually live.

The order of despotism may susbist by the self-love of the despot, who is himself the State; "but to be free," as De Tocqueville profoundly observes, "nations must believe." So if the Republic is to live, to live in its liberty and live in its order, it must believe.

No man will properly develop as a Christian who lives in a state of quarrel. In emnity against God, he is, of course, not a Christian at all; but reconciled to him, he must remain a dwarf, unless he secures peace with those around him. Fighting the brethren, fighting angrily in behalf of reform, contending with bitter words and hard strife for even the best of doctrines, he will stunt the growth of a divine life within him. Even fighting against sin is not to be done in a quarrelsome way, but in a spirit of honoring God while abhorring the sin and pitying the sinner. We are to conduct a warfare, but our fight is to be a "good" one, which means that it is to be directed against wrong and in favor of right, but also that it is to be waged so that in the darkest day of defeat we may be able to say, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."—United Presbyterian.

To All Indianians.

LIGONIER, Ind.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Not quite a year has passed since we organized a State Association for the purpose of bringing to bear a united effort against the hydra-head of secretism as it exists in our State and nation. Our first annual meeting will be held soon, and we desire the co-operation of every reader of the Cynosure, and as many more as we can get, to make this meeting a success.

What is desired of you is, that you call a church or neighborhood meeting at once, and see to having one or more delegates elected to attend the State meeting, and a way provided for them to attend it. If there is not sufficient interest in your community to warrant you in calling a meeting, then come yourself, if at all practicable.

Besides this, in order to successfully prosecute its work, the State Association

NEEDS FUNDS.

Can you not secure a small amount and send to Peter Rich, Westfield, Hamilton county, Ind? Send twenty-five cents, fifty cents, or one or more dollars, and get as many more to contribute as you can. Consider this an appeal to yourself and attend to it immediately, lest it be neglected or forgotten. In all probability, the meeting will be at Xenia, Miamia Co., about the 1st of October. Let us work, brethren, and look to God for a blessed time.

Yours sincerely,
JOHN T. KIGGINS,
State Agent.

Reform News.

—The General Agent returned to Chicago last week after an absence of between three and four months. He returned this week to Indiana and Ohio to fill appointments, one of them being at Silver Lake, Ind.

—Brethren Barlow and Kiggins speak again this week. Be sure to read their letters. Elder Barlow's communication came so near to the time of closing our colums that it is crowded from this page of news to the editorial pages.

—Philo Elzea has originated a new feature to accompany his lectures—a series of paintings representeng the Masonic initiation. He begins a serics of meetings at two or three points in DuPage county in this State.

A Trip over the Prairies of the "Great West."—Our Reform Progressing in a Goodly Land.

ALVA, Kansas, July 25, 1874.

In these days of steam and lightning one can scarcely realize the vastness of the territory through which he passes in a few hours, much less have any correct conceptions of its various resources. Stopping occasionly, taking a view of different localities, measuring, mentally, the extent of the resources of each, and comparing the whole with the probable character of what has been passed over so rapidly, assists greatly in gaining an approxmiately correct knowledge of this great country of ours. I reached Morning Sun in Louisa Co., Iowa, on the 5th of June where arrangements had been made for me to speak. I found Bro. S. Y. Orr alive to the interests of the cause, and full of faith in the ultimate triumph of truth. He is doing good work for the Cynosure. (Reader, what are you doing in this direction?) I spoke twice here, on Saturday and Monday evenings.

Early on Tuesday morning I received a telegram from Brother Woodring, of Waverly, the county seat of Bremer Co., in the north-east part of the State, requesting me to visit that place, which I did, arriving there on Wednesday afternoon. Arrangements for lectures were made at once, and as Thursday was "circus day" an excellent opportunity was presented, (and right well improved), to publish the meetings. Bro. P. Woodring has given you a report of the meetings, and it only remains for me to say, that I have seldom labored for a more liberal and earnest people than the Anti-masons of Waverly and vicinity; nor have I ever addressed more attentive audiences through a series of meetings than here. True, the Masons attempted a game of "bluff," on the first evening as I entered the hall, by starting a mock applause, stamping and clapping vigorously as if bringing some poor blind candidate to light. But it was soon made to rebound upon them with double force. All in all, God gave us a gracious victory here. Of the country I will say, that for natural beauty of scenery, fertility of soil, and the advantages common to Christian civilization, it is seldom surpassed.

Taking the train here, I came to Jefferson, the county-seat of Greene Co., situated on the great Chicago and North-western railroad, about one hundred miles east of Council Bluffs. I passed through Waterloo, a very fine, clean little city, on the Cedar river, and Ft. Dodge, a very delapidated old city (in appearance) on the Des Moines. Here I found John and Wesley Hall working like "good fellows"—which they are—to keep the dear people cool; for, be it remembered, it was "circus day" again, and hundreds of people, who, on such a sultry day as this was, could by no means have been prevailed upon to go to meeting or Sunday-school, had come from miles away "to see the show,"—the more pious ones having come expressly "to see the animals." Well, these brethren were engaged in allaying the thirst and fever of the dusty, sweating multitude who crowded their lemonade and ice cream rooms. Bro. Wesley Hall has reported our meetings here, which certainly were a success. But one thing remains for me to say to the

FRIENDS IN IOWA.

You doubtless read, with joy, of the public renunciation of Rev. S. Ranks, of the M. E. church at Jefferson. Bro. Ranks is a man of more than ordinary mind, of good education and nearly thirty years experience in the ministry of the Methodist church, and of sixteen years experience as a Master Mason. Add to this that he is a good speaker, and has thoroughly examined the rudimentary teaching of Masonry as compared with the Gospel, and you will find in him a valuable acquisition to the working force of Anti-masonry in Iowa. If you desire lectures write to Rev. S. Ranks, Jefferson, Greene Co., Iowa, and secure the services of this brother who, as a seceding Mason knows personally what the vile system is.

Having finished my lectures at Jefferson, I next bent my way to Highland, Doniphan county, Kansas, passing through Council Bluffs, Iowa, and St. Joseph, Missouri. The scenery about Council Bluffs is very impressive, though not beautiful. The city lies nestling among the bold bluffs, and stretches out upon the bottom lands of the Missouri river, on the opposite side of which, in full view, lies the metropolis of Nebraska, Omaha.

Highland lies about four miles west of Highland Station, on the Atchison and Nebraska road, and is "beautiful for situation." Brother Alvin Acker resides about four miles south-west of town, and had made arrangements to have me taken out to his place. I found Bro. Acker busily engaged in harvesting his wheat, of which he had about sixty acres, that would yield an average of twenty bushels per acre, or an aggregate of 1,200 bushels. Now this will bring him at least $12,00, less the expense of raising, harvesting and threshing it,—say $200,—leaving him as profits one thousand dollars. Then he has a good corn crop, and hogs and cattle besides. Well, here is the point I wish you to notice: This brother came here from Flat Rock, Ohio, five years ago, and bought a quarter-section of land which, at that time, had never had a furrow turned upon it—"raw prairie"—without a house upon it, and now he has it all in a tillable condition, with a good house upon it, and is making money rapidly. He sold forty acres of land of a doubtful quality in Ohio, and now owns a large farm, pleasantly situated in an exceedingly healthful region of country. Moral: "Go thou and do likewise."

"But, say you, how about the drouth? Is not Kansas apt to suffer from drouth?" No more so than many other parts of the country. I was told by many of the "old settlers," who have been in Kansas for many years, that this is the dryest summer they have had since "sixty-one;" and yet I never saw a greater amount of good wheat and oats, in proportion to the amount of land farmed, than I have seen in the different parts of Kansas through which I passed. Corn has been somewhat injured by the drouth, but not so much as it has in northern Indiana. But, pardon this digression and I will "resume the thread of my narrative."

I stayed at the residence of Bro. A. till Sabbath and rested, having circulated handbills publishing a meeting in the Congregational church on Sunday eve. Owing to a dedication meeting in the M. E. church, our audience was not large. I lectured on Monday and Tuesday evenings to respectable audiences, though I had not the liberty to speak I could have desired. Brother Zabriski, a U. B. minister, was with us on Tuesday evening, and proved his loyalty to the principles of the church by aiding in the meeting fearlessly. The meetings were not such as could have been wished for,—so I felt,—but

"Above our broken aims and plans,
God lays with wiser hands than man's
The corner-stone of Liberty."

And then, as now, I felt in my heart what Wordsworth so beautifully expresses, that—

"Nought shall prevail against us, or disturb our cheerful faith, that all which we behold is full of blessings."

On Wednesday I rested again at Bro. Ackers, where I was made to feel at home, by himself and his kind family, and on Thursday morning before starting Bro. A— gave me twenty dollars, for my poor services, of which I felt unworthy, but thanked the Lord and Bro. Acker for it, as I needed it very much. I have been very much pained at the contrast between the liberality of this brother (and a few others like him) and the manifest stinginess of many others. I have in my mind several Anti-masons who are possessed of vastly more means than this brother who have joined in sending for a lecturer, to spend his time away from his family, and his money on the railroads, and then sending him away without even paying his expenses. I know of one instance in which a lecturer (and one of the ablest in the field, too), paid out eight dollars to get to and from a wealthy church to speak in defense of its principles, and all he received in return was a "nickle!" One of the wealthy members of this church approaching him after a meeting said: "Well, friend S—, I believe I have a "five-striker, for thee." Others who are able, often give fifty cents, or one dollar, thinking they are doing pretty well. They forget that the lecture has given his time, and sacrificed the society of family and friends, being absent from home the greater part of his time, to advance a cause in which he is no more interested than they should be,—a common cause. Sometimes when I am pressed for funds, and my family are living on "half rations," I think such detestable stinginess is as bad as Freemasonry itself, and have half a mind to announce myself ready to lecture on but then, I fear my audiences would be small. Well, I am glad there are a great many who are more liberal; but, like the lecturers, they are burdened by reason of those who do little or nothing. I will give you the remainder of my story next week.

"COVETOUSNESS, WHICH IS IDOLATRY;

Yours for the war,
JOHN T. KIGGINS,

The Reform in Adams and York Counties, Pa.

YORK SPRINGS, Pa.

The work of reform in this community is progressing finely. We have old and tried anti-secrecy men here, but it is now only about one year since the opposition assumed any form of activity, and I feel perfectly safe in saying that in this time a good work has already been accomplished. I know of a num- of young men who would to-day be entangled in the web of secrecy if it had not been for our persistent opposition, which not only kept men out of the lodge but also influenced some who had joined to forsake and renounce the "unfruitful works of darkness." Who would not feel like giving thanks to God for such success? Before Bro. Bishop's lectures the cry was, "You will be ruined—reputation—business—and all"–but the effect was just the reverse. Since the subject is being agitated we find that the majority of the people are with us in sentiment, and notwithstanding the apparent strength of secrecy, it is a common thing here to meet with seceding Odd-fellows. The congregations of Wickey and Weidler are not diminishing, as predicted by some, but are on the increase, and their circuits are more prosperous than they have been for many years, hence it is very plain that no minister looses anything by boldly opposing an evil. A few days ago Bro. Wickey, at one of his appointments, preached a sermon from the text, "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not;" in which he dealt some telling blows on secretism.

In less than six months we have secured about fifteen Cynosure subscribers, and the list is not yet complete, and I trust it never will be, at least so long as any lodge is in existence. In the language of Bro. Anthony, I would say "It is God's cause; it will, it must succeed." I trust every Cynosure reader will profit by his noteworthy letter, containing so much undeniable truth, found on the sixteenth page in Cynosure of August 6th. He is a noble worker in the cause, with a high standing Christian character, and added not a little to our encouragement in this community, where he is well known.

I would like to give a more definite account of the work here, but dare not trespass on too much space now; but if spared, at some future time, I will, for the encouragement of other communities, try and give some of our experience in commencing and continuing the opposition. The Lord has most graciously been with us. Dear friends, let us never say fail so long as the Lord is on our side. H. T. Slaughenhaupt.

Correspondence.

Letter from C. W. Greene.

Indianapolis, Aug. 10, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I notice by the correspondence in a number of your paper that T. R. Allen, the Grand Master of the Missouri Grangers, is still making capital of a most outrageous falsehood in representing me as a defeated candidate for the secretaryship of the Tennessee Grange. As I have frequently stated, I was solicited by Gen. Vaughn, Master of Mississippi State Grange, to become such a candidate, and in conversation with Mr. Allen soon afterward, I so stated to him. His perfidious interference which he so unblushingly acknowledges was altogether unnecessary. My conversation with him was while en route to Indianapolis, where I discovered the true character of the chief officers of this "great moral humbug." My pronounced antagonism immediately thereafter is a sufficient answer to his utterly false charges.

But really my shafts must have touched a tender spot that he should be irritated to such constant and violent denunciation of one who has said but little in opposition to his much-loved order. Is it not evident that he recognizes the weakness of his position? and is it not just as evident that an organization which must bolster itself up by concerted onslaught upon an individual who has only ventured to openly criticise some of its objectionable features is a very rotten affair? The truth of my assertions and of my conclusions is being affirmed every day. While the grange leaders are learning caution and are hiding their schemes more carefully, there are still gaps enough through which is discovered the cloven foot.

A few days since we had a grand grange picnic at our exposition grounds. It was amusing to note the grace and apparent pride with which they paraded their "regalias." It certainly does seem surprising that men and women possessing one grain of God-given sense should so forget that they are citizens of a civilized country; and that they are supposed to stand higher in the scale of manhood than the aborignes whose tastes for flashy ornament they so closely imitate. Do these gewgaws contribute to that higher education which they talk so much about? It would rather seem to me as good evidence that they are lowering the standard of their own mental qualification in thus sacrificing sense to show, and in the public acknowledgement of their subordination to human masters.

But it is not likely that they will ever be taught except by their own folly and this may take time. The final result may easily be predicted without any special gift of prophecy.

Chas. W. Greene.

Masonic Outrage Committed in the State of Wisconsin.

It was in the year 1872 that a thrifty merchant died who willed all his property to his wife, including his store, goods and debts due him. The widow, inexperienced in mercantile business and books, employed a sober looking member of a low lodge of Freemasons in the village where said store and property were situated, who collected her store debts, sold her goods and received and paid out her money at will —the unfortunate woman trusting him with an unlimited confidence. An opportunity now arrived, which seldom happens in a lifetime, to swindle and make one's self rich. The clerk could not resist the temptation. He kept the books containing all accounts and balances on both sides.

At intervals the unsuspecting widow would go into the store and ask the said clerk in regard to some collections, payments, etc.; but he was ill-humored on all such occasions, and soon became angry whenever she endeavored to enquire of anything concerning her business. He did not want her to look into the matter. His conduct would have been a warning to a shrewd business man; but the thoughtless widow allowed this manner of proceeding to go on.

A year or more passed away, during which time the astonished widow was kept at a distance by the uncivil conduct of her dear clerk, who, when she appeared, would frown upon her, or, if he answered, would say, "Here are the figures"—which he represented as law and gospel—she then not knowing that figures could be manipulated to establish or cover an infamous fraud. Besides said clerk would frequently insinuate that she was a fool, and ask the question, "What do you know about book-keeping?"

When the general business of the widow's property was finished, her sacred clerk made up the accounts between them, and served them upon the luckless widow, who suddenly discovered that she had lost much of her money and goods—the whole amount of his business and claims were only balanced by hers and called even! But it so happens in the practice of villainy when no exposing evidence seems to be near, that the first cautious, trembling fear will, by lapse of time, relax its criminal vigilance and expose the knavery it meant to conceal; and the more so in this case, as the widow in question was not capable of perceiving the absurdity of the accounts and figures. At this point in the affair the disappointed and betrayed widow informed her awe-struck clerk that she should have some knowledge of this matter if money would buy it. The clerk turned pale, and, apprehending that the books would go into other hands, soon returned with a new account of moneys which he had collected and retained, but had ingeniously fabricated little items of money which he claimed he had paid over to her to balance them—determined to keep the money at any hazard.

The widow felt sad and grieved at this outrage. She put her accounts and papers in the hands of an able lawyer for examination; and also the accounts which the clerk had presented. The clerk had exposed himself! Rents, which were due to the widow from the clerk, that he had paid to her, were set down as a debt against her and then subtracted from other funds which he owed her; much money which had been advanced to the clerk to pay debts due from the estate, was set down as debts against her without credit, and again subtracted from funds which he had collected for her back into his own pocket; thus compelling her to pay these debts twice over.

Besides these methods of fraud the said clerk, on proposing to buy, with a partner, a portion of this widow's goods, made, secretly and without authority, a second invoice to cover goods which he had not bought, amounting to several hundred dollars—the whole visible fraud being about $600. Lawyers who looked at it pronounced it an outrage which the said clerk would not allow to go into court.

A suit was commenced by the widow (not a Mason's widow!) to recover her rights. At this moment the said clerk suspecting that a large judgment would be obtained against him, sold out his store and everything tangible upon which an execution might levy. A low lodge of Freemasons existed in the village, whose charter for unmasonic conduct, should long ago have been withdrawn by the Grand Lodge of the State of Wisconsin. But the clerk's reputation, as well as his purse, was at stake. Masonry was on the qui vive. They could not be hired to look at the clerk's accounts. He was right any way; and he must be protected. Masons offered him money to carry on his suit, and spread their noisy influence and calumny against the widow. If the clerk had got her money, she was not a Mason's widow! From every Mason's mouth came a storm of obloquy and censure. Women were sent to her to coax or frighten her to withdraw her suit. The attorney of the besieged widow lived some distance off, and could not be readily consulted. Crafty Masons were sent to inform her that lawsuits were doubtful and hazardous things; and if she should be beaten it would cost her $1,000; that the defendant was going to swear so and so, and then she must be defeated. She withstood for a while this perpetual harassment. But her spirit was breaking down. At last a Masonic widower, with glittering square and compass on his breast, was engaged, who, with soft, cooing voice and expected friendship, succeeded in persuading the embezzled widow to drop her suit. Then Masonry triumphed in iniquity, and the heartless scoundrel with the widow's money passed on with his vile spirit, uncondemned by a court of justice.

Letter from a Non-affiliating Mason and Reply.

Saint Louis, Mich., 1874.

Dear Bro. Faurot:—Your card dated 24th inst. and the Cynosure came last evening. I am in sympathy with the object of the Cynosure, but feel that it is entirely vain to battle with such odds against us. I have seen the evil influences of secret societies for many years, and, until 1854, I kept aloof from them and in sympathy with Uncle John Hutchings, who was a staunch Methodist, but would not attend Methodist meetings for whole years on the "circuit" in which he lived, when both the ministers sent on that circuit were Masons; and only on alternate appointments when one was a Mason. I remember, too, the excitement about Morgan's murder, and how Uncle John rejoiced at the success of the Anti-masons whom he led in that section. He died soon after that in the belief that Masonry was dead.

In 1854 I joined a secret society, and have joined several since, and learned that the secret gave increased power to efforts for good,— as witness the success in former years of the Sons of Temperance, etc.

In 1870 I took the first degree in Masonry with the purpose to learn what Masonry was. I learned then that I could not do any good in the order except, perhaps, to myself. I wished to carry out my pet scheme of controling caucuses, believing that at least seventy-five per cent. of real choice at every election was at the caucus. For after that it was at most but a "Hopkin's choice." I wished that men should be nominated possessing

OUR MAIL.

L. Landon, of Kennebec, Russell Co., Kansas, writes of the terrible grasshopper plague:

"I wish I could send more but I cannot, as a large portion of our State has been visited with drouth since June 10th, and all crops are ruined except wheat and oats; the latter is very poor. Last of all the grasshoppers came upon us in such numbers as to destroy every living thing. Not a vegetable in all the land of any kind, nor a bushel of corn in fifty miles square. The citizens must have help, leave the country, or starve. Great excitement prevails about what they are to live on in future. I have never seen such destitution in my life as prevails at this time. Measures are being taken to provide for the suffering. I wish my name continued as a life subscriber to the Cynosure and the pay will be forth-coming in some way, I have not a doubt. There are few advocates for the cause here. Light only is wanted and the work would go on."

Jacob Heaton, Salem, Ohio, writes:

"However tight money matters may get in the future, they will never be so tight but the engine against secret corruption must be kept running. Now that slavery is dead, Masonry is the next most deadly foe to civil and religious liberty. The Cynosure must be sustained."

Rev. A. Springstein, Bay City, Mich., writes:

"I would not be without the Cynosure. I wish that such papers were taken by all our people. May God bless you."

O. C. Stoughton, Maquoketa, Iowa, says:

"One subscriber in two years! I am encouraged; thank the Lord! This is a fearful dark corner, but I believe day light begins to dawn. Let us have the State lecturer by all means. We must have "light" here. Pray for us. Let this work be done in the name of the Lord. I hope to send you more subscribers soon.

Let us remember this brother's request and try to catch his patient, hopeful spirit.

John Collins, Carryall, O., writes:

"I want you to continue sending the paper, and, the Lord willing, I will send my own subscription and as many more as I can get before the month is out, for I want to see your publications circulated and read in this county, for I believe you advocate that which God approves. Our town of Antwerp is full of Masons and Odd-fellows, and the grangers here lately organized a lodge in this township. I hope to see the day when these secret clans shall be broken up, for I believe the devil is the founder of them all."

According to this brother's faith the Lord helped him. Before his letter was mailed money came in which he sent on.

Bro. A. Mayn who sends the following will see the reply to his valuable suggestion in another part of this paper:

"I would suggest that you publish the names and renunciations and post-offices of as many seceding Masons as possible. Masons tell us we know nothing of the institution, and we can point to none that have been Masons. Now let the list of seceders be published and extended until their influence shall be felt. We should work to get at least one seceder in every neighborhood who would be a living witness for the truth. I rejoice at the success of the cause, and at your prosperity, dear Cynosure, and have no fear of the issue if we only depend upon God."

J. S. Yankey, Fayetteville, Pa., writes:

"In June I sent you with my name thirteen three months' subscribers. I will see them and try to have them all renewed, and perhaps can get some new ones. I feel deeply interested in the cause, for it is the cause of Christ."

Thank the brother for his efforts.

T. J. Gordon, Osterville, Mo., writes:

"Times are hard, but I don't see how I can get along without the paper."

D. Crawford, of Crestline, O., writes thus about lectures:

"We cannot do much here unless you could send a lecturer to wake up the people. Could you not send us one once in a while. Send them to me and it shall not cost them anything, no difference how long they may stay in Crestline. As they pass through Crestline have them to stop."

The Cynosure does not send out lecturers although very closely connected with them. The direct and proper way to secure a single lecture or a course is to write either to Bro. J. P. Stoddard at this office, or to the State agent where there is one. Circumstances may make it more convenient to secure some other person. A list is published in every number of this paper of those who lecture more or less. There are also many pastors scattered through the country who are informed on the questions of this reform and can present it ably. Crestline will no doubt be visited by Bro. Stoddard or Caldwell who will gladly avail themselves of the generous offer of the brother.

Silas Y. Gillan, Lilly, Ill., writes:

"Do not stop the paper on any account without notifying me. I read it with great interest and then give it to others. The book I got from you last winter (Bernard's Light on Masonry) has been in almost constant use ever since I got it. As soon as one reads it another has spoken for the loan of it. My best wishes are for the success of the Cynosure and the principles which it advocates."

C. G. Cole, Lyons, Iowa, writes:

"My time is too much taken up to allow me to get subscribers, but I have on hand about twenty copies of Morgan's Exposc which I will distribute. And I am intending to get a copy of Odd-fellowship Illustrated and loan it to a young man who said to me the other day, 'I am going to join the Odd-fellows as soon as I am of age.' Perhaps it will enlighten him somewhat, and, I hope, keep him from their clutches."

That is the right way. Interest a young man in the truth, and he will not care, unless of a villainous nature, to connect himself with the lodge.

Elder Faurot, of Newville, Ind., writes:

"I am more and more pleased with the Cynosure, and do not feel willing to spare the space from its great work for "Hints on Home and Health', farming, or any other pieces on subjects found in any paper that will not 'print, engrave, mark,' etc., anything on secrecy. From my relation to and esteem for Elder W. F. Black, of Indianapolis, I feel more than mortified that he should have so stultified himself before the world and lodge too. I hope he is 'far too candid' to make a first-class (or any other) Mason. I equally regret the spirit with which 'R.' styles his church —'a Campbellite church.' This is an insult to a large and respectable body of Christians, the great majority of whose ministers are not only no secretists, but opposed to secret societies. I don't believe Mr. B. 'knew all about Masonry before he joined,' or that he now knows, and it would only add to my mortification to know that with such knowledge he would take such a step. Yours truly,

R. FAUROT."

Our correspondent "R." is very careful of his data and his statement, painful to every Christian, we think reliable. He is also a man who would not willingly give offense, much less in the use of a single word. We can safely say for him that he would have been more guarded had he thought the name objectionable. The term "Campbellites" is very commonly used in connection with the Disciple church and is not considered reproachful outside its pale. An experience of several years shows that the departments that give variety to the Cynosure increase its value, and help carry its principles into many families otherwise ignorant on secrecy. Bro. F. of course finds much matter, such as he refers to, in the journals he is able to take. Many families are not so priveleged. We endeavor to make these departments as interesting to all as they are to us. A young lady, a graduate of a medical college of this city, and of large and successful experience as a nurse, frequently contributes to the "Home and Health Hints" such information as may be priceless in some families.

Forty Years Ago.

History of Freemasonry.

The early history of Freemasonry, like that of Rome, is involved in obscurity. The conquerors of the world were not satisfied with the plain truth of their national origin. They taught that the "Eternal City" was founded and first ruled by the son of Mars, whose name was Romulus; who was taken to the gods in a tempest of lightning, and became QUIRINUS, the patron saint of the city, and one of the chief gods of Rome. This was lofty and sonorous, and unexceptionable, had it been true.

Our modern power, which seeks, with Rome ambition, to lord it over the whole habitable earth, also styles itself eternal, as did Rome; deduces its origin from heaven; claims the wisest man for lawgiver; and some mighty thing in the nature of the philosopher's stone for its secret—all which is equally credible and as well attested as that Romulus was nursed by a wolf, or Jupiter was a god that could save. And the Masonic fables are told to cover the meanness of Freemasonry's origin; for she, too, sprung from a confederacy of lawless plunderers: and it mortifies the pride of the high priest, it tops the vanity of the grand masters, and makes the puissant sovereigns of Freemasonry to tremble for the security of their thrones, to be told that their boasted order, sprung from the mire of the Rosicrucians, and spread abroad over the face of the earth upon the licentious cupidity of its speculative fathers; that it originated within the 18th century, among men capable of the most atrocious falsehoods, and base enough to sell their reputation for money, and to barter a good conscience for the delusion of a lodge room; men who sold Masonic charters for an appearance of mystery, but of a truth for gold.

Stone Masons, in common with ninety-one other crafts and trades in the city of London, have been in the habit for centuries, of meeting in club, for the purpose of improvement in the elements of their business and craft. Each craft has its public hall, its admission fee, its coat of arms, and its charity fund. The companies are given by name in the order of their rank, in Ree's Encyclopedia, Art. Company; and out of only eighteen whose form of government is particularly mentioned, sixteen are governed by a Master, two Wardens, and a various number of other assistants. So Freemason's lodges are governed; and the titles, Worshipful, and Most Worshipful, now peculiar to Masonic officers, were common to gentlemen of the 16th and 17th centuries, as Esquire and Honorable and common at the present day.

The Lord Mayor of London, at his election usually makes himself free; i. e. becomes a member of one of the twelve principle societies, if he were not a member of one of them before: "for these twelve," says the Cyclopedia, "are not only the oldest, but the richest; many of them having had the honor of kings and princes to be their members, and the apartments of their halls being fit to entertain a monarch." But Masons are not among the first twelve: their rank is 31, hall in Basing Hall-street, charter Charles 2d, 1677. Some of these societies meet by prescriptive right, the oldest charter is that of the Parish Clerks, A. D. 1233, Henry 3d,; the Bakers, A. D. 1307. Edward 5d. Six were chartered in the 14th century, 40, (and among them the Stone Masons,) in the 17th century, and some in the 18th century.

Handicraft Masonry, is an ancient trade, and has ever received the fostering attention of distinguished princes, Both in France and in Scotland, the craft were allowed a peculiar jurisdiction over all disputes growing out of the exercise of their trade. (Lawrie's History of Masonry, y. 110, and p. 297.) This was granted in France, A. D. 1645; and in Scotland, nearly two hundred years earlier, to real builders. —Anti-masonic Review, 1829.

LESSON XXXVI.—SEPT. 6, 1874.—MARTYRDOM OF THE BAPTIST.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK vi. 20-29. Commit verse 20.

20 For Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed him; and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly.

21 And when a convenient day was come, that Herod on his birthday made a supper to his lords, high captains and chief estates of Galilee;

22 And when the daughter of the said Herodias came in, and danced, and pleased Herod and them that sat with them, the king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee.

23 And he sware unto her, Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.

24 And she went forth, and said unto her mother, What shall I ask? And she said, The head of John the Baptist.

25 And she came in straightway with haste unto the king, and asked, saying, I will that thou give me by and by in a charger the head of John the Baptist.

26 And the king was exceedingly sorry; yet for his oath's sake, and for their sakes which sat with him, he would not reject her.

27 And immediately the king sent an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought: and he went and beheaded him in the prison.

28 And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damsel; and the damsel gave it to her mother.

29 And when his disciples heard of it, they came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb.

LEADING TEXT.—Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.—REV. ii. 10.

CENTRAL THOUGHT.—The world is not worthy of saints.

BIBLE READINGS.—(1) Matt. xiv. 1-14; (2) Ezek. xxxiii. 23-33; (3) Luke vii. 19-30; (4) Esth. v. 1-8; (5) Isa. viii. 9-22; (6) Matt. xi. 2-15; (7) Mark vi. 20-29.

INTRODUCTION.—No more man has higher honor in the Scripture than the Baptist. Devout, of a priestly family, his birth, name and work announced by an angel; he was a Nazarite, bold as Elijah, dressed like the old prophets, plain and timely as a preacher, crowds listened, he pointed to the coming Messiah. His fidelity as a preacher led to his death. Look at the actors in this tragedy.

ANALYSIS.—I. A thoughtless girl. Salome, grand-daughter of Herod the Great, brought up in Rome; bad school for a nominally Jewish girl; danced before the king; gets a bad promise from him. II. A wicked woman. Herodias, mother of Salome and niece and sister-in-law to Herod, with whom she now lived; hated John for his reproof of Herod and herself for sin, advised her daughter to request John's head. III. A criminal king, feared John, was very sorry for his rash promise, but orders John beheaded, and his head given to the girl for her mother.

LESSONS.—(1) Fidelity like John's, may cost one's life. (2) Conscience will feel the truth, even though the man is bent on sin. (3) The need of a judgment-day to redress the balances of this life.

TOPICS FOR STUDY.—The name—birth—parentage—dress—character—work of the Baptist—his fidelity to the king—Herod's sin—how John probably imprisoned—effect of his preaching on the king—his bitter enemy—how he was protected—occasion of his death—the influence on the king—by whom—her relationship to him—his promise—how confirmed—the princess' counsellor—the demand—its effect on Herod—his compliance—why—the execution—the presentation, and the lesson to us.—Am. S. S. Union Lessons.

Teachers should not forget in connection with this lesson to point out the nature of Herod's oath. It was false, wicked and every consideration, except that of false pride, would have led him to dishonor it.

Where are the Large Boys?

Why so few grown-up boys in the schools? Is it their fault entirely that they are not there in larger numbers? Let it be remembered that heretofore the notion has been allowed to prevail that the Sunday-school is for young people only—and how long do boys consider themselves young? Only so long as society permits them. If they could run their free course there would be something of ingenuous boyhood in them to the end of their days. Bishop Hobart, we notice, has recently made an admirable and timely address on this subject, coming to the defense of boy-character and showing how it is snubbed before its time; and just in this connection a few of his words have their point. "You all know," he says, "for you ought to know, what the feeling is that brings the blood to a boy's cheek when he is suddenly made the object of attention. He enters a room full of company, and is conscious of that feeling. He is called by name, and is aware that his tell-tale face proclaims it. He ascends a platform, perhaps, of some public exhibition, and actually grows hot in the focus of so many eyes. What does all this show? Simply his sense of modesty; and I may add a phrase which people often use when they observe such tokens—'Very becoming to his years'—though there is an implication in it that will keep me from using it myself. It touches the very point where too many young persons make a mistake. Very becoming a boy's years, but—here is the implication—very unbecoming a man." The force of this will not be questioned, and it explains in a measure the first query of this paragraph. There is no use of hiding the fact that many boys think the Sunday-school not an institution for men, and men they are encouraged to become too soon. Two common ideas are accordingly to be fought against—one, that the school is for children only, and the other, that boys become men before they cease to be boys.—Christian Union.

It is related that when Thorwaldsen returned to his native land with those wonderful marbles which have made his name immortal, chiseled with patient toil and glowing aspiration during his studies in Italy, the servants who opened them scattered upon the ground the straw in which they were packed. The next summer, flowers from the garden of Rome were blossoming in the streets of Copenhagen from the seeds thus accidentally planted. The genius that wrought grandly in marble had unconsciously planted beauty by the wayside. Sabbath-school teacher, what think you? Do weeds or rare flowers blossom from accidental sowing?

The estimated results of the half-century's work of the American Sunday School Union, so far as figures can measure them, is given as follows: Schools organized, 61,000; teachers, 404,000; scholars, 2,650,000. But such figures are no more than mere hints of the good actually done.

Home and Health Hints.

Keeping Eggs.

The Farmer's Advocate, London, Ontario, offered a prize for the best method of keeping eggs over winter. This reciept took the prize:

"Whatever excludes the air prevents the decay of the egg. What I have found to be the most successful method of doing so is to place a small quantity of salt butter in the palm of the left hand and turn the egg round in it, so that every pore of the shell is closed; then dry a sufficient quantity of bran in an oven (be sure you have the bran well dried, or it will rust). Then pack them with the small ends down, a layer of bran and another of eggs, until your box is full; then place in a cool, dry place. If done when new laid, they will retain the sweet milk and curd of a new laid egg for at least eight or ten months. Any oil will do, but salt butter never becomes rancid, and a very small quantity of butter will do a very large quantity of eggs. To insure freshness, I rub them when gathered in from the nests; then pack them when there is a sufficient quantity."

A similar receipt is given in the following:

Eggs can best be preserved by a coating of drying oil, such as linseed or cotton-seed oil. Eggs have been kept perfectly well preserved for six months by being smeared with either of these oils by the fingers in such a way as to give a perfect coating, and being then packed upon their ends in bran. During that period the loss of weight was trifling, and the flavor was equal to that of fresh eggs. Whether or not this process could be econonically used in keeping eggs for market, is a question to be decided by experiment, but that it may be used in a small way for family purposes is very well decided. The usual method practiced by dealers is to pack the eggs in barrels or vats of brick-work in the milk of lime, which is a thin sort of whitewash. They acquire, however, under this process, a peculiar flavor, which depreciates their value to some extent in the market, but that is unavoidable. It is necessary, in whatever way they are packed, that they should be kept in a cool, dry place.—S. H., Stroudsburg, Penn.

HOME-MADE VINEGAR.—To one pint of strained honey add two gallons of soft water. Let it stand in a moderately warm place. In three weeks it will be excellent vinegar. 2. Boil a pint of corn till it is a little soft; put it into a jar; add a pint of molasses and four quarts of water; mix well together, and set near the stove. In two days it will be good beer; in two or three weeks it will be first rate vinegar. The same corn will do for several months. When the vinegar is made, pour it off and add molasses and water to the corn.

HOW TO TAKE A PILL.—Place it under the tip of the tongue and take a drink of water. The biggest bolus will go down almost without your knowing it. The taste left in the mouth after taking such bitter medicines as quinine, aloes, nux-vomica, etc., is instantly neutralized by chewing a piece of liquorice root.

To remove mildew, make a weak solution of chloride of lime water—about a heaping teaspoonful to a quart of water—strain it carefully, and dip the spot or the garment into it, and if the mildew does not disappear immediately, lay it in the sun for a few minutes, or dip it again into the lime-water. The work is effectually and speedily done, and the chloride of lime neither rots the cloth nor removes delicate colors, when sufficiently diluted, and the article rinsed afterward in clear water.

Home-made Soda-Water.

A pleasant summer drink, equal to soda-water, can be made in any farmer's house in two minutes with the following ingredients: White sugar, 2½ or three teaspoonfuls; tartaric acid, ½ teaspoonful; water, half tumbler, stir the sugar and acid until it is dissolved, then add half teaspoonful bi-carbonate of soda (common baking soda), stir this well, and when it affervesce drink it off. No pleasanter or more refreshing drink can be enjoyed on a hot summer day, and there is not a particle of intoxicating matter about it.

The effervescence is caused by the chemical union of the soda and tartaric acid. The latter also imparts a slightly sour taste. If too much is used it will cause too much sourness, and the quantity must be reduced. The exact amount of sugar to be used will depend on the person's taste. What is wanted is an effervescent drink, and for this the soda and acid are indespensable, white sugar and flavoring essences can be added to suit the taste.

There are various receipts for making syrups from which this pleasant drink is produced, but, except where wanted in considerable quantities on some special occasion, a syrup is unnecessary. It is made by dissolving sugar in water, adding tartaric acid until a little tartness appears, and the flavoring with some essence, wintergreen, lemon, strawberry &c. &c. When brought out for use water must be added, and then the soda. On the whole, when required only occasionally, the receipt in the first paragraph above answers every purpose—and an excellent purpose too. SIGMA.

Farm and Garden.

The Farmer's Diet.

Some writers for the so-called "agricultural papers" are making a sort of crusade against certain articles of diet common to farmers' tables. Pork is condemned by one writer; pies and cakes by another; buckwheat cakes by a third; and still another anathematizes chickens as unfit for human food. The frying pan comes in for a large share of criticism—or abuse it might as well be called, because there is no harm in frying meat if the work is well done.

These onslaughts on farmers because their diet does not conform to the tastes or habits of writers who, in most cases, never did a day's work at farming, are in the main silly. If they can eat only what press writers say is good for them they will certainly starve, because there is hardly a single article of food which somebody does not condemn. While one man says they must quit salt pork and patronize fresh beef or mutton or more poultry and eggs, the grahamites shout out that he must abjure all meats! Wheat bread, they say, too, is unhealthy and body-killing. Only bran bread and vegetables are fit for the human stomach. And as to vegetables, there is not much chance for agreement as to their merits. Potatoes are abjured by one set of writers, cucumbers, green beans and green corn by another; and so on through the whole list. Fruits are pretty much in the same category.

What then shall the farmer eat? If he wants my advice, it is to eat what he knows agrees with him. Another man cannot judge for him in this respect. If pork in moderation suits him, then eat pork. Possibly some other meat might be better as a "stand-by" than salt pork, but the same might be said of many other things pertaining to the farmer's life. He might enjoy better health perhaps in case he worked less. If he lived in a ten thousand dollar house, and rode to town and to church in a thousand dollar carriage instead of a farm wagon, it might prolong his life somewhat. But the trouble is he pursues a vocation the profits from which do not enable him to live exactly as he would like. For the articles he produces and sells he must accept other people's prices, and not those which he knows will secure him a profit. On the whole, farmers are poor. When they get money ahead it is by saving, by rigid economy, by denying themselves and their families many little pleasures and luxuries. The farmer who would "get ahead"—get ahead of an ugly mortgage perhaps—must not live on "butcher's meat." That may do for business men, who, in some way, directly or indirectly, make their living out of him, but he, not being able to set his prices at a profit, and forced to pay profits to all other classes with whom he deals, must live economically. That explains why pork is so common at the farmers' tables. When farmers get their "rights" it will be different.

No man should adopt or continue dietetic habits which he knows are certain to shorten life, but in the midst of so much disagreement of doctors what other guide so safe as your own observations as to what agrees or disagrees with you? If a better rule can be shown, let us have it. SIGMA.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, August 27, 1874.

Rev. D. P. Rathbun is expected to be at Albany, Gentry county, Mo., to attend the State Association there. He is notified that, if going or returning, he will turn aside and lecture at Wenona, Illinois, all expenses will be paid from Mendota or La Salle on the C., B. & Q. or Rock Island railroad and back and a trifle over. Write to Peter Howe, Esq., Wenona, Ill.

THE NEED OF SECRETARIES.

The Interior has a funny man. He goes like childrens' toys where a string being pulled legs and arms make contortions that are too funny for any use. The string that moves the Interior's little joker is a patent McCormick attachment,—that is, "Money makes the man go." This pleasant little jumping-jack has, in the issue of McCormick's paper for August 13th, a joke on secretaries eighteen inches long. Not about secretaries for Presbyterian Boards or Social Science Associations, but about the needs for secretaries in several reform enterprises which are pushed by poor men and neglected by most others. Now we wish to ask what is the need of Anti-masonic secretaries, or rather of Anti-masonic societies, for, of course, if there are societies there must be officers. The answer is a very simple one. When an evil grows strong in, as well as outside of, the Christian churches, Christians who see the real character of the evil must organize against it—and when they do so they will need a secretary. Thus, when Presbyterian doctors of divinity were whipping female slaves with hand-saws before going to preach, this sort of people who get so merry over secretaries were looking on in silence while "impecunious reformers" were forming societies and holding prayer-meetings to free the oppressed. Again, at the present time, Freemasons are monopolizing the civil offices, trampling upon justice and killing out the Christian church. The Interior lately contained an article proving clearly and well that Freemasonry was a religion without Christ. It stated that it was a rival religion. This is true. Now the Interior knows that there are Masons in Presbyterian churches, North and South, just as there were slaveholders fifteen years ago, and would be now if it was lawful to hold slaves. What does the Interior propose to do about it? Why, its funny man makes a joke on the Cynosure and another on Masonic aprons and chicken-tail cockades, and the whole work is finished so far as they propose to accomplish it. Now if a member of the Congregational church should be mean enough to join a Presbyterian church so as to get helped from both, the Interior would set up the war-whoop and hunt him out; but when a man joins a church which the Interior proves to be a Christless one, and then the Presbyterian church too, the Interior is like the little boy whose clothing was damaged by a cyclone, or water-spout, or something, and as nothing to say. As long as our religious papers are conducted in this way, we have need of secretaries for Anti-masonic societies. When they do their duty we may get along without them.

ROB MORRIS AS A CRUSADER.

The illustrious Mason who wrote "We meet upon the level" and several other hymns for Masonic worship, and edited an edition of Webb's Monitor, has long been infatuated with the idea that Masonry must prove its glorious origin in the days of Solomon in accordance with its legends, or somebody would begin to believe the institution a lie. He has undertaken to demonstrate the verity of Masonry by scouring the Holy Land in search of a square and compass. He spent time and money, and when the latter failed, made a strike for Sunday-school pennies, and sent bugs and bottled water in exchange. But, aside from a few grips with a Bedouin, he found only Masonry of the genuine, stone-and-mortar kind. This would not do. He must have Masonry of another sort or the world would shame him, and the Sunday-school fund be spent in vain. He thereupon chiseled in two or three places, where the fraud would not be detected, the emblems of the lodge. This he owned, "on the square," while afterward lecturing in Indiana, and the Evergreen, a Masonic journal, took him severely to task for his contemptible lying work. Morris has now entered on a new campaign in the Holy Land, which he evidently aims to restore, not to the Jews, but to the followers of the "widow's son."

The New York Tribune of July 1st describes this crusade on Palestine:

"A Masonic expedition to the Holy Land, which will include the principal cities and localities of interest in Europe, Asia, and Africa, will leave this port on Sept. 12. The party will consist of at least fifty Master Masons, under the leadership of Robert Morris, L. L. D., Past Grand Master of Kentucky. The trip will occupy 144 days, and will embrace Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Asia Minor, Greece, Italy, Switzerland, France, England, Scotland, and Ireland. The first part of the expedition leaves New York on Saturday Sept. 12, and will arrive at Liverpool on Sept. 22, proceeding to London the same evening. After occupying two days in examining the objects and places of chief interest in London, the party will start for Paris and stop one day, leaving on the 27th for Turin, Italy, where they will remain until Sept. 29, when they will start for Venice, via Milan, stopping a short time in the latter place. After remaining in Venice all Thursday, Oct. 1, they will leave that city for Trieste, from which city they will sail on Saturday for Greece, a steamer having been secured for the purpose. On the way the party will stop at the Island of Syria, landing on Oct. 8, at Piracus, and will proceed thence to Athens, where they will visit the Grand Lodge of Greece, and inspect the ruins of classic times. On Oct. 13, the party will return to Piracus, and sail to Constantinople, arriving there on Oct. 13, and remaining seven days, in order to visit the twelve lodges of Masons, composed of all nationalities in that city. The party will sail from Constantinople on Oct. 22, arriving at Smyrna on the 24th; then by rail to Ephesus, returning to Smyrna in time to meet in convention with the seven lodges of that place. They will then go to Beyrout, Syria, where they will arrive on Oct. 29. From this point they will begin their tent life, which is to continue thirty days, during which time the party will visit Gebal Tyre, Hiram's Tomb, Baalbee, Damascus, Mount Hermon, the Sea of Galilee, Nazareth, Nablous, Bethel, Jerusalem, Bethlehem, the Dead Sea and River Jordan, Hebron, and Joppa. During this tent life the lodge will be opened whenever opportunity occurs, under the traveling warrant of Royal Solomon Mother Lodge of the city of Jerusalem. While at Damascus and Beyrout the party will be received by the Masons in those places. In Jerusalem it is proposed to lay the corner-stone of the New Masonic Hall, to be erected in that city. On Nov. 28 the expedition will sail from Joppa for the mouth of the Suez Canal, where the party will arrive on Nov. 30, and examine the locality of the supposed crossing of Moses and his people from Egypt and Arabia, and the next day, Dec. 1, they will proceed by rail to Cairo, where they will remain four days for the purpose of visiting the Pyramids, starting for Alexandria on Dec. 5. The party will leave Egypt on Dec. 7, and arrive at Naples on Dec. 11, remaining there five days for the purpose of visiting Pompeii, Vesuvius, and other objects of interest, leaving for Rome on Wednesday, Dec. 16. Six days will be occupied in the 'Eternal City' in the inspection of the various antiquities, after which the party will proceed to Florence and remain there three days. On Christmas Day they will start for Turin; thence for Geneva, where they will remain one day; thence to Berne and Basle, arriving in Paris on Dec. 31, where they will remain six days. On Jan. 7, 1875, they will start for London, remaining until Jan. 12, giving the days to sight-seeing, and the evenings to visiting the numerous Masonic lodges of the city. They will then proceed to York, and Edinburgh, and will, on Jan. 15, visit Glasgow and Cyr. On Jan. 18, they will proceed to Belfast, and the next day to Dublin, sailing from Liverpool on Jan. 20, in order to take the steamship for New York on Jan. 21. Should no unforseen accident occur, the whole party will arrive in this city on Feb. 1, and dissolve the 'Most Traveling Lodge.'"

NO INTERFERENCE IN POLITICS OR RELIGION.

The Beacon Light, of Guthrie Center, Iowa, of August 5th, has the following letter, remarkable for its rarity, but not for the nature of the facts it explains. It is a sufficient answer to the hypocritical and universal claim of non-intervention. The letter reads thus:

MR. EDITORS:—By your consent I will for the benefit of such of my friends that have not been made acquainted with the issue that was made by the F. A. M., in the late primaries that came off at the Center, Panora, Casey, Stuart and Guthrie, and a few inland townships, favored by "The Ring," manipulated for the defeat of one, who, under all circumstances, has stood by and defended the truth, irrespective of consequences. That defeat culminated in the rejection of the present recorder as a candidate for re-election. On no other issue, than that he was not sound on Freemasonry. Our Royal Arch Mason declaring that no man had a right to allow his name to be used before the Republican Convention, who advocates such religious sentiments as he, the said subscriber, felt it his duty to defend. Since when have Freemasons set themselves up as our judge as to what our religious sentiment should be, to entitle us to a place in the Republican ranks? I never knew the Republican party to deprive its members of the free exercise of the right of judgment in all such matters, and whenever a church body or organization, though they be the F. A. M., take a stand that is prejudicial to the best interest of society and our country, it becomes us as a champion of right, to arouse the public to look after their best interest and check the progress of this monster usurper. In order, therefore, to give the public the facts, the truth and the whole in the premises, I submit the following: In the summer of 1872, I sent my name to the lodge of Freemasons for membership, which was favorably accepted, and in due season was let into the mysteries of the first degree of Freemasonry, and was ground out an "Apprentice Mason," and, as such, entitled to the tender care of a newly fledged Mason. All things ran lovely, until I informed my brethren in the church, that my Christian training entirely disqualified me from becoming a "good Mason," and that I could and should not support the order, as my religious convictions were such that I could not serve God and Mammon, and that as far as I was concerned, should call the thing square. Notwithstanding all this, after repeatedly refusing to go to the lodge, they would still insist on my going when I thought it entirely out of place. After all these entreaties failed to bring me back to the fraternal fold, they tried at the last resort in a terrible dilemma, to bait as I verily believe, with a bait that would be likely to win—which in large letters read "OFFICE"—which of course was a big bait for a man that had never earned a dollar except by hard work. And the Father of the Brotherhood came smiling around as a Ma on alone can smile, when he has a pretty thing to tell a brother, and most affectionately requested me to run for Recorder of Guthrie county. At the same time assuring me that they would see that I would get the nomination, for which nomination I always gave my brethren in the order credit. But thanks to the people of Guthrie county for my election. After my election, the pressure was brought to bear to bring me into the lodge and have me take the next two degrees. I refused and that was the last of that fraternal love that they so much talk about.

Ever since, I have expressed myself freely as a Christian should on the moral, or rather immoral, side of Masonry, for which I was given to understand that they would spot me at the earliest date, which came off, at the primary on Saturday last, at Guthrie Centre and other favorable places in the county, where the master of the ring dictated. They tell us that Masonry does not interfere with a man's "conscience, his politics or religion." Oh no. When your conscience takes no offense, and your politics builds them up in places of honor like in our own country, and your religion is so broad that Satan himself could not object to it. Yet strange to say, when our primary came off, our Masonic friends forgot to vote for us. All against us with hardly an exception. Yet, these fellows set themselves up as models of morality, attempting to save the world by a system of moral training, which sometimes shows the cloven foot in the lodge room in the form of some member in a state of beastly intoxication. Yet we are told Christ is in in it. When oh when will deity cease to be thus insulted at such sacrifice?

NOTES.

—The editor of the Cynosure started for Iowa and Missouri on Saturday last in the interest of Wheaton College. He will probably attend the organizing convention for the State of Missouri to be held at Brashear, Adair county, Wednesday next, September 1st.

—Our readers will be pained to learn of the affliction of Prof. C. A. Blanchard and wife in the loss of an infant son, which passed peacefully to the arms of a waiting Saviour on Saturday last. It was about a month old, and had already become the center of many and great hopes.

—The Free Methodist, which was moved to Aurora, Ill., in 1871 by Rev. Lewis Bailey, from New York, has since his death last fall been continued by Mrs. Bailey. The number for last week, however, comes from Sycamore, Ill. D. P. Baker and T. B. Arnold have become the proprietors and have removed the publication office. Both these brethren are preachers in the Free Methodist church, and are recommended to this work by responsible brethren. They propose to associate with them as corresponding editors, several ministers of the church, throughout the country. Brethren J. Traviss and J. M. Y. Smith, have already accepted that position. The Free Methodist has steadily grown in value since Joseph Mackey removed it to New York, and the new management look for a continued increase in material worth and in the power of divine grace. May God grant their desires.

—At a Masonic Knight Templar celebration on last Thanksgiving Day at Steubenville, Ohio, one of the orators, O. H. Battin by name, made some statements in relation to the Grand Lodge of that State. That body was organized, he claimed, in Chillicothe, January 4th, 1808, and numbered among its members the following persons, some of whom obtained political celebrity: Louis Cass, Rufus Putnam, Henry Brush, Sam'l Huntington, Jacob Burnet, Dan'l Symms. Elisha Whittlesey, Lincoln Goodale, Thomas Corwin, John M. Goodenow, Chas. R. Sherman, Joshua R. Giddings, Dan'l McCook, and Jesse R. Grant. We should be pleased to receive any reliable information disproving the statement.

Reform News.

From Elder Barlow.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Aug. 21, 1874.

DEAR K:—It is a long time since the readers of the Cynosure have heard of my where-abouts and my do-abouts; but this silence is not the result of inactivity by any means. My work has been more a preparation for work than actual service in the field. I have been corresponding with friends in various directions, and looking for openings where the "fallow ground', might be broken up and the seed cast in, which shall bring forth a plentiful harvest by and by. This work is beginning to tell, and I am already engaged in more active work which will increase with the length of the evenings, and the passing by of the pressing labors of haying and harvest.

During this week I have spoken to good and attentive audiences in Smyrna and Beaver Meadow, both in Chenango county. In the former place, I spent the Sabbath, and preached in the morning for the Baptist pastor, Rev. Mr. Jones. In the evening it was my pleasure to listen to a lecture on the Holy Land, by Rev. Dr. Campbell, of Rochester. The speaker gave us a vivid picture of the land itself and of his experiences while passing through it.

PLEASING THE MASONS.

Among other things, he said he would relate one circumstance which would undoubtedly please the Masons. He thought that some stones of the temple foundation were still to be found there; and that he saw on one of these old stones a well-defined Masonic "square and compass." "But," said the Doctor, "I must tell the whole story. I learned that it was scratched on the face of the rock a short time previous by a boy with a rusty nail!" Query: Was not this one of those marks chiselled on the ancient rocks, by that pink of Masonic Knighthood, Rob Morris? I suspect, yes. How long will our American Sunday-schools permit themselves to be humbugged by this montebank, with his dried grasshoppers, Jordan water, etc?

The friends in Smyrna not expecting me so soon, were not prepared for me, and so I gave but one lecture where I expected to have given three. I expect to visit them again ere long. At Beaver Meadow, good work was done and foundation laid for more. In a few weeks, the people in the rural districts will have more leisure to attend to lectures, and more money to pay for them.

TERRORISM OF THE LODGE.

This is fearful. I see more and more of this as I go about the country. It settles down over the churches like a dark pall, and is rapidly closing the churches against us. Even where there are no Masons in the membership churches are held against us; the trustees and others saying, "Why should we open our house to you and bring down upon our heads the anger of the fraternities?" I endeavored last week to secure a United Presbyterian house of worship for a lecture. One brother said it would injure their church to do so; said their minister was now suffering loss in salary on account of their position against secret societies; said one member had been expelled for joining the Masons, but stood ready to come back when the church would give up its position! Another member was sure it would injure the church to open it for lectures; would rather give five dollars to pay for a hall to lecture in than to open their house; told him I would call on him for that five dollars by and by.

One of these brethren wanted some of my books, which I promised to bring to him, not having my satchel with me. I called on him soon after with Light on Masonry and Broken Seal in my hand. He was in the back part of his store, and in going to him I had to pass a man sitting in a side door smoking. The brother looked up from his writing, and saw me coming, and just as I passed the smoker, he cast a glance over my shoulder at the man and made a warning gesture with his fore finger. When I reached him, I said, "I have brought you those books." Again he raised that fore finger, and shaking it nervously, he leaned forward, and with bated breath, said, "That man is a Mason; I will take that fifty cent book," at the same time pushing toward me fifty cent note with a manner which said "now be off;" which I did as speedily as was consistent with my 225 pounds avoirdupois, and my desire not to be afraid of that terrible Mason who sat there smoking and eyeing the expressive pantomime through which my friend and I had been passing.

How long is this state of things to continue? How long will the U. P. and other Christian churches professing to believe that Freemasonry is an anti-Christ leading men to perdition, continue to shut out from their pulpits those who would warn the people. Let such churches pull down their anti-secret flag, or else rally to its defence. In this condition of things how long will that expelled member have to wait for the flag to come down, and the gates to open for him to enter the church with the Masonic cloak around him? How long will the church of the living God continue to cower in abject fear before these hosts of Baal?

Religious Intelligence.

—The Congregationalists of England have raised a fund of $500,000 for retired pastors, and are now engaged in raising a fund for widows of deceased ministers. It already amounts to over $80,000.

—Rhode Island has twenty-five Congregational churches which report 4,442 members of whom about 400 united last year. A plan of pastoral visitation was carried out last year with considerable success and interest.

—The Concordia (German Lutheran) Theological Seminary of St. Louis, recently graduated fifty students who will immediately enter the work of the ministry. They are opposed to the lodge of whatever name, and their influence in this direction will be felt.

—A great evangelical work has been going on in the Ohio State prison at Columbus. A correspondent of the Presbyterian says that 462 out of about 1,000—the average number of prisoners from year to year—have been received into the prison church in in the past three years. Of this number two hundred and forty-six have gone out of the prison by serving out their term, or by pardon from the Governor, and by watching their after-course it has been found that a majority of them have remained faithful to their religious professions. Many, according to the last reports of both chaplain and warden, are living upright, exemplary lives, and it is the testimony of both that no more of these discharged prisoners fall away from the covenant than is ordinary in the Christian church. The chaplain has not been satisfied with being a mere official, but has become the advisor and pastor, and during his service of three or four years the institution has undergone a great change.

—Prof. Blaikie writes of the revivals in Scotland during the past winter, and still continuing under the labors of Moody and Sankey, says: "It is certainly not beyond the mark to say that in point of extent, power, and wide-spreading influence, the religious movement of the last six months is unprecedented in the history of Scotland. We mean that never within the same space of time has so large a harvest been gathered into the Christian garner. . . . . In Glasgow the work has been on a larger scale than in Edinburgh, especially among young men. Such a result as seventy young men in Glasgow and thirty in Edinburgh declaring themselves willing for foreign service in the church of Christ speaks volumes for the movement. The class among whom the work has chiefly gone on are those who have been well brought up—the children of Christian parents, mainly in the middle walks of life. In many cases apt to be counted as conversions the saving impression had probably been made before; but the change from timid discipleship to bold decision, and from unconscious to conscious grace, has been so great that the subjects of it have been disposed to think that only now they have begun to live."

News of the Week.

The City.

A severe storm passed over Chicago last Friday with an abundance of rain. Several buildings were struck and one man killed by lightning. Off the Calumet river the storm assumed the proportions of a water spout.——The Chicago post-office twice burned out, moved last Saturday into commodious quarters in a new hotel building across the street from the new government building of corner-stone notoriety.——It is a significant and notorious fact that the city authorities are doing little or nothing to prevent or put out conflagrations. The new ordinance is not enforced and necessary measures to provide water and engines are not taken. So inefficient a set of aldermen seldom were got together.

Foreign.

Spanish advices dated August 24, report that a ministerial crisis is again existing at Madrid, and that the inhabitants of that city refuse to submit to a fresh conscription. Disturbances are imminent. Sweden has formerly recognized Spain.——The latest estimates in regard to the extent and effects of the famine in India, show that 8,000,000 of the natives are still dependent on charitable relief. Further distress is threatened in Tirhoot where the weather has been excessively dry. Unless rain falls soon the harvest will prove a failure.——The Carlists have met with recent successes in the capture of the city of Leo de Urgel, and of a citadel with its entire garrison.——There is prospects of war between Brazil and the Argentine Republic. A Brazilian ironclad bombarded the town of Alvear because of alleged ill-treatment of her officers by the town authorities.——Pere Hyacinthe has resigned his pastorate at Geneva, Switzerland. He states in a published letter that he is warmly attached to the Catholic church, whose reform, not its everthrow, he greatly desired. But the liberal Catholicism of Geneva is neither liberal in politics or religion.

Country.

The Freeman's Journal (Catholic) recently published the story that the Prussian government some time since had negotiated with Spain for the island of Porto Rico and that the opposition of the Spanish minister at Washington occasioned his removal. The story is wholly denied by Secretary Fish and the Spanish authorities.——The people of Ohio have rejected the new Constitution proposed for that State by a heavy vote. The convention which prepared it was presided over by Chief Justice Waite until his present appointment and continued its sittings nearly a year. The result was a document of forbidding length. The unofficial returns in 33 counties give 50,000 majority against its adoption.——Proprietors of Pennsylvania coal mines have agreed to stop work for a week or so in order to advance the price of coal. It is proposed to share the profits of the higher rates with the miners—a visionary scheme for them. The evil effects of an idle week will be poorly compensated by such plans.——The reports of political violence at the South are made a subject of considerable agitation by Republican journals, which claim that in that party only is salvation for the freedmen. These troubles have not yet reached alarming proportions, and generally there is as much blame on one side as the other.

The Home Circle.

Tired.

O for wings, that I might soar,
A little way above the floor—
A little way beyond the roar—

A little nearer to the sky!
To the blue hills, lifted high,
Out of all our misery.

Where alone is heard the lark,
Warbling in the infinite arc,
From the dawning to the dark.

Where the callow eaglets wink
On the bare and breezy brink,
And slow pinions rise and sink.

Where the dim white breakers beat,
Under cloud-drifts at our feet,
Singing, singing, low and sweet.

Where we see the glimmering bay
Greyly melting far away,
On the confines of the day.

Where the green larch-fringes sweep
Rocky defiles, still and steep,
Where the tender lichens creep.

Where the gentian-blossoms blow,
Set in crystal stars of snow;
Where the downward torrents flow.

To the plains and yellow leas,
Glancing, twinkling, through the trees,
Pure, as from celestial seas.

Where the face of heaven has smiled,
Aye on freedom, sweet and wild,
Aye, on beauty undefiled.

Where no sound of human speech,
And no human passions reach;
Where the angels sit and teach.

Where no troublous foot has trod;
Where is impressed on the sod
Only Hand and Heart of God!

The Modern Canaanites.

In the mountains which form a geographical connection between the systems of the Taurus and Lebanon, lying along the Syrian coast, reside a strange people. Subject to Turkish rule, they still keep up their tribal organization; and though ignorant alike of the origin of their race and religion, they maintain with great tenacity their hold upon their nationality and their creeds.

In A. D. 1163, Benjamin of Tudela calls them "assassins, who do not believe in Islam, but follow one like unto the prophet Karmath." During the crusades, they were at war with the Christian princes. In 1697, the Turks called them "Neceres, who adhere to no certain religion, but assume that of the people with whom they converse, being such Proteuses in religion that none could discover what shape their consciences are really of." Some writers have atttributed to them a Persian, while Volney, in 1780, adopted the idea of a Gnostic origin. Later, Renan, in his report to the Emperor Napoleon in 1860, says: "The Nosairees, or 'little Christians,' have more in common with Christians than with Moslems, and are the most degraded population in Syria. We were informed that they worship a woman. They are called at times a Gnostic sect, having passed, in these centuries, through all the alterations that a religion, denuded of sacred books and of a church organization, could not fail to undergo."

These strange people are probably descendants of those sons of Canaan who were in possession of Arka, Arvad, Zimra and Sin, on the sea shore, and Hamath, when Abraham came from Ur of the Chaldees. Driven by successive conquerors from their towns, they found a refuge in these dark mountains and have there remained, and doubtless many of their brethren, fleeing from Joshua, joined them in their inaccessible retreat. This accords with a tradition among the Nosairees, that the ancestors were expelled by Joshua from Palestine. Many of their castles now standing bear Jewish names, such as Joshua, Solomon, Zion, and the like.

The Nosairees are not identical with the "Assassins," who were famous in the days of the Crusades, for the former existed in Syria previous to the arrival of the Ismaileyth, or Assassins, who came from Persia; and whatever each may owe to the Carmathians in the mosaic of their creeds, they have ever been distinct and hostile peoples. The pagan worship of Venus, or Ashtaroth, erroneously attributed to this people by Disraeli and a host of other writers, pertains rather to the Ismaileyeh, and there is no reason to believe that these descendents of the Canaanites are a whit more immoral than any other non-Christian sect in Syria. Woman not only has no place in their religious system, but is not allowed even to witness the religious rites, which are celebrated only by the initiated among the adult males. They hold, however, in their doctrine of metempsychosis, that certain men who have failed in this life to accomplish anything, after death become women, under certain conditions, may appear as men in the next life.

Recent discoveries of MSS. show that the creed of this people is a confused melange of idolatry, Judaism, Christianity and Islamism. The recognize the prophetic character of Jesus Christ, frequently quote the names of the Apostles, and many passages from the Psalms and New Testament. They revere the name of Mary, observe the feast of Christmas and New Year's Day, according to the calendar of Julian; they celebrate Epiphany, Palm Sunday, Easter, and some of the apostles' and saints' days; and in their communion service they use consecrated wine. From the Jews and Moslems they have borrowed ablution and circumcision, and have adopted Moslem names, except those of Omar and Abu Beker, whom they curse and abhor. They quote much from the Koran, but obtain many features from the Sabians and Magians, as appears from the respect they pay to light, fire, and the heavenly bodies. In their writings, Mohammed and Christ are referred to as the same person, manifesting himself at different epochs.

The Nosairees, as a sect, derived their creed from Abu Shuaib ibn Nusair, in A. D. 840. The suggestions of Renan, that the name Nosairee is a diminutive of Nusara, meaning "little Christian," and that of the Jesuit missionaries who translate the word into "bad Christians," do not appear to be well founded. The author of one MS. requires of the Nosairees that they discover nothing of their religion to strangers; that they love their brethren and be charitable, abstaining from theft and oaths; that they suffer poverty patiently, and bear ill treatment on the part of their women. A Nosairee, with whom I have conversed, says that his people hold among other things, that God of their sins created devils, of the sins of devils he created women, and consequently prayers are not taught their women. The souls of learned Moslems, after death, pass into donkeys; those of Christians into pigs, and those of Jews into monkeys, wicked Nossirees into eatable animals; good but skeptical men into monkeys; and those who do both good and evil, into human beings of other sects. They accept no proselytes, except from the Persians, who with them believe that Ali was a manifestation of God. My Nosairee informant intimated his belief that his people originated in Persia, but said that in Jewish history they were called Philistines. His people put on at will any religion, but remained Nosairee at heart. They know each other by signs. One of the six questions being: "If your uncle is thirsty, from whence do you give him drink?" the proper answer is: "From the high fountain." Their heaven is the place of stars which are very near together. Mars is the angel of death, and disappears whenever a person dies. Thunder is the voice of "Ali."

In my visit to their mountain homes, I found that they got on well with the Christians, but not with the Moslems, who regard them as pagans, and do not receive their testimony in courts of justice. The tribes are allied to each other, but are not at peace. The blood feud is the curse of their land. Always armed, they are ready for attack or defence; but as individuals, they are not inhospitable. They live in great poverty; and being in constant rebellion against the Turkish government, many have taken to robbery as a profession. It was for many years the custom of the government to impale the Nosairees instead of beheading or hanging them. This was not distasteful to the sect, as the soul could thus leave the body by the mouth.

I spent several days among this interesting people, seeing them in their homes, at their work and at their play. The men and women mingle freely together, and here only in the East have I seen men and women dancing together around a bonfire. The dancers form a line with hands clasped, each person pressing the right shoulder against the left breast of the one in advance. The leader flourishes a handkerchief to keep time, while all sing and advance in a lock-step, two steps advance and a little side-jump, which they emphasize a la varsouvienne. An occasional discharge of heavily loaded flint-locks close to the heads of the girls created no nervousness on their part, but kept up the spirits of the party.

The women dress very much like the men, all affecting red stripes in their gowns. The breasts of the women were covered and their faces unveiled, thus reversing the custom in Palestine. I gathered from the young men who were inclined to talk, the following points: "A man may take as many wives as he can support, and may divorce them at pleasure. We beat our wives when we are angry with them, and when they deserve it. Ali is our God, and is now in the moon, in which his face is visible."

During our trip through their mountains, I saw many whitewashed tombs or "mazars" of saints, but seldom met any one on the road, or laden animals, as in Mount Lebanon; very little ground was under cultivation, and that only in the vicinity of the villages. Their mountains are much inferior to the Lebanon and the Taurus range in height and grandeur, although reported to be of great fertility; their outline is tame, and the sub-conical hills rise not more than 1,000 feet above the general elevation. The chain is steep towards the Orontes on the east, while to the west it descends in low irregular hills to the coast. It seems to be a continuous range of chalk with occasional gypseous marls, and extends from Kolet el Husen on the extremity of Jabel Akkar (Lebanon) on the south, to Mount Cassius (of the Amanus) on the north. The highest point reached by me, as shown by my aneroid, was 2,378 feet above the sea; but a higher ridge lay beyond, between my camp and the Orontes river at Mudik, the ancient Apamiæ. Burchardt speaks of Webby Metta as 5,000 feet high. Benjamin of Tudela says that the extent of the Nosairee country is eight days' journey, or about 250 miles.

The principal feudals of to-day are Beit Hassoon, Ali Jerkis, Ahmed Aloosh, El Ailey, Tarboosh of the Kelbie district. These are children of the same ancestor. Other houses are called Sheik Maroof, Yashoot, Karalie, Hama, etc.

The Turkish troops have recently penetrated these mountains and reduced these people to subjection; and their position is most abject and pitiable.

The only mission work among the Nosairees—who have been greatly slandered and greatly neglected by Christendom—was commenced at Latakiyeh and B'hamra by Rev. Mr. Lyde, of the English Church, who died in 1850. The American missionaries at Latakiyeh Rev. Mr. Beattie and Dr. Metheny, took up the work subsequently and have been useful to them in many ways, especially in promoting a better understanding between them and the Turkish authorities. Missionaries may go among the Nosairees without fear. It is true that, in the absence of tribunals, they take the law into their own hands, and exact an eye for an eye. They have preserved vestiges of the worship of Baal, the Syrian Apollo; of Astarte, the Syrian Venus; of fire, and of the heavenly bodies, and they have also retained traces of the Jewish law; but they have no cities of refuge, where protection can be found from the avenger of blood. Hence it is to be feared that until their patch-work creed shall give place to a purer faith, the mountains and valleys of Jebel Nosairee will continue to drink the blood of these poor creatures.—Evangelical Messenger.

Fragments Gathered Up.

If an angel were sent to find the most perfect man, he would probably not find him composing a body of divinity, but perhaps a cripple in a poor-house, whom the parish wish dead, and humbled before God, with far lower thoughts of himself than others have of him. Let us be satisfied with what we know, and be willing to leave the mysteries to be solved when, as scholars, we sit at His feet and learn from His lips the complete story of redeeming love. Many talk familiarly of sanctification in the lump, who know but little of it in the piece. The readiest way to know whether you are in Christ is to know whether Christ be in you. Revenge hurts both offerer and sufferer; as we see in a bee, which in her anger, loseth her sting, and lives a drone ever after. A prudent man, is like a pin; his head prevents him from going too far. A promise should be given with caution, and kept with care. A promise should be made by the heart, and remembered by the head. A promise and its performance should, like the scales of a true balance, always present a mutual adjustment. A promise neglected is an untruth told. A promise attended to is a debt settled. God crowns with mercy, but a swollen head is not fit to have that cown put upon it. A proud man, is seldom a greatful man; for he never thinks he gets as much as he deserves. When any mercy falls, he says, "Yes; but it ought to be more. It is only manna as large as a coriander seed, whereas, it ought to be like a baker's loaf." "I am a home missionary," once observed a Christian mother, "six pairs of little eyes are daily watching my looks, as well as listening to my words; and I wish my children never to see in me that which they may not imitate." Live to be useful. Live to give light. Live to accomplish the end for which you were made, and quietly and steadily shine on, trying to do good. If we would have powerful minds, we must think; if we would have faithful hearts, we must love; if we would have strong muscles, we must labor. These include all that is valuable in life. A preached Gospel by men whose life is such as to destroy all confidence in them, is like tendering water in a defiled cup, it disgusts rather than pleases.—The Christian.

If you would be converted, you must understand from what you must turn; and this is, in a word, from your carnal self, which is the end of all the unconverted; from the flesh, that would be pleased before God, and would still be enticing you; from the world, that is the bait; and from the devil, that is the angler for soul, and the deceiver. And so from all known and wilful sins.

Next, you must know to what you must turn; and that is, to God as your end; to Christ, as the way to the Father; to holiness, as the way appointed you by Christ; and to the use of all the helps and means of grace afforded you by the Lord.

Lastly, you must know by what you must turn; and that is by Christ, as the only Redeemer and Intercessor; and by the Holy Ghost as the Sanctifier; and by the Word as his instrument or means; and by faith and repentance, as the means and duties on your part to be performed. All this is of necessity.—Baxter.

Soul Saving.—Do you not now recall some dead one whom you fear is lost, and with whom you failed to plead? A heart-broken mother bent over her dead child, and refused to be comforted. Friends sought to administer consolation, and turn her away from her grief; but "Ah!" she said, "I could yield her up, although she was the joy of my home, if I knew she was saved. Having often felt that I should converse with her on religion, I kept putting it off, until she was taken sick. Then, thought I, I will talk to her about her soul; but delirium came. I prayed in vain for a moment of reason; but she died, and I fear she is lost." What a joy is the work of saving souls! A missionary sat by the death-bed of his first convert. Said the dying man, "You preached about heaven last night, but I could not be present; I am going to heaven to-day. When I get there I shall immediately go to Jesus and thank him for sending you to me, and then will take my station at the gate and wait for you. When you come I shall take you to him and say 'Lord, here is the man that saved me.'" Who would not have such a greeting as this on arriving at heaven? Heaven would be almost joyless did we not find there some whom we had led from sin to holiness.

Sammy Hicks and his Pipe.

It is said of that good man, Sammy Hicks, the Macclesfield blacksmith, that "as he understood the words of the Lord Jesus, it was quite enough for him to see the path of duty steadfastly to travel in it."

An instance of this feature of his character was exhibited in his sudden abandonment of tobacco. One day he gave sixpence to a poor widow. She blessed him, and could hardly find words enough which to express her thanks.

He said to himself "Well, if sixpence makes that poor creature so happy, oh how many sixpences have I spent in filling my mouth with tobacco!"

He made a vow instantly never to let a pipe enter his lips again. Soon afterwards he was taken very ill, and a doctor said to him, "Mr. Hicks, you must resume your pipe."

"I will not," he replied.

"Then," said the doctor, "if you do not, you will not live."

"Bless the Lord, then," said Sammy. "I have made a vow to the Lord that the pipe shall never enter my mouth again; and it never shall."

Sammy Hicks kept his vow, and lived to be an old man.—Rev. T. E. Thorsby.

"'Twas My Mother."

A company of good children, who had gathered out of the alleys and garrets of the city, were preparing for their departure to new and distant homes in the West. Just before the time for the starting of the cars, one of the boys was noticed aside from the others, and apparently very busy with a cast-off garment.

The superintendent stepped up to him and found that he was cutting a small piece out of the patched lining. It proved to be his old jacket, which, having been replaced by a new one, had been thrown away. There was no time to be lost. "Come, John, come!" said the superintendent, "what are you going to do with that piece of old calico?"

"Please, sir," said John, "I am cutting it to take with me. My dear dead mother put the lining into this old jacket for me. This was a piece of her dress, and it is all that I shall have to remember her by." And as the poor boy thought of that dear mother's love, and of the sad death-bed scene in the old garret where she died, he covered his face with his hands and sobbed as if his heart would break.

But the train was about leaving, and John thrust the little piece of calico into his bosom "to remember his mother by," hurried into a car, and was soon far away from the place where he had seen so much sorrow.

Many an eye has moistened as the story of this orphan boy has been told, and many a heart prayed that the God of the fatherless and motherless would be his friend. He loved his mother, and we cannot but believe that he obeyed her and was a faithful child.

Will our little readers, whose parents are yet spared to them, always try to show their love by cheerful obedience, knowing this is pleasing to the Lord? Will the boys, especially, always be affectionate and kind to their mothers?

Will you keep in mind that if you should some day have to look upon the face of a "dear dead mother," no thought would be so bitter as to remember that you have given her pain by your willfulness or disobedience? Herald and Presbyterian

A Polite Dog.

Trip is a little terrier, with a black coat and a white collar. Like "Old Dog Tray," he "is ever faithful," and his sympathy for any one who seems to be suffering, is touching. Sometimes, when grandpa has a hard turn of coughing, he will stand beside him and cry like a child.

Trip is always delighted to see his friends, and when asked to shake hands, will put out his white paw as gracefully as any city belle. But his real politeness shows itself in another and better way. His favorite place for a nap is in grandpa's easy chair. There he will curl himself up on the leather-covered cushion, and take more comfort than a king on a bed of down. But at the first sound of grandpa's step, he is wide awake. Up go the pretty black ears, and in an instant he is on his feet, looking at his master, as much as to say, "Will you have the chair, sir?" If grandpa says, "No, I thank you," he goes back and settles himself for another nap; but if grandpa seems inclined to sit down, the little dog at once retires. —Our Dumb Animals.

Clean Hands.

Philip and Katy were much more together than brothers and sisters commonly are. Though very unlike, they liked each other's society, and were a mutual benefit to each other.

Katy, who was delicate, grew stronger and healthier by living so much out of doors with Philip. And the boy, who was inclined to be rough and careless, was daily trained and trimmed by his bright, kind little sister. Boys who have not the benefit of such loving, little pruning shears to snip off the crooked twigs as they sprout, miss a great deal.

Aunt Lois was "dreadful 'fraid Catherine would get to be a tom-boy," but her brother, Katy's father, said, "he hoped she would. Just think, Lois, how much sickness and trouble it would have saved you if you had been allowed to fish and drive around with me through the woods and meadows at her age."

Aunt Lois shook her head gravely. Little girls ought to be "little ladies," at any cost.

But all were glad to see the glow of health flush up on Katy's cheeks, even if it was a little brown.

She used to play and work in the garden, and get her hands sandy and muddy, but when she came in she always put them in the neatest possible order. She kept a strict look out for careless Philip, in this respect, also.

"Let me turn back your wristbands, Phil," she would say. "You can't half wash with them buttoned." She was sure to shove his cuffs as far back as she could, and see that his hands and wrists were perfectly clean.

"Will you take my knife to clean your nails?" she would ask.

"No, thanks," said Phil, accepting the hint, "I will use my own; it answers well enough. There, how will that do?" and he spread his hands out for inspection.

"Nicely," was Katy's answer, as they walked into dinner.

What a blessing if some other boys I know had tidy little sisters they were willing to hear to, who would give them line upon line as patiently, for it takes it to make the average boy keep his hands neat. And depend upon it, boys, clean hands tell a great deal about your character and future fortune—a great deal more than the little crooked lines inside of them which the gypsy fortune-teller makes so much account of.

Correspondence.

the very best qualifications for the place in each of the parties; and felt sure if the order of Masons would undertake the job and work it up the best they could, that they could control the nomination of every important officer. I learned that if they did, none but Masons would be nominated, and that would defeat the object I had in view, since if all nominations were Masons it would unite Anti-masons against it so the Masonic nominees could not be elected. But I did not desire the nomination nor election of Masons, but of the best men, irrespective of Masons or any other clan or clique. And I am satisfied that if the object of Masonry was as all the instinction, prompting, hints, etc, would imply received in taking two degrees, it would be practical through that order to revolutionize our system of politics so that none but suitable persons would be nominated for office. But as I found the order did not seek to accomplish anything of that sort, I have become satisfied to quit, for I would not pay dues, spend time to attend meetings, etc., with any society, even the church, if I did not think I could do more good to others than myself.

The reason I say it is vain to battle against secret societies is because they increase in strength and influence by the opposition they receive. Every effort to show their "cloven foot" but adds to their number. I know the same argument is used against the temperance movement; and rummies say that the harder you (temperance men and women) work, the more liquor there is drank. And I could almost believe that the more there is said against the use of tobacco the more there is used of the weed. But Freemasonry, when men meant what they said, and speculation and bribery in this then virgin Republic were unpopular; and when for men paid their debts if they could, and a bankrupt was not esteemed higher the larger his defalcation; and when for a man to ask for an office, was the sure way not to get it—Anti-masonry over-rode Masonry and caused it to hide and skulk for many years. But now they defy opposition, and if you would make an expose of their principles and give the public evidence of the iniquity wrought by designing men through the power secret society gives, you must proceed single-handed, while they will content themselves by denying that any seceders from the fraternity tell the truth, but all men (not Masons) are liars, etc. They march boldly on gaining in numbers, strength and influence by every turn of the thumb-screw their opponents see fit to make.

I am not acquainted with the higher degrees, but am satisfied that as far as I have gone in Masonry, the evil wrought out through Masons is not in the system, but in the hearts of individuals who have sinister motives and use the power the order gives to carry out those motives. The grangers originated from good motives, no doubt, as did Masonry; but they have (in this place) shown the cloven-foot right on the start, and have got to tack about and become less selfish in all their aims or never be a power for good in this section. You asked me what I thought of the Cynosure, and indirectly what I thought of Masonry. The foregoing is my reply, to which I hope you will respond. Yours with the best wishes for the development of truth. T. H.

REPLY TO THE ABOVE.

DEAR BROTHER: As you have given me liberty to make what use of your very frank and candid letter I think proper, I will ask the privilege of some spare corner of the Cynosure, hoping I may repeat some thoughts that may be of service to you and others in a similar situation. I am pleased that you are in sympathy with the object of the Cynosure, for while it indicates that your commital to Masonry, in two degrees, has not completely warped you, or destroyed that candor for which I always gave you credit, it augurs for an increase of light which, I trust, will soon lead you to see that you have not only made a sad mistake in joining the lodge, but committed a sin which I believe your goodness of heart will lead you thoroughly and openly to repent of.

The Morgan excitement that raged around the homes of our boyhood, it seemed to me, was enough to forever prevent any one who knew it, from becoming a Mason. You think it "vain to battle with such fearful odds." No, sir. I would rather battle it single-handed all my days and fall with my armor on, like Moses, short of the promised land, than enter the "covenant with death and hell" which even the Entered Apprentice does. "Shall we do evil that good may come?" But I question, very seriously, that "secrecy gives increased power to efforts for good." It does for evil, but the very nature of good demands reliance on God alone for increased power.

You say you are not acquainted with the higher degrees, nor can you be as a Mason, since each degree is sworn to keep its secrets from every preceding one. But, had you been, you would not have submitted to the degradation of being stripped and haltered and sworn to so fearful and abject a slavery. You will remember, in the second or Fellow-Craft degree, you swore to be "obedient to the Grand Lodge." But do you know what this Grand Lodge is? Not one Mason, as such, knows until he becomes a member of it; and not even then, unless he has, (according to Weishaupt, one of the principal founders, as quoted by Levington,) proved himself a Brutus, or Cataline, and ready to go every length" and "laid aside all his prejudices" (or religion). In other words, Grand Lodge. Masonry which is the only Masonry of America, is a scheme, concocted by the rankest infidels for the overthrow of all religion and civil government, as is clearly proved by Levington. He shows clearly that Anderson, a Scotchman, and Desaguillier, a Frenchman, both infidels, worked on the first three degrees from 1717, when the first Grand Lodge was formed, till about 1740, when they added others. Voltaire joined them about 1750, and began to boast of the power of secrecy, to accomplish what they had failed in, openly, i. e., overthrow the church. He was wont to say, "I am weary of hearing people say twelve men established Christianity. I will show that one can overthrow it."

I have not time to look up page and authority; but from Levington, and Bernard, and Greene, and Morgan, and Finney, and Richardson, and Sickles, and Mackey, and Duncan, and Oliver, and a number of other books in my possession, I am satisfied this is correct; that Masonry aims to destroy the conscience, familiarize to scenes of blood, and murder and sacrilege, and the final overthrow of religion and civil government. The Grand Lodge, made up of such men as described, control the whole thing, while they are utterly irresponsible, having absolute power over the lives and property of all under them, while they are not only free from taxation and all question, but absorb three-fourths of the fees of the lower members, to carry on their nefarious business, to feast themselves, and arm their Knights of which they boast there are 300,000 armed to the teeth, and ready to burst forth at a moment's warning, to do the bidding of "The Great Grands, High Priests, Kings, and All-Puissant ones" who set at the head.

As for Masons choosing "suitable persons as candidates for election," your idea of such, and the Masonic idea, differ. A Voltaire, or Weishaupt, are their beauideal of suitable persons. The French Revolution was no doubt a legitimate Masonic fruit. (Levington quotes) "A member of that lodge (Wisdom) boasted that he belonged to a lodge in Germany, in which the French Revolution was planned." "Fifty thousand Knights, armed and trained, burst forth upon France like a river of burning lava." And Masons boast that 300,000 are now ready for similar work. A Mr. Paine, of Boston, shows "that Aaaron Burr's conspiracy was carried on by the Royal Arch cypher, under the secrecy of Masonry. Your charity leads you to believe "that the end is not in the system" but by your own showing, the whole thing is better for bad men, than good. Good men don't need it; bad men do. The very presence of good men, like yourself, is a hindrance to the work of the lodge.

With me it is not a question whether opposition will increase the number of Masons. I leave that with God, and want to do what is right. As to the "grangers" I will not now speak. I want you to read the Christian Cynosure, carefully, criticise boldly, speak candidly, and remember the time is coming when that which was whispered in the ear in secret shall be proclaimed openly." And if you find you have done wrong joining such a brotherhood, repent as you hope for heaven, and do what you can to save others. I can respond "in best wishes for the development of the truth."

R. FAUROT.

Enforcing Discipline.

ELM GROVE, Holt Co., Mo., Aug. 11, 1874.

BRO. K:—We are of late having considerably excitement in regard to the "grange." It became my duty as a minister of the United Brethren church to see that her laws were enforced. Accordingly I went to work. Those of our members who had joined the grange were called to report to the rule, which caused a terrible squirming among the big and little grangers, male and female.

Not being well drilled in secrecy, they lost their jewel (a silent tongue) and came forward in defense of their heathen-derived institution. One man was loud in praise of its virtues, and the dear sisters nodded amen. I told the latter it was my impression if their lady officer "Ceres" knew the character of the goddess she represented, she would be ashamed of her namesake.

I referred to works used in the instalation of their chaplain as being blasphemous, viz., "Through you we expect to hold converse with the Master of the great grange above." This was vehemently denied as being a true quotation, but when I pressed the question, their main spokesman said, he didn't think it was there. How is it? Will some one conversant with the grange ritual inform us? A number in the country have declared the grange anti-Christian and a humbug, and left the institution forever. A few months ago a granger in this county died, the grange at once gave him a hoist to the "grange above." I wonder if our grange friends expect to follow their favorite occupation, farming, when they get to heaven. How would it look to see a granger plowing up the golden streets of the New Jerusalem?

I write more particularly to say something in regard to our political movement. I have cast my last vote for a secret society man, and am anxiously awaiting the "coming man." I wish to say if it is our object to unite men of all parties in opposition to lodge tyranny, it should be so represented in our platform, and our Cynosure and its correspondents say less in regard to past differences. While our paper plainly indicates that it is Republican and has so many references to past abolitionism, we cannot hope to gain many from other parties into our ranks.

I love the Cynosure. Individually it is none too radical for me, but let us unfurl our banner to the breeze, urge men of all parties to unite with us in our contest with the secret foe and lifting our cries to God for victory we shall succeed. God grant it. Amen.

JOHN B. DAVIS.

Reforming the Church.

The Methodist Free Press not long since published a letter from John G. Rownd, preacher in charge of the new Free Meshodist church of Summerfield, Ohio. The occasion of the letter is a communication from a mother whose sons have been converted, but are in danger of being led into the pithole of the lodge by Masonic preachers. Bro. R. says:

"Well can I call to mind when my oldest son was happily converted to God; and without my knowledge one of the Jesuits of the M. E. church, the preacher in charge of the circuit, decoyed him away into the Masonic lodge, by telling him "that it was a good thing"—next to Christianity. Why not tell him that it was next to the M. E. church and tell the truth? For the M. E. church to-day is the great central power of Masonry upon this continent. But I thank God that my son got to see the deception and fraud into which he had been led by the jesuitical minister of the church, and I thank God that he had the courage to come out and "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." But O, dear brother, how his faith is weakened in the ministry. No doubt, brother, you think that you are doing something for the reformation of the M. E. church; but are you not aware that for years she has been sinking deeper and deeper into the unhallowed vortex of Masonic guile? And is not it sometimes impressed upon your mind that in your earnest pleading with dissatisfied persons as in the case of this dear lady that they nevertheless continue within the pale of the M. E. church, that you are becoming partakers in other men's sins, binding the conscience of such, and measurably encouraging the anomalous beings known as Masonic Methodist preachers and thereby encouraging the institution they apparently love better than Christ, the church, or human souls? Have you not learned that the unhallowed affections of the church and the Masonic lodge is Satan's masterpiece of strategy? I wish you success in reforming the church of your choice, but can give you little encouragement; point us to a successful attempt of the kind recorded on the pages of history, unless, perhaps, the Jewish church in the Babylonish captivity, but remember that was in captivity and not in prosperity; under the law and not under the Gospel, which says, "Come out from among them and be ye separate, etc.

PAPER FROM HOPS.—The hop vine, as a material for making paper, is receiving increased attention, and is likely to repay trouble and cost of experiments. Under chemical treatment it is found to yield a long, strong, and fine fiber. The process of preparation is said to be of a novel character.

THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.—There are at present 81 stations, extending from Cape Cod to Cape May: 32 wrecks were reported last year, 235 lives were imperilled, but only one life lost. The cost of maintaining the service was $87,893. Contracts have been made for the establishment of 21 new stations.

Of the 60,000 miles of railway in the United States one-sixth center in Chicago, representing a capital of $400,000,000, and earn over $82,000,000 yearly; wholesale business of 1873 amounted to $430,000,000, which was a gain of 18 per cent. on 1872, and 31 per cent. on 1870; 25,000,000 bushels of wheat was received in 1873. The receipts of stock yards for 1873 was 761,428 cattle, 4,337,750 hogs, and 291,734 sheep, and total value of receipts, $91,321,162. Manufacturers for 1873, $179,831,000, which shows an increase in the last three years of 137 per cent. and in the last 13 years 1230 per cent.

ODD FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1874, by Ezra A. Cook & Co., with the Librarian of Congress Washington, D. C.

REBEKAH, OR LADIES' DEGREE (continued).

Vice Grand: Such is the response of true, heroic woman, for these are duties to which your sex have ever been the most faithful. But, in Holy Writ, where these tender duties are taught us, it also declares, nay, more, commands, "when thou doest thine alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." Can you perform these duties thus?

A. by Conductor.—We can.

Vice Grand: Ah! but will you? Will you devote yourselves to this work in our way? Will you silently do good, as good ought always to be performed; and, in spite of envyings or calumny, keep your charities and your labors of love secret from the selfish world? Will you pursue the thorny pathway that we have trod, where the slanders of prejudice and bigotry assail on every side, still doing good for its own sake alone—returning kindness for hostility—and ever striving, quietly and unboastingly, to mitigate the vast amount of suffering and pain in our world?

A.—We will.

Vice Grand: You must be warned before you proceed. We seek to impose on you no obligation that in after life you may regret. No reluctant vows are asked for here. Pause, therefore! for you may not think—you cannot realize how difficult is the duty you are, in common with us, about to assume. It is a constant war with selfishness, unaided by even human praise, for which alone so many toils are daily undertaken. Our law is, "let thy works of duty be secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Behold in that law the only recompense you can hope for—the only praise to which you can aspire. We have none other to offer. Still more. Consider the sacrifice implied in that second great commandment—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." You are yet free. Pause, then, before you consent to take upon yourselves obligations that will bind you, as they have bound us before you, to duties like these. Pause and reflect—for it may happen that you shall be called upon to give up the pleasures of life to minister at the couch of suffering—you may be summoned from the whirl of gayety to stand, with brethren and with sisters, at a bedside of anguish—you may be asked to forego the pleasures of some social evening circle to watch through the long vigils of night, the struggle between Life and Death, and to pour oil, if possible, into the expiring lamp of Life.

(Aloud to the Inside Guardian)—Worthy Guardian: Unbolt the door, and let it open for any lady who desires to retire.

A.—I will, worthy Vice Grand.

Vice Grand to Conductor—(after a pause): What! not one left us. Oh! how firm is woman in the cause of sorrow and humanity. How often has she trodden the wine-press of bitterness to share the woes of him who, with her, toils through the rugged pathways of life? How quick is she to fly to relive, when she hears the wail of the heart-broken, or the moan of the destitute. And it is not strange, therefore, that when suspicion and bigotry, selfishness and contempt, leagued together to stifle our existence and crush our order, the bright eye of woman cheered us on in our labor of love. Some few, indeed, joined those Pharisees, who declared that no good thing could come out of our Nazareth. But woman, as a sex, true to herself, her instincts and her impulses, smiled upon our labors, rejoiced as we prospered, defended our principles and honored our name. Grateful for her thus becoming a shield to ward off all attacks, we have established this degree, as a testimonial that the confidence thus reposed in us is most cordially and heartily reciprocated. While conferring it upon her, we not only honor and confide in the sex as we should, but we also realize a long-cherished plan of an organized co-operation with us in visiting the sick—relieving the distressed—and protecting the orphan.

Before, however, imparting the secrets of this degree to you, it is your duty to take a solemn obligation with us, both to impress on your mind and conscience the humane duties of our order, and also to rivet on your remembrance the deep importance of strictly guarding the tests of your degree, that you may, while enabled by them to recognize a brother or sister of this degree, also protect yourselves and us from imposition and deceit.

With this explanation of our object in asking you to pledge to us, and to each other, your word of honor, for no further bond do we ask, are you willing to enter into an obligation with us?

A. (by the candidates)—We are!

[The Vice Grand will then call the husbands of the candidates forward, who, with the ladies, will place their right hands on the Bible, which is to be open at the 15th chapter of Exodus, and the ladies will each repeat the following obligation—the lodge standing.]

I, ————, in the presence of the members of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows of ——— Lodge, No. —, of the State of ———, do most solemnly promise that I will never reveal to any one this degree, or the pass words, signs, countersign and token belonging to it, and now about to be entrusted to me, except to a member of this degree of Odd-fellowship, whom I may find, on due trial, to be equally in possession of them; or when in the discharge of official duties within the lodge; and to all due secrecy in this respect, I hereby pledge my sacred word of honor, without any mental reservation whatever, and with a full determination to preserve my plighted faith inviolate until the end of life.

Vice Grand to Conductor: Conductor, you will now present these sisters to the Noble Grand for the necessary instructions.

Conductor.—I will, worthy Vice Grand.

[The Vice Grand will give one rap, the brethren will resume their seats, the husbands of the ladies also, and the Conductor will then proceed with ladies to the Noble Grand's chair.]

Conductor to Noble Grand: Noble Grand, I have the pleasure of presenting to you these ladies, wives of enterprising brothers of our order, for further instruction in the work of this degree. They have passed honorably through all our ordeals, and have pledged to our worthy Vice Grand their sacred honor never to reveal the secrets now about to be intrusted to their keeping.

Noble Grand: Reposing confidence, ladies, in your plighted faith—I now proceed to give you such instructions as appertain to this degree, and as will also enable you to know a brother or sister who has received it.

Sisters' Trial Sign.

Salute to officers and Bros.' Sign.

1st. THE PERMANENT PASS WORD.—Miriam.

2d. THE TEST OR TRIAL SIGN FOR A SISTER.—Close thumb and little finger of right hand and place the three open fingers, spread out, on anything except your own person.

3d. THE Countersign or Brother's Answer.—Close all but index finger of right hand over thumb; raise hand and put ball of index finger on side of nose, about an inch above the end. [This is also the salute to the "Chair" given by both brothers and sisters on entering a lodge of this degree. Brothers recognize each other in this degree by the same sign, but it is seldom used for that purpose.]

Let me state to you distinctly and emphatically that these signs are never to be idly used, merely for pleasure or curiosity. They are intended for useful purposes only; and though you are at liberty to practice them in the secret privacy, with others whom you may know, OF YOUR OWN KNOWLEDGE, to have received them legally, you are not allowed to use them at home or abroad, without some practical, useful end in view. In times of distress, or peril, or difficulty, you are not only at liberty to use them, but are also instructed to do so.

4th. The annual pass-word of this degree for the present year is————. [Manoah, or whatever has been appointed for the year by the G. L. U. S.]

This last word is intended as a further proof test, not only of membership, but also, and specially, of good standing. It is, therefore, changed annually by the Right Worth Grand Lodge of the United States, and goes into operation on the 1st of January of each year. You will receive all new annual pass-words from your husbands, who alone can instruct you therein hereafter; and you will, therefore, see the importance of the exercise of your influence with him, that he shall preserve his good standing in the lodge, morally as well as pecuniarily; as if either is forfeited, your rights, which are dependent on his, will be lost with them. This annual pass-word is used as a test thus: After having received some sign, which would seem to indicate membership in this degree, you are at liberty to ask her or him for the pass-word, and upon being answered, "commence yourself," you will commence with the last letter of the word. This is replied to by the person you challenge with the first letter of the word, and you then respond with the middle or any of the middle letters, to be replied to, "even so." The pass word is never to be given in full under any circumstances whatever—never to be written—never even to be spoken as a word, except in giving instructions as in the present case; and especially no experiments are to be tried with it for the mere sake of experiment, without some useful or friendly purpose in view.

The Noble Grand of the lodge with which your husbands are connected will communicate the annual pass-word to you, in case of their accidental absence; or, if they should be deceased, the same officer will continue to place you in possession of it so long as you remain widows of Odd-fellows.

[Practice the ladies in this, and then prove them in the signs, &c.]

Noble Grand (resuming): Our sisters can now be seated, fronting this chair.

Noble Grand: He who reads the page of Holy Writ intelligently, often finds his memory wandering back to those sketches of the women of the Bible, which appear as delightful episodes in the great history—linking it, by a chain that all can see and feel, with our own realizations of domestic life. And woman needs no higher eulogy than to be judged by those noble specimens of her sex, immortalized by having their names embalmed in the book of books. What a glorious galaxy glitter on those sacred pages.

We point you not alone to the beautiful and graceful REBEKAH, the daughter of Bethuel—who, pointed out by God himself to Eliezer as the fitting wife for Isaac, goes forth from the vale of Haran at that bidding, turning her back upon home, family and friends to travel the journey of life with a stranger of a distant land.

Nor yet alone to the MOTHER OF SAMPSON, who held discourse, timid yet confiding, with the angel, whose name is Wonderful.

Nor yet alone to HANNAH, who dedicated her first-born to that illustrious service of the Almighty, which has linked the name of Samuel to all our brightest recollections of prophecy and priesthood.

"St. John's Day."

[From the Watchman and Reflector.]

DEAR WATCHMAN,—As I am a Baptist, I may be allowed to have a special interest in the history of John the Baptist. It is claimed largely, though not universally, by our Masonic friends, that this distinguished Forerunner of our Saviour was born on the 24th of June, and also that he was a an eminent Freemason. From both of these assumptions, however, I am compelled to dissent; and for the following reasons: According to the narrative in Luke, first and second chapters, the birth of John was about six months before that of Jesus; and as it is very certain that the birth of Jesus was not so late in the year as the winter month of December, when no flocks with their shepherds were "abiding in the open fields by night," so the birth of John, being six months earlier than that of Christ, could not have been in the month of June. And this, too, aside from the fact that the New Testament gives no information whatever as to which month of the year the birth of either took place.

But was John the Baptist a Freemason? Surely not. For there is not the least proof in the Gospel history to support any such claim; nor, I may add, in any other reliable history. More than this, Freemasonry itself had no existence for many centuries after John the Baptist. This being so, all the pretences that Solomon, and Hiram, of Tyre, were Masons, fall to the ground. In support of this I give the following, from the oration of my talented friend, Rev. William S. Stuley, delivered at the dedication of the Masonic Temple in Boston, June 24, 1868, as reported in the Boston Journal of the next day:

"It is not a pleasant task to disturb the complacency of men who are determined to enroll Nimrod, and Moses, and Solomon, and the King of Tyre, and his namesake, the widow's son, among the actual past members of our order; but I am constrained to believe that these distinguished men were not Freemasons, except in the Pickwickian intimations of our ritual, to which intimations no man of research will insist upon giving a literal construction.

TRUE ORIGIN OF THE ORDER.

"But according to the best authorities our order had its origin among operative Masons, in the early part of the middle ages. It sprang from the difficulty of finding enough men of skill in any one country of Europe to build the cathedral and other ecclesiastical structures of that period. To obviate this difficulty, skilful men from various countries formed a fraternity of architects and builders or masons, and they traveled from country to country, as their services were required. They encamped in tents or huts by themselves, and framed regulations for their own government according to the peculiar circumstances of their occupation and the itinerant lives they were called to lead. They styled themselves "Free," because they were at liberty to work whenever they chose. Many of the public buildings of England, in the Gothic style, were erected by men in companies of this sort; and it is quite reasonable to suppose, as some distinguished historians have done, that the institution of speculative Freemasonry was derived from this professional brotherhood of traveling architects and artisans. They, doubtless, had signs, and tokens, and emblems, by which they might know one another, and which tended to promote mutual assistance and good fellowship.

AN ANCIENT LODGE.

"In the tenth century the Freemasons of England enjoyed the special protection of King Athelstane, receiving from him a charter to hold their stated assemblies and to enact laws for their corporate government. As early as the year 926, a lodge was insituted in Yorkshire, believed to have been continued in regular succession at that place down to the present day."

Although the orator in the above extract pretty decidedly repudiates the pretence that Freemasonry existed so long ago as Solomon, or John the Baptist, and even confines the fraternity of operative Masons, in which speculative Freemasonry had its origin, to a period long after the Christian era, he does not attempt to prove that Masonry, as it now exists, even in its simplest elements, was known until many centuries afterwards. The period when the institution of Freemasonry as we now have it, began, cannot, we think, by any reliable authority, be dated further in the past than the early part of the last century. Hence all its pretences that "Solomon, and the King of Tyre, and his namesake, the widow's son," and John the Baptist, and John the beloved disciple, were Freemasons, are too puerile to be admitted by any "man of research." T.

Mutually Dependent.

This country has so long enjoyed a high state of prosperity that it will be hard work to come down to lower gains, or perhaps to loss or ruin. To any reflecting mind the proposition that the country can be very long prosperous while one part is in distress, is almost self-evident. New York has perhaps, thought it had nothing to do in this great contest between the farmers and the railroads, but I think New York, a well as any other large supply points will find out that if the farmer is not prospering, then nobody can long prosper. The towns and cities may live off of each other for a while, but when the farmer finally finds himself without money, and unable to go into the town and buy the dry goods, boots and shoes, hardware, etc., of the country dealer—the country dealer, of course, can't sell the goods, can't pay for them, and what is more to the point, can't buy any more. It seems to me that this state of affairs must in the end, tell upon not only the retail dealer, but upon the wholesale dealer and importer. One thing is now very certain, let the couse be what it may, the farmers of the West have no money. If the rest of the country can prosper while the farmers are in distress, then there need be no anxiety or fear as to the future business, everything will go on prosperously.—Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hnndred pages jnst issued by him, purporting to give a full and accnrate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abdnction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The anthor belonged to the samo lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all abont that event which made snch a sensation throughout the conntry forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more cnrious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The anthor opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Chnrch; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they pnrport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book mnst be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acqnainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y.,, and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abdnction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actnally Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abdncted and Mnrdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS. in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

PHELPS' SECRET SOCIETIES Ancient and Modern.

A NEW BOOK OF GREAT INTEREST.

This work is particularly commended to the attention of Officers of The Army and Navy, The Bench and The Clergy.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

"The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Filmore's and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A brief outline of the progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, The uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion."

Notices of the Press.

The author traces back the origin of Masonry and its evil influences, particularly as seen and felt in our own country; the Tammany Ring, Credit Mobilier, &c. He shows the subserviency of some of our public men, such as Fillmore and Webster, to its dominating power.—United Presbyterian.

The author has presented information concerning the Old Mysteries and their antagonism to Christianity; the Masonry of Washington and his virtual secession from it; the harlotry of Masonry, English and American, in assuming charge of international politics, and treaties between England and the United States; the disgusting intervention of the lodge at the close of the French and German war; the Masonic baptisms; all these and more Gen. Phelps has given, accompanied with clear philosophical dissertations of his own.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage, 3 cents per 10 Tracs. Tracts Free.

Odd-fellowship Illustrated.

Nor yet alone to DEBORAH, who, as has been so beautifully said, in that era of her widowhood, rose, in times of trouble, like a morning star over the night of Israel's calamities; and at whose word the stars, in their courses, fought against Sisera.

Nor yet alone to that unselfish and queenly ESTHER, who promptly risked station and life to shield her people and her race.

Nor would we point attention and thought alone to RUTH, whose character is enshrined in the pastoral record that bears her name, and that has handed down to us her fortitude, her affection, and her piety in a simple narrative more thrillingly fascinating than the most highly wrought scenes of fiction. Need we even allude, in passing, to that heroic and well remembered decision she exhibited in her sad, but fearless reply to Naomi, when, in spite of the dangers of toil and exposure, of poverty and trial, of frowning and adverse prospects, she attested her filial piety in that strain of as lofty and impassioned eloquence as ever fell from human lips—"Entreat me not to leave thee, for whither thou goest I will go—where thou lodgest I will lodge—thy people shall be my people—and thy God my God. Where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried. The Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

Nor yet alone would we cite you to the history of SARAH, emphatically chief among the mothers of the Bible—the ancestress of Israel's hosts—the wife of the patriarch of patriarchs—at whose tent the angels of the Lord sat down at meat—and who was indeed the most specially honored of God.

Nor yet alone to the vestal prophetess, MIRIAM, the sister of Moses and Aaron, who stands forth inferior to none in whatever makes a true woman memorable in action or suffering—who, in the afflictions of Egypt, in the triumph of the Red Sea, and in the perils of the Wilderness, towers resplendent in her zeal and her devotion. From the time that at the river's bank she watched her infant brother's ark, through that long journey, where quails and manna mysteriously fed the wandering hosts, and water poured from the flinty rock to assuage their thirst, till the hour that entombed her in her sequestered grave, she proved herself a woman in all that is noble and pure and holy. And it was no unmeaning song of rejoicing that poured from her lips, when, at the head of the Hebrew women, on the bank of the rapidly closing Red Sea, her clear, loud voice rang forth in notes of rejoicing and praise to God—

> Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea,
> Jehovah has triumphed—his people are free.

But the history of these and others that we might name, whom the inspired penmen felt must be recorded to make their testimony perfect—such a record, taken in the aggregate, is a nobler testimony to woman, a worthier eulogy of her rank and honor than she can find in the histories of thousands of earth's mightiest—of Elizabeth, of Cleopatra, of Catharine, or Isabella. Such we do not cite for your emulation and imitation. But rather the record of those whom the Bible commends—who signalized their lives, not by bloody victories on fields of carnage and of death—not by despotic sway over a nation of millions—not by the meretricious charms of beauty—but by their zeal in doing good—in vindicating the true modesty and worth of woman's natural character—in pouring the oil of consolation into the wounds of the afflicted—in whispering the words of sympathy in the ears of the heart-stricken.

Such, too, is woman's noblest work! It is a duty that heavenly angels might not, nay do not, scorn to perform. It is that sphere in which your sex has gathered its most unfading laurels. It is the promptings, too, of that warm and genial benevolence, which, though in woman is the instinct of her nature, we band together in lodges and societies to cultivate and enforce by precept and by law, in the more sterile hearts of the sterner sex. Nobly, right nobly, has she performed her mission. Poets have sung in glowing numbers of her constancy in hours of trial, of darkness and of peril—of her labors at the bedside of the sick and the afflicted—of her patient endurance of life's roughest lot when shared by him for whom she has given up all else this side of heaven. Wherever sorrow's cry is heard, wherever sickness lays its paralyzing hand—follow, ladies, the innate sympathies of your nature. Wherever the hardships of adversity fall the heaviest upon those about you, be it yours, as far as possible, to soften the blow. Wherever misery can be ameliorated, or keen anguish assuaged, remember that you are women; and, if further promptings to duty could be needed, remember the solemn obligation you have this night voluntarily taken, and write upon the tablet of your hearts that Golden Rule—"Whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

While we shall expect the prompt and cheerful performance of these duties by these now affiliated with our order as you are, we pledge to you duty in return. The benefits of our Order are not confined to our own brethren, nor indeed to our own sex. Look at that anguished, grief-stricken widow, as she returns from the drear solitude of the grave-yard and the tomb to her desolate home. How lonely are its silent rooms. Every echo of her footsteps, as she passes through them, reminds her of him whose welcome step no mortal ear shall ever listen to again. Every glance rests on some object which awakens memories of the past, and every thought turns back upon that loved one whose love was of her very life a part. How dark and melancholy the prospect before her—gloomy and sad as the heart within. Bereft of him to whom she looked with such trusting confidence, she is to struggle with a desolate heart, for that stinted and grudged pittance which is too oft the widow's recompense for her hours of cheerless toil. But no! the widow of the Odd-fellow is preserved from such a gloomy lot. At that hour, when life to the bereaved one seems almost a burden—when it seems as if hope and happiness had both been entombed with the loved but departed one—when the future seems clouded in impenetrable gloom—when loneliness, sad and drear and dismal, seems the widow's lot—our order comes like an angel of peace and throws across the gloomy prospect bright rays of light and happiness. It comes! and that bereaved widow feels that she has thrown around her a protecting cordon of warm hands and hearts, who will cherish her and hers for the sake of him whose love she cherishes beyond the grave. It comes! and she feels, or, if she does not, she may feel, that whenever the rough winds of adversity strive to smite her, she has a rock upon which she can lean with trusting confidence—ready, when needed, to open, as at the touch of Moses' rod, and afford comfort and sustenance. And she finds at last, if prejudice has darkened her vision before, that our order is indeed a father to its fatherless,—that

> We seek to dry the widow's gushing tears.
> We seek to calm the trembling orphan's fears,
> We seek to raise humanity above
> The ills of life by ministries of love;
> And when the tale is told, and man resigns his trust,
> We seek, in Friendship's name, to monument his dust.

But we need not add more. We have alluded to some of the duties enjoined by Odd-fellowship. It is strange in a cold, cal-enlating world like ours, where so many walk through life with ears hermetically sealed against the calls of humanity, encased in a frozen garb that repulses all approach—petrifying what little heart and soul they own—we say it is ODD, to see a society like ours, banded together for the benevolent duties we have bound ourselves to perform. Hence we are ODD-FELLOWS. To-night, you have entered with us into a closer bond than ever before—you have assumed a part of our obligations—you are become of us and with us. Learn then, in conclusion, that to rectify, to correct this besetting sin of selfishness is one of the highest aims and objects of our order. It teaches us that there is but one family, the whole human race—and that we are sent here together—the rich and the poor—the haughty and the humble—not as cumberers of the earth, but as sharers of each other's burdens. It teaches us that, wherever we hear the sigh of sorrow, the moan of the heart-broken, the appeal of the destitute, or the wail of the miserable, we should be quick in our ministrations of mercy, not passing by on the other side, but flying to relieve. It teaches us that we are sent here to labor for our fellow-men, for our age, for our country. That, when we shall have passed away into the stern realities of the hereafter, we may leave behind us a name; honored and beloved for the good we have sought, even if ineffectually, to accomplish—for the happiness we have striven to create—for the misery we have labored to ameliorate—a history more valuable in the sight of Him above than that of chieftain, warrior, or sage.

Teaching such lessons within its walls—built on these immutable corner-stones, Friendship, Love, and Truth, the mighty fabric of Odd-fellowship rears its stately form towards the skies; and though the storms of opposition may beat around its base, and the surges of prejudice strive to engulph it in the billows that they hurl upon it, its stately and majestic form will still remain unharmed amid the contending tempests; and crumble into atoms only when the earth upon which it stands yields in the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds. There it will stand

> As some tall cliff that lifts its mighty form,
> Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm;
> Though round its breast the rolling clouds may spread,
> Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

Noble Grand (to the ladies): You will now rise.

Noble Grand: Having entered within our sacred circle, and assumed with us obligations like those we have spoken of, it now becomes my pleasurable duty in the closing ceremony of your initiation to confer on you the badge appropriate to this degree. It is a pink and green ribbon, emblematic, as you well know, of steadfast Friendship and eternal Love, twisted or interwined together like this; and this combination of colors may be thus worn whenever you see fit to do so, as a bow, a collar, a bracelet, or on any part of the dress as a trimming. When you see such a combination you may prove the wearer as has been stated to you.

To Conductor: You will now present the ladies in turn, and by name.

[As each lady is presented she will advance in front of the Noble Grand's chair, and bend forward so that he can invest her gracefully with a badge or collar of pink and green ribbon of about an inch in width, a number of which must be provided by each lodge for this purpose—kept in the private receptacle of the degree books, and never exposed except when conferring this degree. When the lodge is closed each lady will divest herself of this regalia, and leave it in the lodge. The Noble Grand will confer the badge on each lady separately, thus—stepping down from his seat for that purpose.]

Mrs. ————, receive this collar as a token of the Degree of Rebekah, to which, in the name and by the authority of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, I now declare you admitted. Faithful to your own obligations, you will ever find us faithful to ours. Fail not—falter not—weary not in well-doing.

Noble Grand (resuming): I now declare this Degree Lodge closed in Friendship, Love and Truth.

CLOSING CEREMONY.

Noble Grand to the Lodge: Officers and Members: Our business being concluded, you will please be standing and assist in the performance of the closing ceremonies.

[Calls up.]

CLOSING ODE.

> Good night! a truthful, kind adieu;
> "May joy be with you all,"
> Who here the social bond renew,
> And love our sacred hall.
> Good night! Our Order's triple chain,
> Keep ever strong and bright;
> Each evil act and thought restrain,
> Adieu! Good night! Good night!

Noble Grand to Chaplain: Our Worthy Chaplain will please perform the duties of his office.

[Prayer by Chaplain.]

Noble Grand to Warden: Warden, you will please declare this lodge closed in the Degree of Rebekah.

Warden: By order of the Noble Grand I declare this lodge closed in the Degree of Rebekah.

Noble Grand: Officers and members, so be it.

Members: So be it!

[Noble Grand gives one rap.]

Topics of the Time.

"The poor always ye have with you," said Christ, implying that their necessities should never be spurned. The free excursions to the country for poor children in several of our large cities is a commendable effort in this direction. In New York they have been carefully managed by a board of responsible business men who report that subscriptions to the fund this year have enabled the trustees to give eleven excursions, in which over 22,000 boys and girls have left the hot and dusty streets of the city for the country. These children have been well fed as well as amused at the small cost of about thirty-six cents each, while the food furnished has been abundant in quantity and the best of its kind. Two more excursions are to be undertaken before the season closes. In Chicago the project is comparatively new and the July conflagration was a temporary check, but three successful excursions have been given by rail and steamer. One for the children of each division of the city. Appetites whetted by want keenly appreciated the ride, the romp and the refreshments. Every such brief acquaintance with the country is a capital investment in health and morals for a great city.

INDIAN WRONGS.—Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, writes thus of the abuses of aboriginal rights in the North-west, to which Gen. Custer's raid into Dakota gives a present and forcible interest: "Over one-half of our vast territory once belonged to the Chippewas. It was an Indian paradise. Its lakes and rivers were filled with fish, and each autumn brought the wild rice, God's manna, for the red man. The forest and prairie were full of game, and the gaunt famine never came to the hunter's wigwam. We bought it all for a few cents an acre. We made pledges of everything a Christian people can do for a heathen people. I will not speak of the way human cupidity was enriched by the treaty. We did not keep our faith. Our politicians made the agencies the reward of political favorites. We not only permitted dishonesty and fraud—the fire-water flowed like a stream of death into their country, their wives and daughters were corrupted, and the heathen were dragged to a depth of degradation their fathers never knew. Worse than this, while we permitted every evil to destroy them, we left them wholly without law. No white man has ever been punished for the robbery, seduction, or murder of an Indian. We have never attempted to give them law to protect the innocent, or punish the guilty. They have killed each other on the streets of our cities and villages—no questions were asked. We have never attempted to redress their wrongs."

FALL POLITICS.—Fourteen State governors are to be elected between September 1st and the 3d of November. Two State elections were held in August for congressmen, and the whole sisterhood of the Union, excepting New Hampshire, Connecticut and Oregon will follow. Twenty of these States also elect minor State officers. To carry on these elections there are already in the field the Independent, Republican, Democrat (old line), Liberal Republican Democrat and Temperance parties, which will work against monopolies, against the "war of races," for simple existence, for hard money, and against the saloon. At the South there seems to be approaching a struggle for the supremacy of race. In the midst of these conflicting elements another element is showing a brighter light on the sombre horizon. Party independence and intelligent use of the ballot is more and more talked about, and it is hoped will become a power against which the strategy of political charletans and beggars will be blunted.

EQUALITY BEFORE THE LAW.—Quite a number of newspapers in commenting on the Civil Rights bill have denounced it as an attempt to force the whites into social relations with blacks. Such is not its object and what it really designs may be seen by the following incident: Bishop Haven, of the M. E. church, while traveling in Georgia was of course allowed a seat in the first-class car, while members of his church, well dressed, well behaved persons, who had paid their fare and were guilty of nothing but the color God had given them, were forced into what Mr. Haven indignantly denominates "the cattle pen." This is the state of things that the Civil Rights bill is designed to correct. It says to common carriers and all other individuals and corporations transacting public business, You must not discriminate against a man because he is dark colored, or has been oppressed. It is a depth of injustice which devils might envy, to degrade men and women two hundred and fifty years; to whip and brand and bruise them until life is a heavy load which they would gladly lay down; to clothe them in rags, to feed them on pig's food, and put him in the penitentiary who should teach them to read; and then say you are low, ignorant, degraded men and so you must keep off by yourselves and ride in "the cattle pen," while we, your oppressors, who stole and whipped you and made you ignorant and debased, go in the first-class coach. So long as this state of things continue, there is no equality before the law for black men. So long as this injustice is maintained there will be wars and rumors of wars. If the whites of the South do not repent their centuries of cruelty, and even at this late hour do what is fair and right by the patient and long-suffering negro, their land will be burned with fire and sowed with salt. The curse of God and indignation of honest men will abide on its deserted fields and the wild beast of the forest will seek their prey in desolate cities whose foundations were laid in blood.

Patience.

Let me not dream in vain dispair,
That progress stays her steps for me;
The puny leverage of a hair
A planet's impulse well may spare,
A drop of dew the tided sea.

The loss, if loss there be, is mine;
And yet not mine, if understood;
And one shall grasp, and one resign,
One drink life's rue, and one its wine,
And God shall make the balance good.

Oh power to do! oh baffled will!
Oh prayer and action, ye are one,
What may not serve may yet fulfill
The hardest task of standing still:
And good but wished, with God is done.

Yale Secret Societies—Their Effect on the Discipline and Study of the College.

[From the Boston Globe, July 2.]

NEW HAVEN, June 29, 1874.

At the graduates' dinner recently held at Alumni Hall, the venerable and much-revered ex-President was called upon to respond to the toast, "Yale—Its Past, Present and Future." His remarks were very facetious and full of wisdom. Toward the close of his address, he raised his voice in warning, urging that, in the midst of substantial splendors rising around, care must be taken to maintain the vigor of the intellectual growth, so that it should keep pace with the material developement of the college. Further endowments of professorships should be made, new scholarships established, so that the price of tuition need not be raised; for the college was intended not merely for the sons of the rich, but for the sons of the poor as well. This had been, and always should be, the policy of the institution.

It is true that the college has always been pervaded with a democratic spirit, and the rich and the poor have stood on equal footing; but this has of late years been changed to a considerable extent by the existence of secret societies within her borders, which modify somewhat the old time rule of equality. At the alumni meeting, last summer, a loud and vigorous protest was raised by the old graduates against the secret societies, particularly the societies of Senior year, because to their growth in power and influence was mainly attributed the gradual decay and final overthrow of the open literary societies, Livonia and Brothers in Unity. Several prominent graduates urged most eloquently that the ancient literary societies should be revived, and demanded the abolition, if it were necessary, of all class, narrow and exclusive secret organizations which might prevent their resuscitation and retard their growth. It was universally conceded, and is, to-day, by everybody at all conversant with college affairs, that the secret societies, particularly the Senior society of Skull and Bones, and a rival organization of later birth, and a feeble imitation, Scroll and Key, were mainly instrumental in bringing about their destruction.

It would certainly seem as though some remedy ought to be proposed for the wrongs, injuries and mischiefs entailed by the secret societies; for not alone have their evil workings resulted in the overthrow of the open societies, but their deadly influence is exhibited in numberless other directions. In the Freshman societies but little harm is done because they are not of an exclusive character, and the exercises are almost wholly of a literary nature. They are institutions of a mild and inoffensive type. The Sophomore societies are, however, almost wholly given up to the species of entertainment which, in the popular slang phrase, is denominated "bumming," and with them begins the process of selection. The Junior societies are devoted partly to literary culture, and partially to the cultivation of conviviality. In this year some of the worst features of the system crop out. Much injustice is done by the coalitions, Holy or un-Holy Alliances on a small scale, in which two societies join against the non-society men or neutrals; or one society with the neutrals against the other society in parcelling out the lion's share of the elective class honors.

This last-named evil appears also in the societies of Senior year, although it is only one and among the least of their many disagreeable and injurious features. They are in number only two, and the membership of each is limited to fifteen, but in wealth, power, exclusiveness and a certain haughty intolerance they are beyond comparison. Indeed, they are nothing more nor less than two aristocracies which are destroying root and branch the spirit of democratic equality, which has been old Yale's proudest and highest title to distinction. One of these societies, Skull and Bones, was founded in 1833, although it puts in, not out, a claim of antiquity extending back to somewhere near the time of the deluge. Scroll and Key was not organized until 1852. The latter society is much inferior in prestige to the former, but both together wield a terrible and greatly disproportionate power in all college affairs. This is not known, or, at least, fully understood and appreciated by the older graduates. The old members talk quite freely in regard to the societies and discuss their distinctive features with little reservation, but the active members and graduates of only a few years standing assume an air of lofty superiority, which, if latent, is always, at least, perceptible. The slightest allusion to the society, either in name or existence, is considered in the light of an affront, which he who receives at once resents by taking his departure. Poor offended mortals! What an outrage on courtesy, to say nothing of decency and self-respect, this law of silence imposes upon him who is in every way the equal of the gentleman who demands its observance in his august presence! The rule of silence is often exacted by graduates of many years' standing, to their infinite shame, be it said. The matter would be trivial and of little moment were it not a most striking illustration of the bigoted intolerance of these societies which in this way seek to overwhelm and overawe and keep at a distance public opinion. Yet the charm is powerful while it lasts, and the weak or ignorant or easily terrified are crushed into insignificance, while all others, from motives of good breeding, abstain from offending. This bauble of mystery, it is true, loses much of the force of its attraction as the years roll on, but, for the time being, it is omnipotent. This injury is wrought before the novelty has worn off. The confidence and independence of the individual is liable to be impaired from the very nature of a college training and discipline which is at all strict and rigorous, and it mus be both strict and rigorous to be of worth; but it would certainly seem that outside and factitious influences should not aggravate and intensify this tendency. These are personal matters apparently, but they serve to explain the deep, bitter and constantly growing indignation which the law of silence, the air of superiority and the clannish spirit have aroused against the societies, which finds vent in expressions both loud and deep at all times and places. Why should two sets of young men selected as members of two college societies, whether because of real talent or ability, precociously displayed, or because of wealth inherited, or social qualities early developed, arrogate to themselves so much consideration, elevate themselves almost to the rank of demi-gods, assume more privileges and immunities than so many Emperors of China? It is not to be denied, however, that the tacit consent of the students and the silent approval of the faculty have encouraged the loftiness of their pretentions. It is not to be denied that the honor of an election is esteemed the highest boon college affords. But is there any good, substantial reason for it? Indeed, is it not rather an anomaly that so much stress and importance should be attached to so simple a matter? It is an unhealthy state in the college body politic, and the excrescences which occasion it should be lopped off.

This feeling against the societies has been gaining ground with their growth in hauteur and arrogance and power. The students, last fall, published a paper called the Iconoclast, which made fierce attacks upon their selfish indifference and assumptions of superiority. When the elections are given out, the whole college world is in a turmoil of uproar and confusion, which breeds disorder and almost riot. At the initiation, this summer, the neutrals, gathered about the hall of Skull and Bones, occasioned so great a disturbance that the active interference of a professor and the police was required to disperse the assemblage. A member of one Senior society, who had sanguinely expected some position to be bestowed by the class from which he was debarred because of a coalition between the other society and the neutrals, refused to attend his class reunion, several years after graduation, and wrote to the secretary declaring that he wished the class to consider his connection with them severed forever. Another gentleman of ability and good standing, failing to secure an election which he thought he deserved, left his class, and, after an absence of a year, joined the next class, just in season to secure the coveted honor. Such is the power and influence and prestige of these societies that to be in them is everything; to be without their sacred and mystical borders is nothing.

Then the organized power of these two cliques exerted actively, or only silently felt, carries too great weight. A fundamental rule of Skull and Bones forbids the united action of the society in political matters, but practically it amounts to nothing. Their control is apparent, not merely in the distribution of honors in college, but in all matters outside and after graduation. The evils they inflict are not merely present and future, but they strike back and affect the class from which the selection of membership is to be made. The honor of an election is so great that the Juniors strive by every means, fair and unfair, to achieve the successful distinction. This frequently is productive of the most disgusting toadyism and disreputable tricks. It is true, it also serves to stimulate the developement of talent; for Skull and Bones—I beg pardon, the so-called society of Skull and Bones—the most pernicious and objectionable of the two, so far as its example is concerned—is, family reasons apart or the hereditary qualification left out, quite fair in the mode of determining its membership. It casts about for the fifteen men which it esteems the best in the lower class, and to each of these an election is offered by some single member of the august fraternity under cover of a dark lantern, with, I believe, one minute allowed for a decision. It seeks three qualifications—ability, sociability, wealth; a combination of the three or of two, if possible. There is, moreover, one most excellent feature in this society. The poor man within her walls, when the case occurs, is never made to feel his poverty. His endowments are ample.

Indeed, the wealth of these several societies is one of the most difficult questions to consider in dealing with them. The Skull and Bones Club own a windowless building of free-stone on High street, which cost $15,000 in the days when labor and material were cheap. Much money has since been lavished upon it. The interior is furnished in a style of sumptuous magnificence. The building with the lot upon which it stands is probably worth, to-day, at least, $30,000. Its endowments are ample. The society was incorporated in 1856 under the name of the Russell Trust Association, with power to hold property, real, personal and mixed, to the value of $15,000. In July, 1870, an additional act was passed allowing the association to hold property to the amount of $350,000. Scroll and Key was incorporated, May 30, 1869, under the name of the Kingsley Trust Association, with power to hold property to the amount of $20,000. In June, 1868, additional legislation authorized the association to hold property to the value of $50,000, and in 1870 the association, by an act of the Connecticut Legislature, was authorized to hold real estate and other species of property to the amount of $300,000. The latter society has an elegant and elaborately ornamented hall, of white marble, on College street, which cost at least $60,000. Delta Kappa Epsilon, one of the Junior societies, has a hall on York steet which cost $12,000. Psi Upsilon has, within two or three years, erected a building after the usual society model, on High street, which cost probably $25,000. It is not pretended that figures are stated with absolute exactness. Neither of the Junior societies have any considerable endowments, however. Without doubt the property of the several societies would amount to at least $200,000. Is it not natural to suppose, therefore, that the allurement of wealth is somewhat greater than the inducement of poverty in the selection of membership? It is not too much, perhaps, to add that the Woolsey Fund, that most noble benefaction and monument ever proposed for the college, would have been much increased had it not been for these societies, which have claimed so large a share of pecuniary favor? Their possessions are now so numerous and their power so great that a decree of the faculty suppressing their existence and diverting their property, although this latter proceeding might not easily be accomplished without subverting the government of Connecticut, would probably meet with as much opposition as the decree of Henry VIII. abolishing the monastic title.

Affairs are, however, coming to a crisis when some remedy must be proposed. These overgrown and bloated little aristocracies are destroying the true Yale spirit. They elevate themselves above class and college. It requires all the love and devotion developed in the non-society graduates while under the fostering care of their grand old Alma Mater, and of gratitude since experienced for obligations to revisit her, so repugnant and disagreeable is the action and bearing of these societies, so haughty and insolent and self-sufficient their claim to superiority. Their power, or the power of one, at least, is deeply grounded in the councils of the faculty. Hence, whispers of favoritism are heard, which, utterly untrue and without foundation, except as proceeds from silent sympathy and the law of associations, are nevertheless mischievious in rumor, and tend to injure the morale of the undergraduate, to the detriment of the best interest of the colleges.

Is it not about time that the scales should be plucked from the eyes of the undergraduate? Ought not real merit to be made the test from the beginning to the very end of the college course, instead of having quite so much veneration and worship paid to two societies? What matters it if the hall of one contains some corrugated old skull and cross bones, dubbed the skull of Demosthenes, a truly Pythagorean fable, which is sacredly guarded within its precincts? What matters it that the gold emblem of a skull and cross bones each member wears on his person, night and day, in the most foolish and ridiculous fashion, is typical of that skull, and the figures denote that the society was first established 322 years B. C.? the worst bosh and nonsense extant. Let them prove their antiquity, that we may bow down and do them proper homage. Yet is any one, would any one, be wiser or better for such truly supernatural knowledge? "Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers." Would it not be much better and fairer to divide the whole Senior class between the two societies? Thus might be done away with all the preposterous nonsense, the ridiculous absurdities, the insults which, as they are at present constituted, they are ever offering to equals, possibly equals. So might be inaugurated the era of fair play, equality and courtesy and regard for others, that first rule of good breeding. All might be partakers and sharers in their benefits and dread mysteries, and secret wisdom and pleasant entertainments and delightful gatherings to enjoy bone teas. So might Livonia live again in the guise of Skull and Bones, and her light gleam through those empty sockets, and a miscellaneous band of brothers united be enrolled on the cabalistical tablet of Scroll and Key. Probably; though the powers that be will not act upon or heed in any way the advice so freely and kindly offered, and the storm of indignation must still gather and accumulate against these societies until they are swept out of existence.

Fellowshiping Freemasonry Viewed from the Standpoint of a Baptist.

BY NATHAN CALLENDER.

That this question of sacramental communion is just now attracting unusual attention in our own churches, and in many of the other orthodox bodies, is too well known to demand proof, or even statement. We are not now so anxious to settle the question as to the Scriptural rectitude of the practice of the regular (?) Baptists upon this subject, as to inquire whether our course is regular and consistent.

That we do not, as a denomination, hold sacramental communion with churches which we love and honor as Christ's people, is a fact, made conspicuous by its seeming inconsistency. Whether or not there is any wrong in this, there is, to my mind, a gross inconsistency in the practice of such of our churches as refuse the sacrament to the most evangelical and godly of Pedo-baptists, because they do not see with us on the subject of baptism and church polity, and then extend the hand of church fellowship to Freemasons, Odd-fellows, etc., and make them our deacons and pastors.

Freemasonry is a religion as really and obviously as is the papal religion. By its standard books it claims to do for man all that Romanism does, and has every essential feature of a religion. Its lodge service is WORSHIP, as much so as the acts of devotion now in use by the Roman Catholics, differing only in the fact that lodge worship is far less orthodox and Scriptural than the papal. This we hold ourselves ready to prove. Regular Baptists, then, can commune with members of the Masonic church, take them to be their deacons and pastors, though less evangelical than the devotees of the papacy, while at the same time they refuse the sacramental emblems to the most devoted and godly of Presbyterians or Congregationalists!

If this is not a monstrous inconsistency then the eyes of my understanding are of no more use to me than the sightless eyes of a blind man. As a regular Baptist, I challenge our doctors, who fellowship the Baal-worship of the lodge and then turn their backs on men of unquestionable godliness and soundness in the Christian faith, to defend their strangely inconsistent proceedure if there is any plea for it. Their plea for fellowshiping the religion of the lodge bewilders me.

An Old Man's Dream.

BY E. B. R.

A few nights since, while a lodge of grangers were assembled near my house, and the frogs were musical in a mill-pond contiguous, I was sleeping in my room alone; and in my slumbers I dreamed that I heard a conglomeration of noises, and inquired what it was. And I heard a voice saying, It is the peeping of the three unclean spirits like frogs, coming out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. I the innquired, What are those three unclean spirits? And the voice answered, saying, They are Jesuitism, Freemasonry, and Spiritualism: and they are now going forth unto the kings of the earth and of the world to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

I then walked down to the pond to see them, but the stagnant waters were so full of green slime that I could not discover them; and I remarked they had so polluted the water that I could not see them. To which the voice replied, They are amphibious, and like stagnant waters better than pure, clean, running waters; for they are spirits of devils.

I then walked up toward the place where the grangers were operating, and saw a very small puddle of water drying up, and on the bottom of it a multitude of small fungous animals wiggling in and out of the muddy water. And the voice said, They are the progeny of Jesuitism, Freemasonry and Spiritualism, properly called the tadpoles, and when their legs grow out, and they shed their tails, they will be frogs, and peep and mutter. And I asked, What are they? And the voice which spoke unto me said, They are the young secret societies, instigated by the policy of secret oath-bound societies, and they are rightly named legion; for there are verily a thousand and one of them got up by clandestine management to cover the deformities of their progenitors, and to serve as primary nurseries to make recruits for their parent fraternities. And though many of them may apostalize, like some tadpoles that die out when their dirty waters die up; yet some that have been pampered with promotions and lucrative gain, will, like prosperous tadpoles, become frogs, by metamorphosing into some of the parent fraternities, and engage in the diabolical work of the unclean spirits in Armageddon.

Being awakened by the rattling of the carriages, when the lodge of grangers broke up, I considered the vision, and lo! it was a dream.

On reviewing my dream, I am impressed with the fact that Jesuitism, Freemasonry and Spiritualism are the only clandestine hierarchies that extend to the kings of the earth and of the whole world to instigate opposition to pure Christianity.

Purity and Peace.

"Anything for peace." "We do not want any difficulty." "Anything rather than have a fuss." Such are some of the pleas of time-servers and chicken-hearted leaders, who, to avoid reproach, retain position, or secure the praise of men, consent to whitewash, and cover, and conceal, and tolerate sins, errors, and wrongs, against which they should pour forth their earnest protest in behalf of truth and righteousness, and their indignant rebuke against craft and iniquity.

Their policy is wrong and ineffectual. Their efforts fail, and deserve to fail. They sell out truth and principle for place and pelf, and the peace that they patch up usually ends in the fiercest warfare. Their daubing with untempered mortar is vain; the wall they have builded falls, and they are buried in its ruins.

"If we publish this we shall have a fuss," said an editor to one who importuned him to admit to his columns a stern rebuke of error and false doctrine which was being spread on every side.

"Don't you know that you have got to have 'a fuss,' and the sooner you have it the less you will have of it?" was the instant reply.

But the man who feared 'a fuss' had his way, and the first he knew he was tumbled neck and heels out of his place, his chair was filled by an advocate of the very notion that he had feared to attack, and mischief was done such as only the day of judgment can reveal; in the spread of error, which has since been repudiated by some of those who were foremost in its advocacy, but who are powerless to undo the damage which they have inflicted.

There is no peace to the wicked, and there is no peace to be made with wickedness. God has sent his servants into this world to fight the fight of faith, not to make leagues with Amalek; to wield the sword of the Spirit, not to enter into treaties with the Canaanites, nor to wink at their abominations. God will never make bargains with sin nor Satan, and Satan will never keep promise with God nor man, no matter what he may agree to. Crafty men may patch up compromises, besmear each other with lying compliments, and flatter Christians into agreements and concessions, but all treaties between good and evil, between right and wrong, are without authority on the part of God, and without force on the part of Satan. Whenever Christians trade with the devil, they get cheated. No matter what the terms are, no matter how fair the understanding is, no matter how good a bargain Satan makes, the result is ever the same. Whoever does business with the devil is bound to get "beat." He is too shrewd for mortals to deal with; he cannot be conquored with his own weapons; there is but one way, do right, make no bargains, stand firm as a rock, have no fellowship with ths unfruitful works of darkness, resist evil, and trust in God. The safe way is the right way; first pure then peaceable. This is wisdom's way; the way of the wisdom that cometh from above. Do not be deceived with pleas for peace and harmony. Do not mistake cowardice for long-suffering. You may abandon your rights, but you must not sell out the Lord's. You may yield your preferences for peace's sake, but you must not barter away God's eternal truth; nor consent to sin or wrong in any form. Do right, or do nothing. Have no parley with the devil; no fellowship with his works; no compromise with wrong, or craft, or guile. Live so that crafty schemers cannot use you, and dare not undertake it. Do nothing that you are ashamed of. Do nothing in secret, nor by craft, which you dare not do openly and avowedly. And do not try to evade the just consequences of your own acts; but accept them manfully, bear the blame that belongs to you, and seek to do better in the future, finding strength in the intergity of an honest heart and a righteous purpose.

This may cost something, but any other course will eventually cost much more. When once your feet have found rest upon the eternal rock of truth and righteousness, you have fought a hundred battles in one, and gained a victory that will give you joy forever. Men who deal in tricks and lies, in frauds and jobbery,, will be repelled from your very presence, and will slink away into darkness with their craftiness and guile, for you will be known as one who cannot be bought nor flattered, and the tempters will not even dare to approach you with their bribes.

"I have heard," said Senator Sumner one day, "that there is corruption in Washington. I have lived in Washington many years, and have seen no corruption." Once out of the region of fogs, jobs, hypocrisies, lies, and villianies, and you have sunshine and peace. But there is no peace possible with lies, and sins, and deviltries covered up at the bottom. The house is on the sand, and it will surely fall. Wickedness ends in war. It has been said, "There never was a lie but what ended in a broken head for somebody." Sooner or later the dire result is reached, the bitter fruit is borne. The hail shall sweep away the refuges of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding places, and the storms of judgment shall batter into eternal ruin every structure of human pride and hope which has been founded upon craft and falsehood, upon trickery and deception. But with truth as a foundation, the superstructure is secure; for "the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever." Isa. xxxii. 17.—The Christian.

A softened phraseology may suit the tastes of a degenerate age, but it kindles no inspiration, corrects no great wrong, conquers no giant evil. Rugged men, like John the Baptist, Luther, Calvin, John Knox, Hugh Latimer, and John Wesley have been the world's reformers. Every one of them was a theologian who believed and preached and fought for the pure doctrines of the Word of God. Sentimental opinions, diluted interpretations of holy Scripture, indifference to the primal principles of religion without regard to the analogy of faith and the history of doctrine, never yet made any positive mark in the church of God. Creedless churches do not grow. Negative preaching does not feed the soul. "Liberal Christianity" has little or no reproductive power. With the disguise of the terms conversion, regeneration, and other cardinal words, it has lost everything which they signify; and it is dying of inaction. Humanitarian Christianity exaults man, but lowers the scriptural ideas of God and of redemption. It boasts of its widening horizon, but its vision is earth-bound. It has no evangelizing spirit or strength. It only leaves the pagan in his blindness. The nations of the earth would never have had the Bible in their own tongues had its translation been left to the "blind guides" who ignore the great commission as persistently as they oppose the entire evangelical system of faith. We greatly mistake the tendency of human nature if those who are not clamoring against theology do not rapidly drift into the same channel of inefficient religionism.—Christian Intelligencer.

To All Indianians.

LIGONIER, Ind.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Not quite a year has passed since we organized a State Association for the purpose of bringing to bear a united effort against the hydra-head of secretism as it exists in our State and nation. Our first annual meeting will be held soon, and we desire the co-operation of every reader of the Cynosure, and as many more as we can get, to make this meeting a success.

What is desired of you is, that you call a church or neighborhood meeting at once, and see to having one or more delegates elected to attend the State meeting, and a way provided for them to attend it. If there is not sufficient interest in your community to warrant you in calling a meeting, then come yourself, if at all practicable.

Besides this, in order to successfully prosecute its work, the State Association

NEEDS FUNDS.

Can you not secure a small amount and send to Peter Rich, Westfield, Hamilton county, Ind? Send twenty-five cents, fifty cents, or one or more dollars, and get as many more to contribute as you can. Consider this an appeal to yourself and attend to it immediately, lest it be neglected or forgotten. In all probability, the meeting will be at Xenia, Miamia Co., about the 1st of October. Let us work, brethren, and look to God for a blessed time.

Yours sincerely,
JOHN T. KIGGINS,
State Agent.

Lectures in Warren County, Ill.

ALEXIS, Warren Co., Ill.
Aug. 26, 1874,

I wish to say through your columns that brother Kiggins delivered two lectures in this town the 6th and 7th of this mouth on the subject of Masonry. The first lecture was in the U. B. church to a large audience, quite a number of whom were Masons and Odd-fellows. This lecture was rather of an introductory character, perparatory to the second evening. Brother Kiggins told his audience how a man was made a Mason, gave an outline of the foolish ceremonies of the lodge, and the terrible and stringent oaths a man must take in order to be a Mason. Of course the members of the lodge went away saying "Its all a lie;" knowing at the same time that they were lying.

The second evening the lecturer dwelt on the principles of Masonry, which he proved to be unchristian, immoral, and anti-republican. He told how the lodge acted out the legend of Hiram Abiff the widow's son, and proved by the Bible clearly to every candid miud that this legend, upon which the foundation of Masonry seems to rest, was a lie fabricated by the lodge and imposed upon the unsuspecting public as a truth. After he was through his remarks he challenged the lodge to testify against what he had said if it was not the truth; but there were none of all the royal sons of the widow to respond. The lecturer then held up to them of the cowardly mean spirit of going away and stating that these things were false.

I have not heard of a single statement from them that they were otherwise than truth. I accompanied Bro. Kiggins from here on Sabbath to the U. B. church, six and a half miles east of here, where he preached on the religion of Masonry, clearly showing it to be a false system of religion. From thence brother K. went to Henderson to lecture in the evening. I think these lectures have done a great deal of good. May the Lord bless the speaker and forward the work. Yours truly,
P. R. ADAMS.

THE MORALE OF THE LODGE OPPOSITION —DISCUSSION NEEDED—POLITICAL AGITATION.

ALBANY, Mo., August 19, 1874.

THE WORK

in North Missouri continues, and with increasing vigor. A few months since every effort made to effect an organization in opposition to "secret societies" was slaughtered at the outset, by those interested in keeping down discussion. The truth, however, cannot be entirely crushed and to day the cause is stronger and more widespread than at any previous time in this locality. True, there is a timidity of purpose in some who feel an interest in the good labor, but lack the courage to stand up for it. Others mix with, only to mar it, and while professing to be friendly and deeply interested in its welfare, are constantly operating so as to strangle every movement made towards its advancement. Many there are who cannot be cowed by bluster, or discouraged by either treachery, or want of strength in others; and these men have faced discussion and have not been drawn from the real question in controversy by insolence of manner or subtility of purpose on the part of the opposition. The efforts of these have met with more than hoped for success, inasmuch as they have brought the subject before the people and made it one of the leading questions of the hour in this locality. No longer do the members of secret organizations exclaim: "You don't know what you talk about," as a bluff to discussion. They know the men who challenge them do know what they talk about, that they, too, have learned to maintain a "quick eye, a listening ear, and a silent tongue" in the vicinity of members of the craft, and that by so doing they have pricked up a mountain of evidence in regard to the immoral, unchristian, and selfish nature and tendency of secret organizations. Now, when considerate men meet and this question is broached, earnest discussion follows; the matter being handled on its merits. Among most opponents of the lodge "the battle of words" is now fought from a business stand-point, the object being to bring out a confession, —and it usually succeeds—that the chief motive of each individual in joining one of those secret hordes is and it is self-interest only that holds them in faithful bondage. They find it pays them to be members; that they have an advantage over the mass of mankind in all transactions, public and private; and that all who do not possess their particular gesture and grip are common prey, subject to their greedy pilferings. This fact of self-interest established, all the evils which the "Antis" charge follow in direct order; for that man who seeks self-elevation by leagueing against his fellow man, cannot be truly moral or Christian in his heart.

IT IS A FACT

most observing men will subscribe to, that the really intellectual class of mankind no longer seek admission into secret societies. Their chief influx now is from that class who find themselves distanced in the race of life by independent and self-dependent men, who rely upon the intelligent cultivation of the powers and faculties God has endowed them with, in surmounting the rough and rugged path which leads to peace, plenty and domestic happiness. The weaklings of the earth band together, and by multitude of council, directed solely to the one purpose of self-interest, roam like wolves, as they are, over the land in packs, subsisting upon the noble game they dare not, single handed. cope with.

THIS IS THE CURSE

which weighs upon the nation at the present time and cripples all industries. By aid of secret combinations inferior men in intellect and morality fill about all public positions and control the entire interests of the people, and moved them, not for the general good, but for the advancement of some particular party or order. What wonder, then, that dissatisfaction is witnessed everywhere; that the spirit of discontent and rebellion is spreading over the entire earth, and only awaits a daring soul to fan it into a blaze, which will never die out until might ceases to make right, and cliques and clans rule no more.

IN DISCUSSION

the power of the lodge falls. For a short time it may appear to gain in numbers, because wherever opposition to it is open and intelligent, it makes a stupendious effort to ring in the young, the weak, and the thoughtless, and secures this class before the light reaches them. But soon statistics will show that secret societies no longer keep pace with the increase of population; and the day is rapidly approaching when their total extermination will be written on the pages of history. So, when the enemy proclaims, as it does here, that their lodges never flourished so rankly as now, do not be discouraged but redouble your efforts, assured at the outset that a desperate attempt is being made to strengthen their ranks before the truth prevades the community and destroys their bloom. All secret organizations here are not knowing when nor where to strike in the approaching political campaign, now only ten weeks distant, and no candidates in the field. The Anti-masons hold the balance of power and you may in due time be informed "no clansman need apply" for office in Gentry county. Of course, careful and judicious handling will be required in order to triumph, but it is a possible and highly probable event. This is one thing that troubles the lodges and parties; they, also, fear one another, and are very carefully surveying the field, before placing their men in position. Well, let them plan and figure, who knows who will put the finish to the edifice?

IT IS DULL

in the grange camp since Allen came and struck the organization a deadly blight. Externally and internally it has a sickness—a worm in the bud—which, at least, sicklies the whole thing over "with the pale cast of thought" and despondency. The grand mass meeting was not a success, either in numbers or voters gathered to overawe the parties and force them to fall down and worship the grange, nor in the peace and harmony the "great babbler" was expected to instill into the breasts of those who are still backward about extending their hands over the "bloody chasm." Oil and water will not mix. The old blood still boils and bubbles. The flushed face gives the lie to the tongue that pronounces all serene. Principles are eternal and neither party will unreservedly swallow an amalgamation of inherent and detested opposites. To sum up, and slightly alter an old song:

"A granger sat on the old tow line,
And Master Allen came up behind
And yanked him off that old tow line," since which time he has crippled around in search of something substantial to tie too. ZEKIEL HOMESPUN.

Keeping up the Interest.

NASHVILLE, Ill., Aug. 25, 1874.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

DEAR BRETHREN:—We have been somewhat delayed writing to you on account of the press of work, as this is a very busy time of year. We are still holding our meetings monthly and giving the people all the light on the question of secrecy that we can, by reading the best selections from the Cynosure and sometimes making some explanations, and also by circulating tracts, papers and sermons. There is quite a number of persons that are taking an interest in the question. We invariably open our meetings with appropriate religious songs and prayer, and we also have good songs at intervals during the exercises. We would suggest that other friends of the cause at other places throughout the country, would undertake a similar plan of work. It has a marked effect. Brethren, pray for us that we may be courageous to do battle for our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Yours fraternally, T. W. J. LOGAN.

Correspondence.

An Exposition.

XENIA, Ind., Aug. 24, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Occasionally duty requires us to record a few criticisms on officers of the church which are unpleasant. Such a task we have now before us, and nothing but the general good prompts us to the duty; believing that when a trust is committed to an officer of church or state, he should use it for the benefit and welfare of his constituency, and that should he fail to so use it he subjects himself, and of right should be reproved, being in that sense public property.

December 26th will be two years since Bro. J. P. Stoddard was here and organized our anti-secret assocation. The U. B. church house is the original home of the society, where it met twice the first year, and monthly since, with the exception of meeting a few times in the Friend's church. Not long since said church underwent repairs, and on last Sabbath was dedicated by Rev. Thomas Evans, an elder. The society being few in numbers contemplated in the dedication a financial pinch, and as a preparatory step to meet this emergency, they commenced first by selling their church principles to the devil in the election of a man, good enough as a neighbor, but a member and strict adherent of two secret societies, Masons and Odd-fellows, and not a member of any church, to the office of trustee. The elder above named was present at the election, being the presiding officer, and was made known to the facts as above stated, by a member of his own church who warmly opposed this election.

"Shall we turn the anti-secret society out of the church house, as a matter of financial policy?" seems to have been the all-absorbing question existing in the minds of the elder and trustees, as the sequel plainly shows. On the day before the dedication (Saturday) this was made a question, and two out of three of the trustees gave their voices against us. As the act was done, it must now be patched and plastered to the best advantage, and I understand that the elder in dedication discourse had much to say about the "danger of running the anti-secret question to an extreme, and that we preachers can say all that is necessary to be said on the subject," etc. He has also said, or otherwise deplorably misrepresented, that the anti-secret movement was doing more harm than good, making more Masons than would otherwise be done, and anti-secret men were making a hobby of the question.

To show beyond mistake, that the leading object in this affair was to raise means to liquidate the debt of the church one of the trustees told me, and has told others, that one of the two favorable to the act said to him that he had assurances from secret society men, that in case they turned us out, they would assist in paying off the debt. The same trustee that made this unholy proposition also said that in case they did not turn the society out he would not assist farther in the payment of the debt. And be it furthermore stated to the shame of the two trustees who conceived and did thus act, they both signed a call for a convention to organize the anti-secret association at this place; but did not attend the convention, nor have they been at any of the society meetings. In denying the use of the house to the society, they made this honorable exception, that the "regularly appointed lecturers might use it." What would Bro. Kiggins or Stoddard think, on coming to our place to give a lecture, and find that the society was turned out of its fold?

We now ask in all candor of soul, what the effect of this act has been and will be? To answer minutely we cannot, and could we give its effects, we have not the space. I know not of a man or woman, in all the community, outside of secretists, and the parties who perpetrated the deed, with whom I have conversed, who does not condemn the act, as inconsistent with the principles of the church. They made a sad mistake even in the matter of dollars and cents, losing, to my certain knowledge, more than they gained. Besides this, they have forever, in my opinion, lost their influence at this place. Anti-secret men have no more to do with the church, they cannot expect to build up a church, either in numbers or influence, from the ranks of the enemy—secret orders. Where, we ask, must they look for influence?

To show further the influence that this act has already had, we may cite to the fact, that the hoodwinks of secrecy have been rampant on the track of the most earnest workers against secrecy ever since an inkling was dropped in community that the society would be denied the use of the house. One of the trustees could be seen standing around with lodgites, and it was said by friends, although Masons, that they were "posting this poor weak-kneed trustee and Christian on the character of anti-secret men."

In conclusion, let me say, that a few words from the Elder would have corrected this entire affair, and thereby saved the church from disgrace. If the doctrine of anti-secrecy be truth, as found in the law of the U. B. church, they cannot be the losers from its proper discussion. If it is not the truth, they had better repeal the law. But the truth is, that the church is theoretically right, and some of its members practically infidel on the question. Had its ministers stood up like men of God, and given to the world the reasons why they would not give secret-society men a membership in their church, I have no doubt but to-day they might have doubled their members and the community have been much better advised of the great error of secrecy. But in spite of the betrayal of friends from the household of faith, and Masonic "jacks," we live, and expect to live; and if necessary will push the battle to the very gates of hell. Our faith being founded in the Christians' God, we do not expect to fail.

Yours in the conflict,
J. M. DARBY, and others.

Masonry in Court.

STEVENSVILLE, Ont.

I have found from what I have seen as regards Freemasonry that the Cynosure tells the truth. I was in court where a man was tried for murder and he was allowed to have the trial adjourned by swearing that he had witnesses in Chips-Flats, California, on which he was kept till next court. And he (being a Mason as was well known) had men to come and swear that he was in California at the time the murder was committed, and also that he was not the man charged with having committed the murder. Though there were eighty witnesses that swore as to his being the identical man who had committed the murder, he had eighty witnesses to swear that he was not the man. At last, after a long trial, he was allowed to go free, and may be amongst a gang of robbers at this time. There was a very general impression in the country that Freemasoury cleared this man. This occurred a number of years ago in the county of Welland, Ontario. Names, dates and facts can be given of this case.

Mr. Tullis Explains Again.

MR. EDITOR:—I wish to extend my thanks to you for publishing my article of the 11th of August. But it seems to me quite proper to correct the statements you make in your editorial note. You say "It seems quite difficult to understand how Mr. Tullis could have been twice returned by unanimous request of his people." Your explanation is that it might have been so on the part of a few Masons who sent the request. I suppose it will be a matter of surprise, and, yet, satisfaction to you, to learn that there are no Masons in the M. E. church at Tiskilwa; nor has there been for over two years.

You seem to feel quite satisfied that you have the true explanation of the Masonic ball question. You say, as chaplain of the Tiskilwa lodge I was expected to make the prayer at the Masonic ball. But the fact is, I am not, nor have I been chaplain of the lodge. There was a festival and lecture to which I was invited. But the ball was no part of these. No more than my acquaintance with Bro. Stratton and the Blanchards has to do with the story you say was circulated about Tiskilwa with reference the men. That such a story obtained in this place, I do most emphatically deny, and your informant does your paper, and the cause of Christ, great injustice by such misrepresentations.

Failure in Time of Need.

SILVER LAKE, Ind.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Some years ago I was invited to join the Masons, and had nearly made up my mind to do so. My wife also thought it would be well for us, as Masonry was shown in all its beautiful colors. But as all questions have two sides, we thought best to examine the whole case, and as we did not know of any tracts or papers, or Anti-masonic books, we could not detect the evils so readily. But I remembered some Masonic funerals in Pennsylvania, also some in Indiana, and also in Louisiana, and seeing their money was not saved in making a nice display, but when it comes to buy bread for the poor and needy, it is scarce enough. As this matter was examined carefully, among the poorer classes were found Mason's widows and children left in need. From C. G. Finney's book, page 141 to 147 and also 170 to 174 and also page 177 to 183, any one can see that Masonry is a swindle and a cheat. Yours, etc., BENJ. ULSH.

Masonry Settles the Pastor.

While I was pastor in Lewis county, N. Y., in a flourishing village some three miles distant, the seat of a very respectable academy that had been in existence over half a century, there was a Masonic lodge of about 150 members. The Baptist church of this place was strong and influential. The pastor of this church at the time of which I am speaking had been an acquaintance and friend of mine while I was in college. When he came to this church on trial some of the Masons, whose wives were members of the church, came to the committee appointed by the church to procure a pastor, and told them if they would employ this man they (the Masons) would help support him. The bait was swallowed and he became their pastor. Having heard that he was a Mason I soon called upon him and offered him one of "Stearns' Speculative Freemasonry." At once he became enraged and began to traduce brother Stearns, saying "there are no such oaths in Masonry as Stearns has recorded in his book," and "he could not get into a Mosonic lodge to save his soul from hell." This assertion shocked me, as I was personally acquainted with brother Stearns and knew him to be a man of undoubted truth and veracity. Soon after I called upon an old seceding Mason of my acquaintance and spoke of the attempt of this clerical gentleman to falsify the oaths of Freemasonry as recorded by brother Stearns. To which he replied, "I have read Stearn's on Masonry and as far as I went in Masonry that book is true and whoever says it is not true is a liar; I don't care who he is." He farther adds, "When I was a Mason we used to get together and study Jachin and Boaz in order to become bright Masons." Before I left him he warned me to beware of the Masons; for, said he, "you don't know anything about the feelings among them in regard to you. If you are not careful they will kill you."

Masonry settled this man over this influential church and through its intrigue and wire pulling retained him there some three years, though his literary attainments were less than ordinary. He was seen parading the streets locked arm in arm with drunken rowdy Masons to the great disgust of many of the members of his church, and toward the last of his pastorate there he was found in a ball-room, not to dance but to look on. Soon after leaving that place he was known to be in a drunken bar-room broil and caught up a chair to knock one of his drunken associates down. Surely Masonry is a good thing to help such ministers of Belial, is it not?

Hope for Kansas.

COFFEYVILLE, Kan., Aug. 23, 1874.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

I see from the last number of the Cynosure that Bro. Kiggins is coming to Kansas. This is good news for the friends of reform in this State, so commonly termed the rotten commonwealth of the Union, a State that is wholly in the hands of rings, where nearly the whole masses of the people have gone over to secret societies, where the people are over-taxed, stupified and robbed; where crime is so common that it is hardly noticed and the punishment is not expecten, where courts and legislatures nave been charged with corruption, and justice is issued according to the will of the rings, where all the offices, or nearly so, are held by members of the craft. We want Bro. Kiggins for State lecturer. We want just such a man to visit every county in the State, and believe our friends, though few and far between will support him. The signs of the times are better. I know of a number who are getting sick of secret societies and will take the Cynosure as soon as able.

Yours truly, N. B. BLANTON.

From North-western Missouri.

ALANTHUS, Mo. July 8, 1874.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

North-western Missouri is moving toward a knowledge of secret societies and their evil influence. Honest men are rapidly falling into line with those who see tho need of opposing midnight conspiracies. Ask a respectable man the question, Are you a Mason? he will answer, Why do you ask that? Who told you to ask me? You certainly do not take me to be a Mason, etc. We think this a happy symptom, yet Masonry is doing her utmost to drag men into its embrace. Men that have received the title "Honorable" by whisky votes and Masonic tickets, stoop to urge young men to bow to this modern harlot, and even offer to furnish the money for initiation and let them work it out after the humiliating event occurs.

Some three years ago I was induced to unite with the Good Templars. My connection with that order led me to observe this fact among others: three-fourths of the young men who become connected with this society join Masonry or become "jacks." Circumstances induce one-fourth to investigate. They see the issue and assert their manhood by becoming opposed to secret societies. Nearly three years ago some unknown influence induced a young man of these parts (a tippler, if not worse), to go out into the "highways and hedges" and notify the temperate and intemperate that they should immediately become Good Templars. Many followed him, and I have heard him orate as follows in the lodge room: "Young man, stand upon your honor. He who would break this vow I would not trust with my horse." But ah! with him honor, pledge and vow have departed. He is now a tippling Mason. Such is the honor of Masonic Good Templars, and their motive is to make Masons.

As cause produces effect, so does Masonry produce liars. A short time since a Methodist preacher said to me, "No Mason can reveal Masonry." We think such preachers should be arrested and prosecuted by the fraternity for slander. Surely it is slander in the superlative degree to say that a man cannot tell when out upon God's green footstool what has been told to him when in the lodge, blindfolded, cabled-towed and denuded. I fail to see the point unless it is true that Masonry takes the mind as well as the manhood of its dupes.

C. A. Blanchard, when with us two years ago, did commendable service in greatly increasing the number of honest investigators. Those that are now uniting with the swearing brigade are such as have been doing the comtemptible service of "jack" Masons, until they are taken in through pity. For to refuse them longer would be base ingratitude.

But the grangers,—Ah! there's the rub,—to realize that fallen men seek to be gulled and swindled you have only to look around and see how grangers are multiplying. But some are already perceiving that this is adulterated Masonry. I observe that it is a matter of fact that the leading grangers put forward those to defend the grange who were formerly Anti-masons. I notice, too, that C. W. Greene's address has proved a quietus with those who have been induced to read it. Thus through the influence of "men of thought and men of action" the way is being cleared

J. P. NEEDLES.

Masonry for Travelers.

I often hear men say "if I was giving to travel much I would be a Mason." In most such cases, if you speak of the process they must pass through to be "made a Mason," and the many horrible oaths they must impose on themselves, as well as the obligations they will be under to every Mason, whether drunkard, thief or murderer, they will retract their position. Those who take such obligations, knowing beforehand what Masonry demands, must be of those that fear not God or regard the equal rights of man, and expect as Masonic authority assists that it will introduce them to the fellowship of "corsairs, pirates and maurauders that will treat them as brothers."

It is not strange that men who believe such statements and calculate to engage in crime and have Masonic help to get clear of the law, should consent to be "made a Mason." But what is most strange is to hear men professing the Christian religion making such assertions. One professing Christian says to me, speaking of its advantage in traveling, "if I was not a Mason I think I would join for selfish reasons." Another said to me that when his son asked him if he had better join the Masons he said, No; because it turned the mind away from the Christian religion, but remarked farther that if he was going to travel much he would join. I ofter hear such assertions, but what do they imply? Do they think Masonry can do more for them than the government which looks after the interests of its subjects the world over, or do they think it best for travelers to abandon Christianity and trust a league with wicked men for protection. Our good brother Hinman soon after his return from Africa where he had spent several years as a missionary, publicly remarked that he went to Africa trusting in Christ alone, and he sustained and protected him. In conversation with a chaplain of a marine hospital in Massachusetts he said to me, "My father was a Mason, and when I was a young man I asked him if I had better join, and he said No." He said that he had often been told that as he was traveling so much he ought to join the Masons and he would find friends everywhere; but he had always adhered to his father's advice and although he had crossed the ocean more than eighty times and been master of a vessel he had never lacked for friends. A minister that had spent several years in China said to me that he did not think Masons could affiliate with any secret societies there. He hated all secret societies and said he called the lodges the devil's work-shops.

One man lately told me that he took three degrees in Masonry and paid no farther attention to it until he was about to come to this State and was told that as he was going West he ought to take higher degrees, and he did go on to the Royal Arch degree, but he had not been known at all in this State as a Mason. "Only think," he says "what an idea—sustain one another right or wrong." I hear many make statements similar to the foregoing.

Masons boast so much of favoritism in traveling by getting berths on boats when others had been refused, etc. That I cannot dispute but under existing circumstances such may be the case. But where is the Christian man that wants or would even accept of such favoritism. Any man that would take from a traveler his rights as a traveler is just as dishonest as though he took his money in the same crafty way.

OREN CRAVATH.

Masonry 'Tween Decks.

YORK, Pa., Aug. 22, 1874.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

Acting Ensign C. F. Deering of the Wissahickon, who was not a Freemason, told me at the Brooklyn navy yard, that while we were in the S. A. B. squadron he had been advised to join the Masonic order so as to be favored by promotion. He also told me that nearly all naval officers were members of the fraternity; and that they became members to get promoted. I know it to be true that seamen who are Masons get all the non-commissioned offices in the navy; and that most of the commissioned offices are filled by the craft.

While I served in the S. A. B. squadron, I was told that the black-book system was in force in the navy. It was said that the admiral put offending vessels and officers on his black list and punished them in regular Masonic style, excepting the death penalty. I know it to be true that the black-book system was enforced on the Wabash and the Wissahickon, as far as the crew were concerned. Many of the crews of both vessels were black-listed and punished in various ways. I myself was black-listed on both vessels. Masters Mate Gregory of the Wissahickon told me I was "spotted;" and I had hardly got fairly into the naval service before I was attacked by the Freemasons. I know it to be a fact too that the Masons of York, Pa., conspired with the Masons in the squadron to hound me in regular Masonic black-book style. I will give particulars hereafter.

Yours for the truth,

E. J. CHALFANT.

Pulpit Slang.

SPRINGERTON, Ill., Aug. 17, 1874.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

During the last week or two I have been listening to the preaching of a venerable father of the church. Many years, they say, he has been engaged in tearing down the strongholds of Satan. His head has long since "blossomed for the tomb," to which ere long he must pass; the persons and places that now know him, shall shortly know him no more forever. Many wholesome truths have been indellibly stamped on the minds of his hearers; but with those truths, interspersed ever anon, such phrases as "sap-head," "water-brained," "baboons," "up Salt river," "blab-mouth preachers," and last, but not least, "hell-scooting."

It does seem to me that men who preach the Word of God could find some more appropriate "figures of speech" with which to embellish their efforts. On some subjects this might be tolerated; on this never. Men and women of good sense cannot appreciate such words in the pulpit, and they have shown it in this. After a week's preaching he has not received a single admission to his church. We hope that men will see the injury done to the church in thus acting, and with one voice put it down. If their pastors will not be the first to try to bring about this change, let the members see to it.

This same old father is a Freemason, or claims to be one at least, and to that fact most probably his actions are to be attributed.

I have given no name in this communication, because I do not wish to be personal; yet the foregoing statements are strictly true.

Yours in the good cause, F. L.

OUR MAIL.

Mrs. S. B. Allen, Morrison, Ill., writes: "Truly your paper as well as persons are known by the company they keep. The most firm, fearless, self-sacrificing Christians are the most permanent supporters of the Christian Cynosure. Two such valuable subscribers we have lately lost, though our loss is their gain. Mrs. Allen S. Tripp and Mrs. Jacob Baker. . . . . Mr. and Mrs. Tripp were opposed to slavery, drunkenness, tobacco, and all secret societies. He deeply mourns the loss of his worthy and faithful companion. As Mr. and Mrs. Baker were early settlers in Whiteside county, their labors of love and Christian benevolence are well known and remembered by many. They were the undeviating friends of the oppressed, were temperate in all things, and decidedly opposed to all secret combinations. Mrs. Baker possessed great reverence for God and his holy laws. She watched with deep interest the progress of the anti-secret society cause; had taken the Cynosure a number of years. . . . Sister Baker will long be remembered as a steadfast and devout Christian. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord and their works do follow them."

Jas. Reide, Simsbury, Conn., writes:

"I am in full sympathy with you in your blessed work. I believe secret societies are evil and only evil, and that continually. It is like leading a forlorn hope, but truth opens a clear passage to the fortress, and it will fall."

Franklin Pierce, West Albany, Vt., writes:

"I was in hopes something would be done for Vermont in establishing lectures, etc., at the Convention in Syracuse. I see Vermont was represented in the Convention, but I see nothing done for her."

We rejoice to see Vermont growing weary of the place she occupies in this reform. This is not the first earnest voice that we have heard from there, calling for an onward movement. Some of our readers have put forth noble, self-denying and successful efforts there already, but few compared with the whole numbers. Illinois obtained a State lecturer in this way: A friend said, "I will be one of ten to pay five hundred dollars for a lecturer in Illinois." Others followed, and the lecturer is now in the field. We have about one hundred subscribers in Vermont. Cannot ten of them give or collect fifty dollars each to start a State lecture fund? Perhaps you can be responsible for twenty-five, fifteen or ten dollars, if not fifty. We think one of the best ways to prepare the sentiment of Vermont for a successful warfare against the secret orders is to extend the circulation of the Cynosure. Let each subscriber send in an average of ten new ones before January 1st, making one thousand, and you will, we believe, have a State lecturer and a State organization before next June. Begin to canvass for subscribers now. Persevere. Do not grow discouraged if your success seems small at first. God gives the increase. A hundred fold in this present time and in the world to come life everlasting to those who seek first his kingdom and its righteousness.

Wm. Matthews, Ambrose, Pa., writes, (referring to the Cynosure):

"We get nothing like it since the New York Principia edited by Dr. Cheever."

Samuel Gill, Irwin Station, Pa., writes:

"I pray that God in his infinite goodness may bring about something that will speedily explode the whole system of iniquity. . . When your convention meets in Pittsburgh I hope the good effects may spread all over Westmoreland county, and especially in the brough of Iowa."

Harry M. Whyte, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"I like the Cynosure in its present form very much."

Samuel McCluer, Lexington, O., writes:

"The sentiment of the people here was generally in opposition to secrecy until the grangers commenced operations. It is thought they are working for the good of community and against monopolies. Will they not monopolize when they get the ascendancy? Some good men are joining for curiosity. Others for pecuniary advantages. Bad men, for popularity and respectability. I am an anti-slavery man of '36. I have seen it (slavery) fall, and although seventy-two years of age, hope to see secret societies go the same way, never more to pollute our beloved country."

F. W. Arndt, N. Chili, N. Y., writes:

Now brethren be encouraged, for there are more for us than there can be against us. . . . As for me it is settled and fixed. I will die in the army of Jehovah."

A. S. Davis, Lone Rock, Wis., writes:

"I work and fight here alone, bound to do all I can for Christ and his cause."

To this brother and all his disciples, Christ says: "Lo! I am with you alway."

P. D. MacElroy, Mora, New Mexico, writes:

"Please continue the Cynosure. It is too good a thing to lose."

Philip Shook, Po, Ind., writes:

"I cannot do without the Cynosure. When I do not have it there is something missing."

Jacob J. Snyder, Muscatine, Iowa, writes:

"I hope that your labors for love may result in the salvation of precious souls and the salvation of our beloved country."

Jesse Calvert, Milford, Ind., writes:

"I delivered a short lecture on Masonry at the close of my sermon Sabbath evening. . . . It caused some research. I hope the good work may go on until none may be left to advocate Satan's cause."

S. B. Houton, Pittsburgh, Ind., writes:

"O that the day may soon appear when the church shall cease to be a safe retreat for crying sins; when she shall arise in the dignity and grandeur of her might; in the name of her glorious King gird on her glittering armor and go forth and battle against the giant monster, secrecy."

Jas. Donaldson, London, Ont., writes:

"I received your circular and other papers and have been using them as best I could. But my steps are watched wherever I go, and every word is repeated to my injury. The attempt has been made to cut off all means of support from me if I shall say a word on the subject of Freemasonry. This has not stopped my mouth, but renders me more earnest in the cause."

Should not a system that thus persecutes those who oppose it receive the earnest opposition of all who approve of free speech?

Dr. E. E. Burnside, Earlville, N. Y., writes:

"While in Worcester, Mass., recently, I learned that a minister living there, Rev. Mr. Converse, was a high Mason; and also that within the last year he has been reduced to the necessity of going out to saw wood by the day. "What would he do now," exclaimed my informant, "if it were not for the Masons? They help him some, but the churches do but little for him." I replied, "If he has been trusting Masonry all these years rather than the Lord, is it not just that the Lord leaves him to depend upon it in his old age?" Upon my return I happened to meet good Bro. Fisher, of Chaseville. He has been ill for two or more years, unable to preach, and really poor in this world's goods. He has quite a family, but he assures me that the Lord has taken care of them. Churches and individuals have sent liberal donations, and he says he is entirely satisfied with trusting God, and has no need of secret societies."

History of Freemasonry.

In the rude times, when men, ignorant of chirography, impressed the seal of their parchments with the tooth in their head for their signature, it was usual for master masons to give their apprentice a grip or sign, by which he should make himself known to any mason as a regular entered apprentice to the trade; and another when he had completed his apprenticeship and passed to the rank of a journeyman or fellow-craft; and a third when, by assiduity, experience and skill, he had become himself a master of work, took buildings to rear, hired fellow-crafts or journeymen, and received apprentices. The word, the sign and the grip, in those unlettered ages, were the certificate of the craft to its regular taught members; and in Germany were common before Freemasonry was imported from England. (See Prof. Robison's Proofs, p. 54.)

Masonic historians claim the men to be Freemasons against whom the statute was passed in the 25th of Edward 3d, and again in the reign of Henry 6th, forbidding them to assemble in lodges and chapters. (See F. M. Library, p. 25; Hardie's Monitor, p. 20; Lawrie, p. 94; Encyclopedia Brittanica, Art. Masons, Sec. 62.) Now Edward 3d dealt with Englishmen of that day as George 3d would have dealt with Americans in his day, as if they had been slaves. A plague had swept away a fearful portion of the English population, and the scarcity of laborers caused all classes of mechanics to demand an increase of wages. Edward had several castles and magnificent edifices in building, and, to make his money hold out, must compel the masons and mechanics to work at the old rates. He issued such an ordinance and enforced it by his sheriffs. Under that ordinance masons were returned from the several counties of England to work on Windsor Castle, as jurors were returned to serve in the king's courts. (See Hume's History of England, reign of Ed. 3d.) This was equally agreeable to the Lords of Parliament and to himself, and accordingly it was enacted A. D. 1350, that "as servants, not willing after the pestilence to serve without taking excessive wages, had been required to serve in their accustomed places at the rate they had received in the 20th year of Edward 3d; and as it is given the king to understand in this present Parliament, that the said servants have paid no regard to the said ordinance, but to their ease do withdraw from the service of great men and others, unless they have livery and wages to the double or treble of that they were wont to take in the said 20th year and before, to the great damage of the great men, &c. be ordained and established the things underwritten."

Chap. 1. Fixes the day and year wages of Farm servants.

Chap. 2. The price of threshing all sorts of corn by the quarter.

Chap. 3. Prescribes the wages of several sorts of artificers and laborers; among whom carpenters and masons are particularly specified.

Chap. 4. Requires artificers to make oath that they will use their crafts, as they did in the 20th year of the same Edward 3d. (See Ruffhead's English Statutes, Vol. 1, p. 251.)

Seventy-four years after the enactment of this statute, which plainly is applicable only to handicrafts, Henry 6th, in Parliament at Westminster, ordained that "no confederacies and congregations shall be made by Masons in their general chapters and assemblies, whereby the good course and effects of the statute of laborers, (25th Ed. 3d,) are violated and broken, in subdivision of law; and if any be, they that cause such chapters and congregations to be assembled and holden, shall be adjudged felons." Coke's 3d Ins. p. 99.

The common pretence of Freemasons, that these statutes were levelled particularly against their mystic order, by the influence of bigoted priests, because the secret was not portrayed in the office of auricular confession, is too shallow, after once reading these statutes, to cover the nakedness of the falsehood, or to conceal the evident duplicity of its first publishers. But one thing these statutes conclusively show with the aid of Masonic historians, viz. —that in the reign of Ed. 3d and Henry 6th, there were no Freemasons in England, but stone masons; who met in general chapters and assemblies, not to cultivate the knowledge of a wonderful mystery, but to impede the execution of the laws, and to violate the statutes of their country.

With this view faithful history fully concurs. That a society claiming the glories of Freemasonry should have existed for ages unnoticed by any writer, noble or contemptible, foolish or learned, is wholly incredible, and unworthy of belief. The Puritans and the Presbyterians, the Cabalists and the Rosicrusians, the gypsies and the necromancers, the alchymists and the Jesuists, are each liberally noticed in the works of various authors during the 16th and 17th centuries; but Freemasonry had not so much as a name, until the 18th century. To any historical scholar, this alone is enough. We read of the Fraternitas lathomorum, or company of bricklayers; but it requires not a lawyer to discern, that these are the men against whom the statute of laborers was directed in the 25th year of Edward 3d, and are not the men who have at this day in their lodges the language of Eden, and the mysteries of the antediluvian world. This is irresistible truth, and I challenge any man to turn its edge, or to break its point, or to show one particle of evidence to the contrary, except it proceed from the vainglorious boastings of the mystic order itself, which is not evidence, the witness being confessedly interested, and standing publicly convicted of shameless duplicity and of atrocious falsehood. See Illustrations of Masonry by Wm. Morgan, compared with the standard works and authorized pretentions of the order.

Of the same tenor is the fact that Papacy and Freemasonry cannot dwell together in peace; but we hear not a word of their disagreement, until the 18th century. Certainly Papacy is older than 100 years; and if Freemasonry be much above that, how did it previously escape a conflict which has never ceased since it commenced, A. D. 1730 to '40? The canons of the church require full and free confession to the priests from all good Catholics. The oaths of Freemasonry require absolute secrecy upon the transactions of the brethren from every good Mason. Now, these canons and oaths no where abide together without discord and a deprivation of church privileges, and they never could harmonize for one moment. Therefore, the time when they first fell out and contradicted each other, must have been near the beginning of one, or both of them. That time is determined by the bull of the Pope, 1738, 1739. Wring and twist the brother Mason may, but there is no escape; the date is correctly stated, seventeen hundred thirty-eight, issued by Clement 12th. (See Lawrie's Hist. Mas. p. 122; Ency. Brit. Art. Masonry, last edition.)

What has been said is proof, not only that the account which Freemasonry gives of itself, is erroneous, but grossly erroneous; not only that the order was not organized by Solomon and patronized by St. John, but that it had no existence even in the days of Edward 3d, and of Henry 6th of England. The question becomes interesting, whence did it originate? and who first promulgated its falsehoods?

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

AN EPISCOPAL SAINT—ADULTERY "BEING WORTHY," AND A BISHOP IN TROUBLE.

GALESBURG, Ill., Aug. 24, 1874.

I preached here yesterday to good audiences in two churches, the last in my old pulpit. On the cars I met an old class-mate, once a Congregational minister, now an Episcopal clergyman, and, he informed me, a Knight Templar and of Malta. He gave me much useful information; so much that his life would not be safe in some Masonic jurisdictions, if all he said to me were known. John Forgie was murdered for less Masonic offense.

I asked him why the Knight Templar's degree was considered and called the twelfth by some authorities and only the ninth by others. He said the degrees between Royal Arch and Knight Templar were unimportant. "There were three of them that I did not take." "That explains it," I replied. "Omitting those three and it is the ninth with them the twelfth."

"But," said I, "brother, I am getting to regard ministers of the Gospel who are adhering Masons with horror. When you were made a Master Mason, you swore to conceal all a Master Mason's crimes but two. And in the seventh degree you swore to conceal all a Royal Arch Mason's crimes without exception."!!! Why then am I not to regard you as a sworn confederate with Masonic felons?"

"You do not understand it," he replied. You forget the words: 'He being worthy.' If he is guilty, and I know it, he is not a 'worthy' Mason, and I am not bound by the oath to conceal his crime.

Shocked at his easy gullibility and the "deceivableness" of the lodge, I replied, "Oh brother!—that would make the Mason's oath a blasphemous nullity. You swear to conceal his crimes, and then pretend that if he has crimes to conceal your oath is not binding. This won't do. Besides Stephen A. Hulbut, M. C., raised this same question on Judge Whitney, when Whitney was Master of Belvidere Lodge; and the Grand Master of this State decided that the lodge, not the individual Mason, was to decide who is 'worthy;' and that an individual Mason cannot set up a plea of conscience in a given case, but is bound by the letter of his oath. The Grand Lodge sustained Hu lbut and turned out Whitney."

"Well," said my friend, "I have so understood it. And some nine or ten years ago, Bishop Vail, of Kansas, was at my house, and wished to take the Masonic degrees. We got a dispensation, gave him the Entered Apprentice degree in the afternoon, and the other two that night, and got through about 11 o'clock. Bishop Vail slept at my house. Next morning he said to 'Brother, I am feeling bad. My oaths last night bound me to conceal the crime of an adulterer, if given to me as a secret.' I immediately called his attention to the words, 'He being worthy;' and though a man of tender conscience, he was satisfied."

Will our subscribers in Kansas note this, and see what their Bishop Vail has been through. And note the morals of the lodge which can suppose a man a "worthy Mason" who is guilty of adultery. And let all readers of this article see that Masonry, like Jesuitism, is a complete repeal of all ordinary moral obligation.

My good Episcopal brother, who is a sincere, inoffensive person, went on to declare that he never in all his life had, to his mind, so striking an illustration of the sinner's entire dependence on Christ, as he had in the lodge where the candidate is denuded and deprived of money, raiment and everything whereby he could help a distressed brother. In short this Episcopal clergyman who has been the pastor of such men as Judge Lawrence, is a blinded and complete tool of the lodge. I wish to send this article sent, marked, to Judge Lawrence, that I may say to him that if he countenances his Episcopal clergymen in such blasphemy and folly, he deserved to be beaten by Craig, who, whatever he is, is no hypocrite, but joined the lodge and goes with it for buncombe.

It is these Episcopal and other bishops and saints who swear to conceal adulterers, "they being worthy," who keep the lodge in countenance and enable it to grind the moral natures of our young men into its devil's grist. Yours in Christ, J. B.

LODGE CONSPIRACY TO CONTROL EDUCATON IN ILLINOIS.

VILLISCA, Iowa, Aug. 25, 1874.

Hon. Newton Bateman, Superintendent of Schools in Illinois, is a member of the Presbyterian church in Springfield, Ill. He is a Freemason, and as such, must have been lodge-brother with Harmon G. Reynolds of Springfield, who was in the late printing frauds, and who has so long run the Grand Lodge of this State. Mr. Bateman has discharged the duties of his office respectably, and until I found that he was endeavoring to get young men who were teachers under him into the lodge, I was inclined to ignore his Masonry as a means used by him to get office; though the example of a State Superintendent of common schools who is in secret sworn brotherhood with the gamblers and swindlers who belong to the lodge cannot but be disastrous on every rising young man in the profession of teaching in Illinois. But Mr. Bateman is a lodge-propagandist. True, he has seldom spoken in public for the Masons, only just enough to keep his lodge-standing good. But in private, he has advised young men to join the lodge as a means of rising in the profession. The Jesuits, before they made the attempt on the governments for which they were expelled from the Christian States of Europe, first obtained control of the schools.

Judge then of my anxiety as I came through Galesburg, to learn that Newton Bateman had just been elected President of Knox College, and that Rev. Flavel Bascom voted for him, knowing that he was a lodge-propagandist. Mr. Bascom is professedly hostile to the lodge. How he answers to his conscience for that vote I know not. Other members of the College Board assure me they were ignorant of Mr. Bateman's connection with the lodge. Wm. J. Phelps, Esq., of Elmwood, I am sure, never would have voted knowingly to place Knox College in the hands of a man who is roping the young men who teach our schools into the dens of sworn and swindled secrecy.

Bramwell Powell, of Aurora, Republican candidate for Mr. Bateman's place of Superintendent of common schools, is a Knight Templar, as we have heretofore published. His nomination as Bateman's successor is a matter of course the result of lodge consultation. And as the Congregationalists of Illinois have, in their General and local associations, voted against the secret orders; this is a plain conspiracy against the Congregational churches of the State. They have wormed Rev. Henry D. Moore in as pastor of the Congregational church at Springfield. Mr. Moore is a Freemason of twenty-one degrees. With Moore at the seat of the State government, Newton Bateman in Galesburg, and Bramwell Powell as State Superintendent of common schools, and Harmon G. Reynolds to lobby for them, the school legislation and the instruction of the children of Illinois are sold to this accursed conspiracy.

Of course I do not accuse Bateman and Powell of being wicked and corrupt men. What they want is office. But, as Master Masons, they are sworn to conceal all crimes but two; and as Royal Arch Masons, all crimes without exception of their brethren.

Are the people of Galesburg and of the State going to look on, like sheep in a slaughter yard, while this scheme is completed? Are the Congregational churches of the State willing to stand still and see their congregations depleted and their pastors sent adrift, which now is being done all over the State by this silent, secret process? Will not the colleges of the State and especially that at Monmouth, awake and struggle at least before this devil's net encloses them? Nothing is left us but to join the lodge, to be silently run down by it, or to oppose it.

Yours in Christ, J. BLANCHARD.

NOTES.

—One of the two State officers to be elected in Illinois on the third of November is a State Superintendent of Public Schools. The Republicans have nominated Mr. Powell, whose lodge standing has been discussed in our columns. The Farmer's Convention put forward S. M. Etter for the position. The latter has taught many years in the State, but whatever success he may have attained is due to his connection to the Masonic lodge as well as to his ability in his profession. Our judgment, based on personal observation, rates these two forces at nearly an equality. Mr. Etter wants the office and is working for it. He has succeeded in getting the late Democratic convention (old line) to endorse his nomination, whereat the independent farmers are justly indignant, their motto being the man for the office and not the office for the man. They might do a worse thing than to change their candidate.

—In the correspondence of this number is a second letter from Mr. Tullis, of Tiskilwa. We were informed that he was chaplain of the lodge and absented himself as stated from a Masonic ball by a gentleman in whose word we had confidence. He was, it seems, mistaken, as he thinks Mr. T. correct in this particular. As for the denial of other items, it is made against the statement of responsible persons. Bro. Stratton is not a man to report manufactured stories. Nor from personal acquaintance do we think the brethren who attend the M. E. church in Tiskilwa would sign a petition for the return of a pastor known to be a Freemason in order to make it unanimous. Improbable as it appears they may have done so. If true, it is somewhat surprising and yet gratifying if the Methodist church of Tiskilwa has no member connected with the lodge. But it is a shame to a pastor to boastingly claim allegiance to an order founded in infidelity and maintained by deception, whose only graces are blasphemous mockeries of true religion, where he is an equal and willing companion of Mohammedans, Jews, pagans and vile men. It is the duty of those Christian brethren to labor for the extrication of their pastor from this devilish snare, and if his conscience is so defiled that the truth spoken in love has no effect, the Word of God is plain. Not only is he now living in open and continual violation of its precepts, but also, we believe, of the discipline of his church, in spirit if not in letter.

—The following statistics may be of interest. There were reported to the Grand Lodge of New York at its meeting in May last, 5,300 initiations, 310 less than in 1873; demits 1,777, for 1873, 1,781; expulsions 49; suspensions 25; stricken from roll for nonpayment of dues 2,840, to 2,403 the year before, increase 437; restorations 352; deaths, 945; total membership 79,849, an increase of 770 for the year, less than one per cent; the receipts from all sources $61,896.54, about $400 more than the year before. The statistics of the Grand Lodge of Connecticut are: initiations, 695; reinstated, 11; demitted, 164; stricken from roll, 257; suspended, 9; expelled, 6; died, 162; present number 14,943. The Grand Lodge of Utah reports 69 initiations, 13 demits, 306 Masons. Of Colorado, 19 lodges, 123 initiations, 52 demits, 21 stricken from roll, 1,079 Masons.

—The National Grange has discontinued its weekly bulletin of the progress of the order. The following is said to be a correct statement of the number of grangers on the first of June:

Alabama	604	Mississippi	592
Arkansas	421	Missouri	1,929
California	200	Nebraska	587
Connecticut	3	New Hampshire	31
Delaware	10	New Jersey	78
Florida	54	New York	216
Georgia	640	North Carolina	399
Illinois	1,481	Ohio	947
Indiana	1,968	Oregon	164
Iowa	1,994	Pennsylvania	284
Kansas	1,333	South Carolina	293
Kentucky	1,191	Tennessee	933
Louisiana	128	Texas	400
Maine	27	Vermont	120
Maryland	101	West Virginia	55
Massachusettts	58	Virginia	260
Michigan	460	Wisconsin	497
Minnesota	522	Total	18,960

An Irish Roman Catholic named John Scallon, one of Prince Harry Genet's supporters, fell back down a stair when trying to get his key into his door one night not long ago, in the upper part of this city. He was, it seems, a Freemason (and doubtless a good example of the purity, temperance, and so forth, enjoined by the rules of the Masonic fraternity). On account of his being a Mason, it is said that no priest would have anything to do with his funeral. The Masons offered to provide a Protestant chaplain, probably a member of the fraternity, but this the widow declined, and the deceased was buried in his own ground under protest; but whether his ground was a lot in the consecrated part of the Cemetery of the evergreens, or somewhere else, and who it was that protested, we are not informed.—N. Y. Witness.

Religious Intelligence.

—The National Camp-meeting Association has made arrangements for a vigorous campaign through the Southern States. They will take their mammoth tent with them, and pitch it wherever they see a good opportunity.

—It is proposed to raise among the Baptists of Pennsylvania a half million of dollars for educational purposes, $300,000 of which is to be for Lewisburg University, and $200.000 for academies in the State. An effort is to be made to raise $75,000 for Peddle Institute, at Hightstown, N. J.

—A camp-meeting was held during August in Dupage county, this State, under the direction of a county association. Such lay-workers as Whittle, Cole, De Golyer and Bundy were the principal speakers. Dr. Walker, of Wheaton, also participated. A number were believed to have been born again and the graces of many believers quickened.

—The persecution of Protestants in the Turkish Empire has drawn the missionaries of all denominations and nationalities more closely together. They have joined in an appeal to the Christian Powers of Europe and America in behalf of the missionaries and colporteurs whose work has been seriously interfered with. Some converts to Christianity have been imprisoned and otherwise illtreated, and some have been forcibly enrolled in the Turkish army for the offense of becoming Christians.

—Rev. David Todd, pastor of the Congregational church of Providence, Ill., died Aug. 10 at Granville, Ill. He had been pastor of this church for a quarter of a century, with the exception of an intermission of two or three years, while engaged in teaching in the South among the freedmen, where he contracted the disease which renewed its attack upon him, and in less than one week finished its work. He was universally beloved by his people and was a steadfast supporter of the truth against the lodge.

—The triennial General Convention of the Episcopal church is to be held in New York in October next. The Convention is composed of the House of Bishops, comprising all the diocesan and missionary bishops, and the House of Clerical and Lay deputies. The last consists of four clergymen and four laymen from each of the forty-one dioceses, and are appointed by the local conventions of the same. The House of Bishops holds its sessions for the most part in secret, except in the case of matters of a public character, when the doors are thrown open. How to check the growth of Ritualism will be one of the foremost and most difficult questions for consideration.

—The Rev. O. Green, a Presbyterian missionary to Yokohama, denies that the Government of Japan gives unlimited freedom to the Christian missionaries to teach. He says: "The law against Christianity has not been abrogated. There is no religious toleration. The people are somewhat restrained by fear of the law from resorting to missionaries to be taught. We foreigners are prevented by law from living among the natives, nor can we live anywhere save in a little corner in each of the open ports, called the 'Foreign Concession,' but we dare not go among the people to the limit of 25 miles from each of these seven cities—there is the legal boundary."

—Prof. Julius H. Seeley has been delivering a course of lectures on Foreign Missions, to the students and citizens of Andover, Mass. After taking a general outlook over the subject, he showed that civilization apart from religion is wholly inadiquate to supply the needs of the heathen. Neither art nor science nor systems of education and culture, however perfect, have anything in them competent to the task. Nothing but Christianity will prevail to put the leaven of reform into those people and their institutions. Only that form of Christianity which has implicit faith in, and is based in action upon the command: "Go preach the gospel," can ever hope to conquer the world for Christ.

—The Christian Leader says the work of the Moravian missionaries in Labrador that they make but little of a sensation in their mission work, but keep at what they undertake with remarkable persistency. They select the least comfortable fields of labor in the world. Their work in Greenland is well known. Now they have opened a new station in the southern part of Labrador, where the thermometer as low as sixty degrees below freezing point in January. The missionaries sometimes lose their way in snow drifts, and their Esquimaux dogs give out with weariness; but though the Esquimaux population regard Christ as but little better than one of their own sorcerers, the work is pushed on as bravely as if the encouragement were greater. When we think of the comparitive ease with which our home evangelical work is managed, the labors of these half-frozen Moravians seem the very concentration of all human self-sacrifice.

—On Wednesday evening of last week Rev. J. W. Bain was installed pastor of the United Presbyterian church of this city. Rev. J. D. Smith, of Hanover, Ill. preached the sermon, taking as his theme Christ's promises and the interest the world has in them. Rev. W. T. Moffett, of Somonauk, propounded the usual questions to the pastor elect and to the church, and gave the pastoral charge to visit the sick and preach the whole Gospel. Rev. R. W. French, of Petione, charged the congregation, that they render every possible aid to their minister, who, he believed, would maintain the principles of the church. On Thursday evening a reception was tendered Bro. Bain by the congregation at the church, corner of Monroe and Paulina streets. Prof. Bliss conducted the excellent singing, and an address from the pastor formed part of the exercises. The relation thus happily begun, all hope and pray may continue long and usefully.

News of the Week.

Country.

Gen. Custer's expedition to the Black Hills Indian country has returned safely to Fort Abraham Lincoln. The reports of gold producing and fertile country in the region traversed has already started the organization of mining companies; but Gen. Sheridan has given notice to such parties, that they will not be permitted to go unless by authority of the Secretary of the Interior or of Congress. But why did the government first permit its armed troops to become marauders and set an example to the cupidity of mining companies?——Henry Babb, a railroad engineer, has been arrested for murder in causing a fatal railroad accident near Springfield, Mass.——Ann Eliza Young who left the harem of her husband, Brigham, some time since, has brought a suit for divorce and alimony. Brigham replies in court that he has an income of only $6,000 per month and has to support a family of 69 persons.——The actual damage in some parts of the West by grasshoppers has been exaggerated. Gov. Pennington of Dakota has traversed a great portion of that State, including the devastated districts, and pronounces the impression of a general devastation utterly false. The aggregate yield of wheat will be greater than ever. Potatoes have suffered slightly, oats considerably, and but one-half of the corn crop will be harvested. Altogether, the damage done will not exceed 20 per cent. of the crops, and may be less than 10. Gov. Osborn, of Kansas, says that although some portions of that State have suffered severely, yet there will be no actual want and the State will be able to care for the sufferers without aid from without.

Southern Disturbances.

Dispatches dated Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 26, state that the negroes at Pickettsville, Gibson County, 6 miles from Humboldt, last Saturday, threatened a riot on account of some supposed wrong done to them, and manifested a strong desire to kill two or three citizens, and fire and sack the town. Yesterday sixteen of the ringleaders were arrested and taken to Trenton and placed in jail for safe-keeping. About 1 o'clock Wednesday morning, between 75 and 100 masked men entered the town, rode up to the jail and compelled the Sheriff to deliver the keys to them. The sixteen prisoners were taken from the jail and brought to the edge of the town where four were shot dead and two wounded, one mortally. The remaining ten negroes were taken to Forked Deer river bottom and shot dead. The gang of murderers were masked whites. This massacre has thoroughly aroused Western Tennessee. A large indignation meeting was held in Memphis on Friday night. Speeches were made by leading citizens all denouncing the slaughter of the negro prisoners at Trenton. The committee reported resolutions condemning the outrages, and calling for the arrest and punishment of the murderers. A copy of the resolutions was sent to Governor Brown, and asking that the power of the State be exercised in discovering and bringing to justice the assassins.——During the previous week a serious encounter occurred at Lancaster, Ky. On the morning of Aug. 22 some negroes shot a Mr. Yeakly. This exasperated the whites who took possession of the town, and firing was kept up, both parties fortifying themselves in buildings. Four companies of militia were sent from Louisville and quiet was finally restored. Several negroes were reported killed.——Last week a disturbance arose near Shreveport, La., and both whites and blacks numbering hundreds were under arms. The leaders of the latter were finally arrested. The latest reports state that on Monday as the prisoners were being taken to Shreveport, a party of Texans overtook the party and murdered the prisoners.——On last Friday a mail train on the Alabama and Chattanooga road was stopped by desperadoes and the colored mail agent was murdered.——The New Tribune remarks on these outrages: "There has been no riot or violence anywhere which a decent local government out not to have suppressed in half an hour. Nevertheless we do regard the situation at the South as full of peril. The danger is not from the turbulence of the negroes, but from the recklessness and folly of the whites. Every little disturbance is followed either by a mustering of regulars or a call for Federal troops. The white citizens seem to have no confidence in the officers of the law, and no disposition to strengthen their hands by the regular methods which the law itself provides for emergencies. If a negro turn highway robber, a whole county must fly to arms and the United States must restore order. And for this feverish condition of society the conservatives of the South seem to imagine only two remedies. One is to keep the negroes out of politcs; the other is to re-elect General Grant. Nothing can cure the misfortunes of the Southern States but a reform in their local governments. There is only one way to peace and prosperity, and that is by the union of all parties and both colors in setting up and sustaining honest administrations."

The Beecher Investigation.

The Committee of Investigation reported to Plymouth church on Friday evening last. The church was crowded with a vast audience, and but one sentiment seemed to prevail—intense sympathy for Mr. Beecher. The report occupied an hour in reading and the parts referring to the innocence of Mr. Beecher were received with tumultuous applause. It bears evidence of legal authorship, reviews the whole testimony, and takes the pains to step aside to drive at Tilton and Moulton. It concludes thus:

"First: We find from the evidence that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher did not commit adultery with Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton, either at the time or times, place or places, set forth in the third and fourth subdivisions of Mr. Tilton's statement, nor at any other time or place whatever.

Second: We find from the evidence that Mr. Beecher has never committed any unchaste or improper act with Mrs. Tilton, nor made any unchaste or improper remark, proffer, or solicitation to her of any kind or description whatever.

Third: If this were a question of errors of judgment on the part of Mr. Beecher, it would be easy to criticise, especially in the light of recent events. In such criticism, even to the extent of regrets and censure, we are sure no man would join more sincerely than Mr. Beecher himself.

Fourth: We find nothing whatever in the evidence that should impair the perfect confidence of Plymouth church or the world in the Christian character and integrity of Henry Ward Beecher.

And now let the peace of God that passeth all understanding rest and abide with Plymouth church and her eminent pastor, so much and so long afflicted." It is signed by Henry W. Sage, Augustus Storrs, Henry M. Cleveland, Horace B. Claflin, John Winslow, S, V. White, the committee of investigation. At the conclusion remarks were made by Mr. Blair and Prof. Raymond. The latter took occasion to use personal and abusive remarks concerning Moulton who was in the front part of the audience. The latter arose and charged him with lying, and on attempting to leave the house was hooted, hissed, and set upon by the crowd who might have killed him but for the vigorous efforts of the police. H. C. Bowen has entered suits against two Brooklyn papers for statements growing out of the scadal.

With all Your Might.

If you've any task to do,
Let me whisper friend, to you,
Do it

If you've anything to say
True and needed, yea or nay,
Say it.

If you've anything to love
As a blessing from above,
Love it.

If you've anything to give
That another's joy may live,
Give it.

If you know what torch to light,
Guiding others through the night,
Light it.

If you've any debt to pay,
Rest you neither night nor day,
Pay it.

If you've any joy to hold,
Next your heart, lest it grow cold,
Hold it.

If you've any gift to meet
At the loving Father's feet,
Meet it.

If you've given light to see
What a child of God should be,
See it.

Whether life be bright or drear,
There's a message sweet or clear
Whispered down to every ear:
Hear it.

The Family a Divine Ordinance.

Instead of the human species being consigned to solitary separation on the one hand, or being congregated into large promiscuous companies or herds on the other hand, we find them allotted along the surface of this wide world into little communities, living under the same roof, and connected by a thousand gentle offices which they discharge one towards another, and to which they are prompted by interesting ties of feeling and affection. The system is in admirable adaption to our state and our nature. We come into the world not like the young of some animals, able to act for ourselves, but in utter helplessness, and we find that God has provided for us kind parents who delight to minister to our infirmities, and who feel as if the infant's smile was a sufficient reward for all their toilsome days and waking nights. The heart responding to heart, the reciprocal tenderness expressed in a thousand practical ways, are fitted beyond anything that man can devise or conceive, to draw forth the feelings and to train the affections of the infant and juvenile mind. The memory guided by the heart, here comes to the aid of the judgment and renders all lengthened argument unnecessary; for, far as our memory goes it calls up scenes of unwearied watchfulness and melting love, and tells us that no nature could be so bountiful, as none could be so pleasant, as that which takes place under the dews of a mother's kindness and the shelter of a father's counsels.

Wild theorists have labored to overturn this system, but God in his providence has inscribed folly on all their mad and profane attempts to disturb his arrangements; and it has been found that, after producing not a little temporary misery, these parties have been obliged to abandon their schemes as prejudicial or impracticable. In ancient Sparta, Lycurgus substituted public education for family training, and the experiment terminated in rendering a whole nation cold-hearted and selfish. Socialism, under some of its forms, has proposed to exchange a household for a promiscuous life; but as might have been anticipated, the change when carried into effect has led to caprice and cruelty, and opened the flood-gates to every form of vice.—Dr. McCosh on the Divine Government.

Finding a Girl in the Bible.

An English town missionary a short time ago related a remarkable incident which may interest many readers of the Wesleyan. There was a lodging-house in his district, which he had long desired to enter, but was deterred from so doing by his friend, who feared that his life would be thereby endangered. He became at length so uneasy that he determined to risk all consequences and try to gain admission. So one day he gave a somewhat timid knock at the door, in response to which a coarse voice roared out, "Who's there?" and at the same moment a vicious-looking woman opened the door and ordered the man of God away. "Let him come in, and see who he is and what he wants," growls out the same voice. The missionary walked in, and bowing politely to the rough-looking man whom he had just heard speak, said, "I have been visiting most of the houses in this neighborhood to read with and talk to the people about good things. I have passed your door as long as I feel I ought, for I wish also to talk with you and your lodgers." "Are you what is called a town missionary?" "I am, sir," was the reply. "Well then," said the fierce-looking man, "sit down and hear what I am going to say. I will ask you a question out of the Bible. If you answer me right, you may call at this house, and read and pray with us or our lodgers as often as you like; if you do not answer me right, we will tear the clothes off your back and tumble you neck and heels into the street. Now what do you say to that? for I am a man of my word." The missionary was perplexed, but at length quietly said: "I will take you." "Well then," said the man, "here goes. Is the word girl in any part of the Bible? if so, where is it to be found, and how often? That is my question."

"Well, sir, the word girl is in the Bible, but only once, and may be found in the words of the prophet Joel, iii. 3. The words are, 'And sold a girl for wine, that they might drink.'"

"Well," replied the man, "I am dead beat; I durst have bet five pounds you could not have told."

"And I could not have told yesterday," said the visitor. "For several days I have been praying that the Lord would open me a way into this house, and this very morning, when reading the Scriptures in my family, I was surprised to find the word girl, and got the Concordance to see if it occurred again, and found it did not. And now, sir, I believe that God did know, and does know what will come to pass, and surely his hand is in this for my protection and your good."

The whole of the inmates were greatly surprised, and the incident has been overruled to the conversion of the man, his wife, and two of the lodgers. —American Wesleyan.

False Humility.

What we think is humility, is, after all, frequently only pride turned wrong side out.

You say, "I believe in Christ, but I am so unworthy that I do not dare to believe that I am a saved man." Unworthy? Most assuredly you are. And if you live to be the veriest saint, you will be so still. And that is the reason why God has chosen to save you by One who is worthy. It is not a question of what you deserve, but what Christ deserves. And for you to refuse to take the place which God assigns you in redemption, because of a sense of unfitness, that is not humility, but unbelief. It is putting self in the place of the cross. And that is always to set aside Christ. I care not whether it be a proud self or an humble self; a self-righteous self or a self-condemning self; the moment you put it in the place of the cross, you throw the atonement into eclipse, and Christ is made of no effect to you.

It is a fact, that we are slow to comprehend that the Gospel is designed and just fitted to meet men at the lowest point of their moral degeneracy. It names no degree of improvement that he must attain before it can help us. It prescribes no dispensation of self-preparation; it has no betterment act which must be enforced, in order to get us ready for calling on Jesus. It stipulates to take men at their worst or at their best. And it matters little which. It has to do the same work for both. It costs the government just as much to uniform a well-dressed recruit as it does a ragged one. In either case the recruit must put off his citizen's dress and put on the army blue. And so it is not worth while for a volunteer to spend his labor and pains to get a new suit to enlist in. There is likewise no necessity for a sinner's waiting to get a better moral garb, a more respectable wardrobe of frames and feelings, before he may come to Christ. For in any event he must put off the old man with his dress, and put on the Lord Jesus Christ, who of God is made unto him wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption.—Selected.

A Strange Providence.

"Do let me take these corsets off, mamma," I heard a young girl pleading with her mother; "they make my side ache, and my heart beats so hard against them that it tires me. Please let me take them off."

"Nonsense! You ought to have pride enough to wear them. You will grow up as round-shouldered as a camel without them. Do you want people to think you are deformed?"

"But it hurts me to breathe, mamma. I can't breathe down. And I can't help trying to, I feel as if I was stifling."

"Say no more about it. Other girls breathe, and you are not made differently from them, I suppose. Look at Martha Aberly. There's a pretty figure for you. A regular dumpling. Her mother does not believe in corsets. When your figure is properly formed, it will be time enough to talk about it."

It is four years since, but the frail, lovely girl has for three years been wearing the dress which requires no lacing to make it fit. A white marble cross in the burial-place shows the grave where she rests. It is called a sad providence that thus removed an only daughter, so sweet in temper, so promising in talent. But Providence had nothing to do with it, in my opinion. I think that there are many careful, church-going mothers who will be terribly dismayed when the day of final reckoning shall come, to see the wealth of fresh, happy life that God meant to blossom out in excellence and beauty upon the earth, but which was untimely crushed and blighted by their own insane worship of fashion.

If left to themselves, young people are seldom over anxious in regard to dress. It does not give them sleepless pillows or diminished appetites. Youth does not always of its own accord, take to tight lacing. It is the mother's hand that often puts on the corsets, and it is the mother who should herself be put into a strait-jacket in all those places where insanity is the stereotyped plea for the murderer.

The Sunday-School Times tells of a lady who had charge of a young ladies' Bible class, who, in speaking of defective home training, said that her best pupil, eighteen years of age, had caused her the most acute anxiety. Rain or shine, she was always at her post. The girl's whole soul seemed to be absorbed in the straightening out of intricate theological problems; "and yet," said the teacher, "the girl was so pale and wan that I was afraid every Sabbath would be her last in class. One day she fainted, and in trying to restore her I loosened her dress, and what do you think I found? Corsets so tightly drawn that a full respiration was impossible. I removed them, and found that the girl's ribs actually lapped! I took her to her mother, a very prominent and useful church member, and stated the case without reserve. "Well, you see," said the parent, "Fanny never had any figure. I shouldn't be surprised if the lacings were drawn a little too tight. Her waist is naturally so large that it is impossible to make anything fit genteelly on her. How is your class prospering, Miss ———? I hope you are drawing many souls to Christ!"—The Christian.

Cromwell and the Shoemaker.

When Cromwell entered Glasgow, in 1650, he attended divine service in the High Church; but the Presbyterian divine who officiated, poured forth, with more zeal than prudence, the vials of his indignation upon the person, principles, and cause of the Independent general. One of Cromwell's officers rose and whispered to his commander, who seemed to give him a short and stern answer, and the sermon was concluded without interruption. Among the crowd that were associated to gaze at the general, as he camo out of tho church, was a shoemaker, the son of James the Sixth's Scottish footman. This man had been born and bred in England, but after his father's death had settled in Glasgow. Cromwell eyed him among the crowd, and immediately called him by name. The man fled; but at Cromwell's command one of his retinue followed him, and brought him to the general's lodgings. A number of the inhabitants remained at the door, waiting the end of this extraordinary scene. The shoemaker soon came out in high spirits, and showing some gold, declared he was going to drink Cromwell's health. Many attended him to hear the particulars of his interview, among others, the grandfather of the narrator. The shoemaker said he had been a playfollow of Cromwell's when they were both boys, their parents residing in the same street; that he had fled when the general first called him, thinking he might owe him some ill-will on account of his father being in the service of the Royal family. He added, that Cromwell had been so very kind and familiar with him that he ventured to ask him what the officer had said to him in church. "He proposed," said Cromwell, "to pull forth the minister by the ears; and I answered, that the preacher was one fool and he another."

A Wonderful Nation.

Capt. W. C. Manning, of the U. S. army, accompanied General Crook last year in a campaign against the Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico. He gave the following particulars to a correspondent of an ancient race discovered in that unexplored region, whose towns he visited, conversing with their rulers and studying their customs. Some of the cities, probably once inhabited by this race, were discovered by Major Powell in his celebrated excursion down the Colorado. This interesting people is thus described:

The largest settlement is in New Mexico, about thirty miles south of the border line. It is a type of the rest. A strong wall surrounds it. Within are houses for about 4,000 people. The population has dwindled, however, to about 1,800. The place was mentioned by a Spanish Jesuit, who published in 1529 a description of his wanderings in America. About 1535 another Jesuit wrote a minute account of it. This account is true in nearly every detail to-day. The language resembles the Chinese. So an ardent archæologist who visited that city a year ago says. Some of the minor customs correspond to those of the Chinese. The women are of the true Celestial type—almond eyes, protuberant bodies, little feet, &c. They dress their hair and themselves in Chinese fashion.

Their religion is barbariously magnificent. Montezuma is their deity. His coming is looked for at sunrise each day. Immortality is part of their creed. The priests have heavily embroidered robes which have been used for unnumbered years. The ceremonies of worship are formal and pompous. The morality of this strange people, as far at least as foreigners are concerned, is irreproachable. It is probable that they keep a record of events by means of tying peculiar knots in long cords. This, if true, seems to establish some kinship or remote acquaintanceship between them and the Aztecs. Their government is a conservativo republic. Power is vested in a council of thirteen Caciques. Six of them are selected for life. Old men are generally chosen, in order that their term of office may not be inordinately long. The remaining seven are elected from time to time. One is the Executive, another is a sort of Vice President. There is a War Chief, a Chief of Police, &c. These seven Caciques are usually young men. They serve but a few months. Suffrage is universal.

It is scarcely necessary to supplement these facts with the statement that these dwellers in towns are quite advanced in civilization. On this point one fact speaks volumes. Woman is not a beast of burden with them, as she is with all Indian tribes. She is held in high respect. Her tasks are confined to those of housekeeping. The written records which we have mentioned show that this community has maintained its traditions unbroken for at least three and a half centuries. Its history, carefully studied, may prove a clew to the problem of the aboriginal Americans. The mound builders of the North and the city builders of the South may be represented in the town dwellers of New Mexico and Arizona.

Recipe for a Happy Home.—Six things, says Hamilton, are requisite to create a happy home. Integrity must be the architect, and tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed by affection and lighted with cheerfulness; and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere and bringing in fresh salubrity every day, while over all a protecting canopy of glory, and nothing will suffice except the blessing of God.

Children's Corner.

The Camel and the Desert.

It was early in the morning that the caravan started; the twilight was growing into day.

The camels had been saddled and burdened and chained, some ten, some twenty, in a row. There were precious things on those camels' backs—silks from India, pearls,, ivory, gum, perfumed oils, myrrh, feathers, angora shawls and velvet. First among the heavily-burdened animals was an old camel-mother; she carried ice from Tartary for a pasha's cellar, a burden that would not appear very valuable to a European child. By her side trudged her little camel; it was three years old, and ran nimbly by her side.

"Mother, are the burdens very heavy?" asked the little camel, wonderingly.

"Yes, but not too heavy. Your turn will come next year, little camel; every child has to take up a heavy burden in time."

"It will be hot journey for us all and that little one," said a thin, aged camel, next in row; "but I prefer carrying perfumes to fighting the Bedouins; my cousin and I went many years ago; they ran away before us, the Bedouins, but they killed my cousin."

A cry of dismay escaped from the camels near, and then nothing more was said, for it was growing hot.

Many days did they journey, nothing but hot sand everywhere.

It was midday; the sun stood horizontal, and seemed to hang like lead over man and animal. The owners of the merchandise had wrapped themselves close in their burnos; only their black eyes were visible. The drivers crept slowly by their camels, every now and then speaking a kind work to them, or singing a song, and the faithful creatures turned and licked their hands, and hastened their pace, as if they knew that on them depended the safety of all.

"I am tired," said the little camel very often; but the mother answered, "It is good to become inured to hardships when you are very young; I have had many journeys more weary than this, and reached the end."

"Mother," continued the little camel, "some of the camels behind us won't go on; the drivers are scolding them."

"Never be unwilling to carry your burden, and you will not get scolded."

Yesterday the drivers cheered their camels with kind words and songs, but to-day not a sound was heard but sighs here and there. It was the fifth day since the camels tasted any water; the precious ice on the camel-mother's back had long been consumed. What was to be their fate?

Just then a groan was heard in the rear, the voice of a driver in anger, then a moan less loud and one more feeble, and the angry voice of the driver again. He had picked a parcel of silken shawls, cast away by a merchant to ease his animal's load, and the driver had put them on his own camel, intending to appropriate them, and the overburdened animal had sunk under the weight.

"It is a punishment for avarice," said the old camel to the little one; "he has learned his lesson too late."

The driver took the burden off the poor camel; he coaxed it, he whipped it, in vain; it did not rise. With mournful eyes it watched the caravan, that slowly moved on, sadly it stretched itself in the sand, as if it knew its fate. The avaricious driver had to sacrifice the merchandise and camel unless he would share the fate of his beast of burden.

"Mother, look at those angry-looking birds flying around us!" cried the terrified little camel.

"They are sent as a warning to keep steadily together and not to flag. We are the first, and must keep up, not give in."

"Why do we not reach any water?" asked the weary little camel again.

At that moment a glorious vision presented itself to the weary caravan. In the distance a sea showed itself, then arose walls with flowing flags, peaceful huts and sunny gardens.

"O mother, let us hasten there," cried the little camel.

"Beware, little one," said the old camel; "it is a wicked illusion, more cruel than the birds of prey that hover around us to devour us; if we were to follow it, it would lead us father into the hot desert. More dangerous are the pleasures that would lead us to destruction than tho open dangers that beset our path. What you see is a mirage."

The littlo camel did not understand, but tried to keep up bravely by its mother's side.

The caravan was dragging wearingly along; sometimes in despair a cheering word arose from ono of the drivers to the patient animals upon whose strength the fate of the whole caravan depended. Even the lion's voice would have been acceptable now, for it would have betoken the nearness of vegetation.

Listlessly the guidance was left to the camels, whose instinct was a sure guide.

Alas! the old camel-mother looked very anxiously at the hot sands stretching before them, and then at her little one. Was it instinct or mother's love that made her keep on, and not lose hope?

The sun was sinking and the shadows falling over the yellow sand when the camel-mother stretched her neck high into the air, sniffed and cried. With a wild effort, as if she would burst her bonds, she rushed forward. A cry of joy broke from the caravan, for they knew the unerring instinct of the camel that can perceive water at a few hours' distance. All eyes looked bright, all limbs were full of life. It might be a few hours, but yet they would reach it sometime, and on they pushed, forgetful of all.

At length a well-known sight offered itself to their eyes. A few palm trees arose in the distance, and between the grass bubbled the fountain. The poor tired ones drank and rested, the little one by the mother's side. The camels were unburdened, and the next morning they started again refreshed. In a few days they reached their journey's end, bearing with them costly merchandise destined for European markets.—Children's Hour.

Be Industrious.—You must learn to be industrious; you must always try to be helpful to your parents. We say learn to be industrious; for there are many lazy boys and girls who are unwilling to do anything for their parents, or any one else. Many of the wicked men and women who are in our prisons and houses of correction are there because they were lazy when they were young. They were then unwilling to work. They would not learn to be industrious; they would not learn some useful trade as they grew older so that they they could earn their living in a respectable manner; and soon we hear that they are living lives of wickedness, have learned to drink, have stolen, lost character, and are in prison.

Tobacco.

It is estimated that nearly three hundred million or about one-fourth of the entire human family, use tobacco. It is used by men of every nation, civilized and uncivilized; old and young; learned and unlearned; rich and poor; saint and sinner; Christian, Turk and heathen. No pope, prince, president or king wields a cepter over so wide an empire. It is computed that the whole number of smokers, snuffers and chewers, consume five hundred thousand tons of tobacco annually, or one billion of pounds weight. The expenditure of time, labor and money laid out one way and another for tobacco is prodigious. The aggregate of all these that enter into the rising of the weed making it into plugs, snuff and cigars; the transporting, the buying, and selling, and using, is a problem for mathematicians who know how to compute figures that rise beyond millions.

The time spent by a single individual in taking chews, and lighting and puffing pipes or cigars, would, if properly improved, in many instances, be sufficient to acquire a thorough knowledge of several sciences. Multiply this by the whole number of tobacco chewers, and it will amount to centuries of precious time consumed, not only in useless, but in degrading practices. The labor of producing tobacco and preparing it for uso is amazing. Five and a half millions of acres are cultivated in this soil-impoverishing crop through the world. In one great tobacco factory in Seville, Spain, five thousand young girls are employed in a single room. In the city of Hamburg, ten thousand persons, many of them women and children, are engaged in the manufacture of cigars. A printing-press is occupied entirely in printing labels for the boxes of cigars, and other matters connected with the immense tobacco business of that city.

A church member, known to the writer, uses seventy-five dollars' worth of tobacco yearly. A young man in a neighboring town confessed to smoking ninety-one dollars' worth of cigars in a year. In an annual report of a State Alms House there is the following item of expenditure: "Nineteen dollars for tobacco, snuff and pipes." Communities must be taxed additional in order to provide tobacco for paupers! It is estimated that the clergy cost the United States six hundred thousand dollars annually; criminals, nineteen million dollars; tobacco, forty million dollars; rum, one hundred million,—nearly seven times as much for tobacco as for preaching of the Gospel, and enough, if applied for sixty years, to wipe out the stupendous national debt.

What does tobacco cost you?.—The Christian.

Write to Geo. Trask, Fitchburg, Mass., for tracts and documents on Tobacco. By all means if you use the vile stuff write to him, read his arguments and be convinced.

—Scotland consumed nearly seven million gallons of British proof spirits last year, more than Ireland, and more in proportion, than England.

Odd-fellowship Illustrated.

High Priest: How shall I know that you are such?

A. by Junior Warden.—By the signs, pass words and tokens of our order.

High Priest: I will thank you, Brother Junior Warden, to prove him in the pass word of the first or White Degree.

[The Junior Warden examines the candidate in the pass word.]

High Priest: To what does it allude?

A. by Junior Warden.—Faith, the first pillar in Odd-fellowship.

High Priest: Right. Without faith it is impossible to please God. I will thank you to prove him in the tokens of the second or Covenant Degree.

[The Junior Warden obtains the token from the candidate.]

High Priest: That sign should always remind us of the solemn covenant, which binds us as brethren of a worthy order. Prove him now in the principal sign of the Royal Blue Degree.

[Junior Warden obtains the sign.]

High Priest: What is the use of that sign and the words accompanying it?

A. by Junior Warden.—That I may know a brother in distress.

High Priest: You will perceive, my brother, that the order of the Royal Blue is founded upon principles of the most devoted friendship. The character of Moses was a beautiful type of the true Odd-fellow; exposed to danger and distress, he yet exhibited the most amiable qualities. How constant and devoted his friendship to his oppressed and afflicted brethren: how beautiful his meekness: how exalted his fidelity: how consumate his prudence: how fervent his zeal! What a glorious leader! No instance of moral heroism can ever eclipse his elevated character—so worthy of our imitation. By copying his exalted example, the sea of life stricken by the rod of friendship, shall open to give us passage to the enjoyment of the promised land of fraternal peace and love.

I will thank you, Junior Warden, to see that our brother has studied the Degree of Remembrance.

[Junior Warden examines him in the signs.]

High Priest: It is right and proper that we often reflect upon our duties, that we fail not in the observance of our solemn vows. You will now please prove him in the Pass Word of the Fifth Degree.

Junior Warden examines him.

High Priest to Candidate: My brother, I am satisfied with your proficiency and hail you as a brother of the Priestly order. Ever remember that Aaron was the representative of the oracle of truth, and that it behoves you to form your character, by that expressive symbol, which has been selected as the basis of the Scarlet Degree. What is it you now desire?

A. by Junior Warden.—To be admitted to the privileges and honors of the Patriarchal Degree.

High Priest: Are you willing to assume the solemn duties of the Patriarchal order?

A.—I am.

High Priest: Then kneel at the altar and repeat after me a solemn pledge of honor.

OBLIGATION, PATRIARCHAL DEGREE.

I, ———, do most solemnly promise never to reveal the secrets, signs, pass words, or grips of the Patriarchal order to any person or persons except to a legal Patriarch. I will never reveal directly or indirectly any transaction of this Encampment or of any other Encampment throughout the globe which relates to any brother or brothers or to anything else that by the regulations of the order should be kept secret. And if I know that a brother has violated this duty I will report him at the first meeting of the Encampment thereafter. To the keeping and performance of all this, I pledge my most sacred honor.

And God spake all these words, saying, I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

1. Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

2. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I, the Lord thy God, am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; and showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

3. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

4. Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it.

5. Honor thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

6. Thou shalt not kill.

7. Thou shalt not commit adultery.

8. Thou shalt not steal.

9. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

10. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbour's.

HIGH PRIEST'S CHARGE, PATRIARCHAL DEGREE.

[Candidate still kneels.]

In this solemn moment, while prostrate at this altar, you are forcibly reminded of that rule of duty, by which your future action is to be governed. You have toiled through the ways of doubt and error to the bosom of our Patriarchal family. You have proved yourself ardent in the pursuit of truth and we now have instructed you in the unerring law by which you are to be governed. Virtue should be the great end of your life; that virtue which gives whatever is great and good in man. Honor, probity, fidelity, sympathy, friendship, social and domestic happiness are but empty sounds in the mouth of any but a virtuous man. Virtue gives joy which vice with all her flattering promises never pretends to offer; and bestows a zest upon those joys that are common to all, which they can never have without it. Its influence spreads through life, diverges in every direction and penetrates every condition. It is the guardian of youth; the honor of manhood and the crown of age; the shield of prosperity; the prop of affliction; our guide in active life; our solace in retirement. It holds the keys of life and will finally open to us the gates of immortality.

[The candidate will now rise and be instructed in the alarm at the inside door or enter-sign, check word, pass word, check sign, sign, grip, emblems and significations.]

ENTER SIGN.—Two raps on inside door; given on entering.

CHECK WORD.—(This is changeable and is the same for all the Encampment Degrees. Given at inside door.)

PERMANENT PASS WORD.—Adam (pronounced Au-dem.)

Check Sign, Encampment Degrees. Sign Patriarchal Degree.

CHECK SIGN.—On entering an Encampment the member walks to the center of the room and salutes the "chairs" as follows: Facing Chief Patriarch, bring right arm with open hand across breast; fingers extending to left shoulder. Next turn to Senior Warden and salute him in same manner. Then turn to Chief Patriarch again and salute him with the SIGN OF THE PATRIARCHAL DEGREE.—Place back of right hand in left hand, closing all but index finger of left hand over right hand. Raise index finger of left hand and both thumbs perpendicularly. Answered in same manner. This sign refers to the Three Pillars, the Emblem of the Patriarchal Degree.

GRIP.—Same as in ordinary shaking of hands, extending thumb across fingers, between knuckles. No shake.

High Priest to Candidate: I now invest you with this black apron and these gloves, the peculiar badges of the Patriarchal order. They will ever serve to remind you of that candor which should always distinguish the intercourse between brethren of this sublime degree. Brother Junior Warden, conduct the brother to our Worthy Chief Patriarch, to be further instructed in the mysteries of this branch of our order.

The candidate is conducted to the Chief Patriarch.

Junior Warden to Chief Patriarch: Most Worthy Chief Patriarch, I present you a worthy brother who has been admitted to our tent and now asks to be further instructed in the mysteries of the Patriarchal Degree.

Chief Patriarch: How shall I distinguish you from a brother of the inferior degree?

A. by Junior Warden.—By the Signs and Tokens of a Patriarch.

Chief Patriarch: Advance the Patriarchal sign.

Junior Warden gives the sign.

Chief Patriarch: What does it represent.

A. by Junior Warden.—The three pillars of the order, Faith, Hope and Charity.

Chief Patriarch: What else does it represent?

A. by Junior Warden.—The motto of our order: Friendship, Love and Truth.

Chief Patriarch: Have you the Pass Word?

A. by Junior Warden.—I have—Adam.

Chief Patriarch: My brother, I commend your skill and trust that the remembrance of these symbols and the moral virtues they imply, will never fade from your mind. Our institution is a science of symbols, conveying by striking emblems the most exalted and interesting truths. There are moments in the experience of the most virtuous life, when incentives are needed to dispel the lethargy of the soul and excite it to action. Behold the symbolic language of our order. Unrolls the canvass upon which are painted, in regular succession, the emblems of the order. With the aid of the Junior Warden I will instruct you in their secret meaning. Brother Junior Warden, how are our emblems divided?

A.—Into three divisions; the first teaching our duty to God, the second to our fellow men, the third to ourselves.

Chief Patriarch: What constitutes the first division?

A.—The All-Seeing Eye, the Bible and the Altar of Incense.

Chief Patriarch: My brother, they are thus appropriated because the All-seeing Eye, enveloped in a blaze of light and glory, reminds us that the scrutinizing eye of Omnipotence is ever upon us; that our thoughts, words and actions are open to His view. The light of the morning and the darkness of the night are alike to Him; and he trieth the reins and searcheth the hearts of the children of men. Yet it at the same time illustrates that sleepless goodness which looks down in mercy upon our families and kindly ministers to our ever returning wants.

The Bible is an exhaustless fountain of truth; the storehouse from which all our principles are derived. Guided by its instructions we may approximate that golden age when the fetters of prejudice will be broken, the shackles of mental and moral bondage fall off; and man, redeemed and disenthralled from the slavish life of passion, will assert his high birthright and own the ties which bind him, in universal consanguinity with his brother man.

The Altar of Incense, reminds us of the rude altar of the Patriarch and the simplicity of that true worship, which the Ruler of the Universe requires of His intelligent creatures. No costly oblation; no rendering of the fruit of the body for the sin of the soul, but to act justly, love mercy and walk humbly with God. Brother Junior Warden, which emblems constitute the second great division?

A.—The Heart and Hand, the Scales and Sword, the Bow and Arrows, the Bundle of Sticks and Three Links, the Skull and Cross Bones and the Tent.

Chief Patriarch: The Heart and Hand imply that when we greet our brethren, it should be with that sincerity and affection which proceeds from the heart. This emblem also reminds us of that constant and uniform desire for the welfare of our brothers which should impel us to action in the furtherance of those plans that will most promote their happiness.

The Scales and Sword are emblematic of justice, which judges with candor and rewards with impartiality. Partiality may exist in the world but among Odd-fellows both justice and mercy are administered without regard to false distinctions of society. In the lodge room the high and the low, the rich and the poor, the learned and the unlearned meet as brothers and unitedly engage in the promotion of benevolence and truth.

By the Bow and Arrows, we are reminded of the covenant between Jonathan and David and are taught to put forth every laudable effort to save a brother from the wrath of an enemy. They also remind us (being implements of warfare) that we should always be ready to do battle in the cause of truth and justice.

The Bundle of Sticks is a beautiful emblem of union, and teaches the importance of that virtue in our benevolent enterprises. Separate the sticks and the strength of a child may destroy them, but while united a giant's power might be exerted in vain to break them. Separated we should be speedily broken and destroyed by the accumulating tide of worldly selfishness, but united as brothers we bid defiance to all opposition and triumph over the greatest difficulties. The chain which confines the bundle of sticks is composed of three links. Welded in the fires of purity, Friendship, Love and Truth, thus bound with the indissoluble chain of sincere friendship, unfeigned love and simple truth we may live in bonds of peace and harmoniously pursue our labors for the melioration of our race.

The Skull and Cross Bones, allude to the desire expressed by the Patriarchs Jacob and Joseph to have their bones removed from Egypt to the land of Canaan. They most forcibly remind us that we are bound by solemn engagements to give to the mortal remains of a departed brother decent sepulture, and while we lay his body in the tomb to cherish a lively recollection of his virtues, and bury all his imperfections beneath the clod which rests upon his bosom.

The Tent reminds us of the duty of hospitality, a virtue that was highly esteemed among our ancient brothers. It also teaches the mutability of life; that we, like those who have gone before us, are traveling to the Jordan of death. Soon will these earthly tents of ours be taken down and we like them pass beyond the swelling waters. Work then while it is day, for the night of death cometh, in which no man can work.

Brother Junior Warden, what emblems constitute the third division?

A.—The Sun, the Moon and Seven Stars, the Three Pillars, the Lamb, the Dove, the Serpent, the Globe, the Ark, the Bee Hive, the Hour Glass, the Sythe and the Coffin.

Chief Patriarch: The Sun, Moon and Stars are striking emblems of harmony and regularity. As they move in their appointed orbits, so should we pursue, undeviatingly, the course of duty pointed out by the rules of our order. The Sun is symbolical of that universal love by which we are distinguished, shedding its blessed light without distinction upon all.

The Moon represents the sorrowing and the destitute, shining in the night and gloom of their misfortune, with the rays reflected by the active benevolence of Odd-fellowship. And the Seven Stars represent the seven primary virtues by which all faithful Odd-fellows are distinguished: Friendship Love, Truth, Honor, Probity, Temperance and Chastity.

The Three Pillars represent Faith, Hope and Charity. They direct to an enlightened faith in God, the Father of our spirits, the Maker and Preserver of the Universe, and to that well grounded hope, which alone can cheer the soul when the taper of life is flickering in the the socket of mortality, lighting up the countenance with joy amid the sorrows of time, and giving serenity and peace in the moment of dissolution. They emphatically declare that, although we may possess every other qualification, if we are destitute of Charity we are but as the sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. They impress upon us the necessity of always wearing the robe of charity and brotherly affection, the cherished badge of the faithful and true.

The Lamb is an emblem of innocence and purity. It teaches that innocence of motive and purity of action, by which we should be distinguished in the transactions of life.

The Dove is an emblem of that harmlessness of pursuit which, guided by love, sends forth its messages of mercy with the green leaves of healing to the sorrowful and disconsolate.

The Serpent is an emblem of wisdom, and is placed among our symbols to indicate the necessity of a wise caution, which will protect our mysteries from improper disclosure and guide us in the proper regulation of our life and conduct.

The Globe represents the extensive field of labor. It not only teaches that we are to move onward in our work, until misfortune has no want to relieve and sorrow no tear to dry, but also that from whatever nation our brethren may come, they are not to be sent empty away.

The Ark reminds us of the receptacle of the two tables of stone, upon which the ten commandments were written. And as the prosperity of the ancient Israelites depended upon the observance of that law, deposited in the ark of the covenant, so will our happiness be promoted by an observance of our good and wholesome law.

The Bee Hive is a striking emblem of industry. It admonishes us to avoid indolence, and wisely to improve our time, remembering that they who would enjoy a green old age and pass the winter of their days in comfort and cheerful abundance, must improve the summer of their being, under the guidance of economical and well directed industry.

The Hour Glass points to the rapid flight of time and the frailty of human life. Like the sands of the hour glass we are passing away—how important that we improve our fleeting hours in order that we may meet our end with peace.

The Scythe, the universal emblem of time, is to us the symbol of death. As the grass falls before the mower's scythe, so man like the flower and grass of the field, must wither beneath the touch of time, and fall before the scythe of the king of terrors.

The Coffin points to the last home of man. However great or small, high or low, all must meet on this common level, all must submit to the dominion of death. How cheerless the home of the dead unenlivened by the prospect of immortal life, but hope bends over man's last resting place a bow bright with immortality, which, based upon earth, soars away towards God. Thus closes a brief interpretation of our expressive emblems. May their lessons be indellibly impressed upon your heart.

Chief Patriarch to the Encampment: Brethren you will rise and join our Most Excellent High Priest in the duties of his office.

PRAYER.

O Thou God of the Holy Patriarchs, lift upon us the light of Thy countenance, impress upon our hearts the precepts of our order and bless us in all our efforts to improve the family of mankind, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

CONCLUDING CHARGE, PATRIARCHAL DEGREE.

Chief Patriarch: I now present you the Crook, it was used by the Patriarchs of old, and strikingly reminds us of the simplicity of their lives and purity of their faith. They dwelt in tents and, surrounded by their flocks and herds, spent their lives in the inculcation of the most exalted social virtues. The onward march of civilization and the advance of human society, have deprived the world of much of that simplicity and virtue which gave its richest charm to the Patriarchal life. Here is the sacred retreat. We would revive that simplicity and inculcate that purity. Here we would lay the broad foundation of that universal brotherhood which shall link, in the golden chain of an ever expanding sympathy, heart with heart; man to man, until the vices which defile and the passions and prejudices, which separate the children of a common father, shall be extirpated from the earth, and the abodes of sorrow and suffering be lighted with the benignant beams of peace and love. To effect this great moral and social revolution in our selfish world, individual action is combined with associated effort. That each should do his individual duty is essential to the integrity of the whole. Ever let that principle of generous benificence dwell in your heart which, silently and unseen like the dews of heaven, blesses and refreshes the wasted and the poor with the gentle droppings of its bounty. Cherish the beautiful teachings of our ritual, which, falling upon the heart like rays of light upon the rose, shall color every affection of our nature and dictate every act of our lives. Succor the stranger in distress; and give him food and rest when he is hungry, without inquiring his country or his creed; by whatsoever vice he may have fallen; by what destiny he may be controlled. With your brother Patriarch guard against jealousy and strife. Remember that he is your brother; if, under the influence of imperfection, the common lot of mortals, he wrongs you, go to him and, in the language of affection, tell him his fault between him and you. If he repent, forgive him. Enter no harsh judgment against him; conscious of your own frailty, remember that to err is human, to forgive, divine. These, my brother, are the principles we should not only profess, but practice. A man may enter our camp and dwell beneath our tent. Mistaken confidence may invest him with our mysteries and clothe him with the badge of our order. He may be exalted to official station among us, but all this does not make him an Odd-fellow unless he behave and act as becomes an Odd-fellow.

You will now take rank in our Encampment as a brother of the Patriarchal Degree.

INITIATION, GOLDEN RULE DEGREE.

In this degree the Patriarchs are dressed in costumes to represent different nations, with the various emblems of their government and religion, manners and customs.

The candidate is received and blindfolded in the ante-room by the Junior Warden or some one specially deputed and is then addressed as follows:

Junior Warden to Candidate: You are now to be initiated in the Degree of the Golden Rule. There is a solemn and impressive ceremony through which you must pass. You will be candid and firm, and answer truly and without hesitation, such questions as may be put to you.

[They now come to the inside door of the Encampment and the Junior Warden gives the Enter Sign—three raps.]

Farm and Garden.

Whistle and Hoe.

There's a boy just over the garden fence,
Who is whistling all through the livelong day;
And his work is not just a mere pretense,
For you see the weeds he has cut away.
Whistle and hoe,
Sing as you go,
Shorten the row
By the songs you know.

Not a word of bemoaning his task I hear,
He has scarcely time for a growl, I know,
For his whistle sounds as merry and clear,
He must find some pleasure in every row;
Whistle and hoe,
Sing as you go,
Shorten the row
By the songs you know.

But then while you whistle, be sure that you hoe,
For if you are idle the briars will spread;
And whistle alone to the end of the row
May do for the weeds, but is bad for the bread.
Whistle and hoe,
Sing as you go,
Shorten the row
By the songs you know.

Grass and Hay for Milch Cows.

A correspondent of the Utica Herald holds the following ground in relation to the feeding of milch cows on grass and hay. The important point to Western dairymen is one made in relation to cutting hay when young.

I find that grass alone, whether green or cured, answers all purposes the year round (by grass, I include clover), with this one important qualification—that it be cut green and well cured. This makes about half difference; that is, there is about as much available substance in one pound of green feed dried, as in two pounds when ripe. I know instances where cows have been kept during the winter on twenty-five pounds of ripe hay per day. They were, of course, not in good condition. But, instead, double the available nutritive substance, which an equal weight (twenty five pounds) of green-dried hay would have furnished, and you would have had double the nutritive benefit, which would have brought your cows to a high condition. Or supply the deficiency by grain, sufficient to reach this condition, and the amount would have been considerably more than is usually fed with old ripe hay, showing thus that good green hay takes the precedence over the usual ripe hay and grain, being besides much cheaper.

Grass, green or dried, if of a good quality, and fed all that is wanted, will produce a maximum, or very nearly a miximum quantity of milk, the superior quality of the milk more than making up what may be lacking in quantity, so that so far as milk alone is concerned, grass (green or dried) stands first as a feed, surpassing all other feeds, whether single or combined. And it will sustain the animal while giving milk and while in calf, and fat her when free of the drain. Grain doubtless would aid in the fattening process.

Take Care of the Grindstone.

A good grindstone is worth saving. If you leave it in the sun the top gets hard and glassy. If the lower portion is kept in a trough of water, the portion so saturated will wear fast and consequently become flat. If you have the stone hung true, and keep it under cover, it will remain as sound as it came from the quarry; that is, if it was uniform in quality then, it will remain so. If you have a water tight vessel suspended over the stone, with a faucet or other arrangement for letting the water on the stone regularly, to be graduated at pleasure, it will be found not only economical, but very much more pleasant for grinding than on the stone as usually kept.

The Happy Farmer.

That graceful writer, Sumner Ellis, says of a happy-natured tiller of the soil, "I knew a farmer who thought all weather the best weather; a barren year good as a fruitful one, as giving the earth a needed rest or sort of Sabbath, and who never quarrelled with the capacities of the soil, but took it gladly as it was, and accepted white beans with the same grace as he would wheat. Blessed is the man who can contentedly give up what he must."

Home and Health Hints.

Falling Hair.—The hair like the nails, is very much effected by the various conditions of the physical frame. One of the first indications of failing vigor is in the dryness of the hair, its falling off or turning gray. It is said that washing the hair with sage tea, will prevent its falling, others recommend water with a little ammonia in it; a diet of coarse food, of bread made of the whole grain and of the great variety of mushes is said to improve the color of the hair. Iron and sulphur which give the hair its color, iron predominating in black hair, and sulphur in red and chestnut, are found in the husk of the grain, the part rejected by those who eat only fine flour. Unventilated hats and head-gear which is heavy as well as warm, are apt to make the hair fall. Italian, Greek and Spanish women, who never wear hats, and are much in the open air, have abundant and luxuriant growth of this much prized ornament of women. But we warn our readers against all patent nostrums that pretend to restore, dye, or stimulate the growth of the hair. They contain either Spanish flies, or bismuth, or lead, which are poisons—the minerals producing paralysis and sometimes death, and the cantharides rising minute blisters or irritating the surface, and ultimately doing more harm than good.—N. Y. Tribune.

Hints to Housewives.

There are three things which a housewife should never forget to see that her family have plenty of—sunshine, pure air, and a wholesome and varied diet, as the health of her family depend in a great measure upon them. Sunshine and fresh air are in many localities easily obtained, but the food question is one that requires more thought and labor. Food containing much phosphorous is best for students and business men, and for all who use their brain, for "thought, even in the manual exercise of writing, exhausts the vital fluid with incredible rapidity." Graham bread, oat-meal and fish are the best food for such persons—in fact, for all persons, as they are equally good to restore the waste of the tissues, and if growing children use them daily, their teeth will be stronger and less likely to decay.

Many cooks use soda to excess, forgetting that grease and soda combined make soap. "Soda or saleratus should never be used, unless bread or pastry is sour, or unless you add to the flour, before mixing, a proportionate quantity of acid, such as cream of tartar. If you add soda alone to perfectly sweet material, it has no more effect in making it rise than so much salt. When using soda, be careful to use only enough to neutralize the acid. There are those who consider the use of soda as beneficial to health. They make a serious mistake; the free use of soda for a length of time will result in an impaired digestion." For receipts which call for a level teaspoonful of cream of tartar and a half teaspoonful of soda, I occasionally use one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder. If the baking powder is good, it will be sufficient.

Eggs and yeast are healthful and pure, and should be used to raise all kinds of bread, muffins, etc. Some will say, I cannot afford eggs for such purposes. Can you afford to lose your health and pay doctors' bills?

Bread should be queen of every kitchen. It should not be neglected for an instant after it is ready to make up, and those having charge of it should not forget that bread sweetened with soda will not have the same kind of sweetness that it had before turning sour. As bread rises slightly while baking, it should not be quite light enough when put into the oven. I know what I am saying, for I have had much experience in this branch of cookery. It makes me sad to happen in at a neighbor's at meal time, and see the family eat fried meat, hot soda biscuit, or bread so light that all its sweetness is lost, even if it is not absolutely sour. It is the first duty of every woman who has charge of domestic affairs, to see that good, wholesome food is regularly prepared for her family.—Country Gentleman.

To Dry Sweet Corn.—When the corn has become best for table use, remove all husks and silks. With a sharp knife cut just the ends of the kernal off, and with the knife scrape the milk and balance of the corn, leaving the hull on the cob. Now put the corn in pie-tins, or on plates, an inch thick, and place in the oven and just scald the milk; then place in the sun, or any warm place, to dry. When wanted for use, put in warm water and let soak some time, and cook slowly. When done, add a little sweet milk, a small piece of butter, salt and pepper to taste. This is far ahead of the old way of cooking before drying.

LESSON XXXVII.—SEPT. 13, 1874.—THE FIVE THOUSAND FED.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK vi. 34-44.—Commit verse 34.

34 And Jesus, when he came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion toward them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd: and he began to teach them many things.

35 And when the day was far now spent, his disciples came unto him, and said, This is a desert place, and now the time is far passed:

36 Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy themselves bread: for they have nothing to eat.

37 He answered and said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they say unto him, Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat?

38 He said unto them, How many loaves have ye? go and see. And when they knew, they say, Five, and two fishes.

39 And he commanded them to make all sit down by companies upon the green grass.

40 And they sat down in ranks, by hundreds, and by fifties.

41 And when he had taken the five loaves and two fishes, he looked up to heaven, and blessed, and brake the loaves, and gave them to his disciples to set before them; and the two fishes divided he among them all.

42 And they did all eat, and were filled.

43 And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes.

44 And they that did eat of the loaves were about five thousand men.

LEADING TEXT.—Thou openest thy hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing.—Ps. cxlv. 16.

CENTRAL THOUGHT.—Jesus filleth the hungry with good things.

BIBLE READINGS.—(1) Matt. xiv. 13-21; (2) Luke ix. 10-17; (3) John vi. 1 14; (4) Num. xi. 4-23, 31, 32; (5) 2 Kings iv. 38-44; (6) Matt. xv. 32-39; (7) Mark vi. 34-44.

Introduction.—The cruel death of the Baptist by order of Herod, caused Jesus to depart into a desert place, near Bethsaida Gaulonitis, supposed to be on the north-east side of the sea. The multitude follow him, he teaches them.

Analysis.—I. The universal question. How feed them? A lad has five loaves and two fishes; nothing among so many. How shall starving souls be fed? II. The sufficient answer. Give ye them to eat! The multitude seated in order, the loaves taken, blessed, broken, distributed, all eat, have enough, and twelve baskets full left over.

Lessons.—(1) Value of order; (2) of patience; (3) of thanks before eating. Spiritual Lessons.—(1) Jesus the living bread. (2) Trust God for all we want. (3) Fear not to lose earthly in search of heavenly comforts.

Topics for Study.—The circumstances—why rest sought—the place—the feeling of Jesus—the question—why put—the answer—by whom—the resources of the disciples—in whose possession—the Lord's order—why in companies—the lesson to us—his act—the lesson to us—the attendants—the number fed—the fragments—lesson to us—the peculiarities of this miracle—of the record—the questions often asked—the answer it suggests to us—the lesson it teaches us on the lower plane, and on the higher.—American S. S. Union Lessons.

Do not allow three or four children to do all the talking, questioning, and answering. If there is a precocious child in the class, see that he answers only his share. If there is a dull child, be sure to get something from him and enlarge upon it a little for his encouragement.—Ralph Wells.

SIGNS, GRIPS AND PASS-WORDS

OF A—

SUBORDINATE ENCAMPMENT;

AS ADOPTED BY THE

GRAND LODGE OF THE UNITED STATES I. O. of O. F.

Session of 1851 at Baltimore, Maryland.

COMMITTEE OF REVISION.

Past Grand Master, James L. Ridgely, of Maryland; Past Grand, James D. McCabe, of Virginia; Past Grand Sire, J. A. Kennedy, of New York; Past Deputy Grand Sire, Wm. W. Moore, of District of Columbia.

BY-LAW OF GRAND LODGE U. S. RELATING TO ENCAMPMENTS.

All State, District or Territorial Grand Lodge Grand Encampments shall enforce upon their subordinates a strict adherance to the work of the order, according to the forms furnished by the Grand Lodge of the United States, and shall be held responsible for any irregularities that they may allow under their jurisdiction. They shall neither adopt nor use or suffer to be adopted or used in their jurisdiction any other Charges, Lectures, Degrees, Ceremonies, Forms of Installation or Regalia than those prescribed by the Grand Lodge of the United States.

OPENING CEREMONY, PATRIARCHAL DEGREE.

(One rap by the Chief Patriarch commands order.)

Chief Patriarch to Junior Warden: Junior Warden, see that all present are Patriarchs and that the Watches are set and the Pass Word given.

Junior Warden: Chief Patriarch, the Watches are set and the Pass Word given.

Chief Patriarch: Has the High Priest assumed his station?

Answer by Junior Warden according to the fact.

Chief Patriach to the Encampment: The Officers and Patriarchs will rise, while the Junior Warden assists me in opening the Encampment in the Patriarchal Degree.

Junior Warden: By the direction of the Chief Patriarch I proclaim this Encampment open in the Patriarchal Degree.

Chief Patriarch to Senior Warden: Senior Warden, what is your duty in the Encampment?

A.—It is my duty to perform the ceremonies entrusted to me and to support the Chief Patriarch and the High Priest in the discharge of their duties.

Chief Patriarch to Junior Warden: Junior Warden, what is your duty?

A.—To examine the Patriarchs prior to opening the Encampment, and to assist the Chief Patriarch and High Priest, according to my office, and to see that the signs are given correctly.

Chief Patriarch to Scribe: Scribe, explain your duty.

Scribe: It is my duty to record all proceedings of the Encampment and to receive all its monies and pay them to the Treasurer, taking his receipt for the same.

Chief Patriarch to Sentinel: Sentinel, explain your duty.

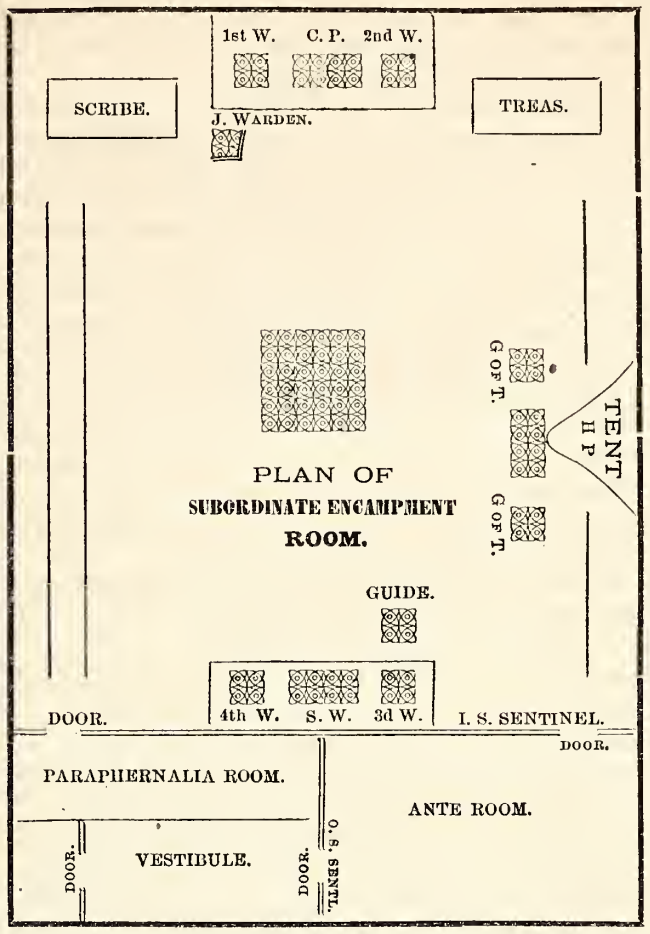
Sentinel: It is my duty to prove every Patriarch before he is admitted; to report his name to the Chief Patriarch and to suffer none to retire without the Pass Word of the evening or to return without that Pass Word or the Pass Word of the degree in which the Encampment is opened.

Chief Patriarch to High Priest: Most Excellent High Priest, explain the duty of your office.

High Priest: It is my duty to counsel the members of the Encampment to improve and perfect themselves in the lectures and charges as well as in the practice of their doctrines; to conform to the General Regulations and thus preserve the uniform mode of working in this Encampment, and to give such instructions to newly initiated members as the good of the Fraternity may require.

Chief Patriarch to Encampment: Patriarchs, my office gives me charge of this Encampment and requires me to see that the respective officers and brethren perform their duties in a proper manner. It is unnecessary now to recapitulate those duties or to enlarge upon the relations which we all bear to each other. Our own experience has established the value of our laws and regulations and we are pledged strenuously to support them and be ready at all times to aid in their execution. We are all not to palliate or aggravate the offenses of our brethren, but in the decision of every trespass we should judge with candor, admonish with friendship and reprehend with justice. Such is the nature of the engagements which we are bound by the most sacred ties to perform.

Officers and Patriarchs, be attentive while the Most Excellent High Priest offers up a prayer.



OPENING PRAYER, PATRIARCHAL DEGREE.

Heavenly Father, we pray thee look with favor upon this meeting, guide us in our efforts to improve the time before us. Let thy care and the good we receive at thy hands instruct us in our duties toward each other, and so direct all our acts that thy name may be magnified now and forever, Amen.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

(Two raps by the Chief Patriarch calls the Encampment to order for the transaction of business.)

1. Scribe, you will call the roll of officers and read the proceedings of our last meeting.
2. Does any brother know of a Patriarch who is entitled to our aid or sympathy?
3. Previous proposals for membership will now be considered.
4. Admision of candidates and conferring of degrees.
5. Proposals for membership received and referred.
6. Unfinished business shown by the minutes.
7. New business.

The above diagram shows only the relative positions of the officers of the Encampment and tent of the High Priest. The Lodge and Encampment often use the same rooms in common; of course holding their meetings on different evenings.

INITIATION, PATRIARCHIAL DEGREE.

[The candidate having been received in the Ante Room by the Junior Warden, is blindfolded and led to the door of the Encampment when the Junior Warden throws open the door and enters with the candidate.]

Sentinel: The camp is assailed! (Repeated by others while the blindfold is removed.)

Chief Patriarch: Guards! Protect! Protect our camp! (The Guards rush upon him.)

Junior Warden: Hold! this is no enemy, he is a brother and a friend.

Sentinel: Do friends thus linger in the ways of error? He can not pass but as a captive.

Junior Warden: Bind him then (while this is being done the Junior Warden continues.) True friendship will sustain him in all his trials, and remember, though Prejudice impose bonds and fetters that Justice will award the greetings of a Brother. [The candidate is bound, blindfolded and again the Junior Warden takes charge of him.]

Junior Warden to Candidate: My brother, the trial to which you are subjected will serve to test your faith and sincerity, be not weary in well doing, for in due season you shall reap if you faint not. You are as one entering a pathless forest relying on patience and perseverence for his guides, but all cause for gloom and doubt will soon be dissipated, for here we approach the Patriarchs, among whom the true God is acknowledged and reverenced. Here is one of their tents let us apply for food and rest.

First Guard of Tent: Who comes there?

A. by Junior Warden.—A traveler who needs both food and rest.

High Priest: The door of a Patriarch's tent is never closed against a stranger in distress. [The Candidate is conducted into the tent and the bonds and blindfold are removed.] Stranger, rest beneath the covering of this tent, [High Priest sits down and presents bread and water.] Partake of this bread and drink of this pure water. Hospitality to the stranger is a solemn duty acknowledged and practiced among the Patriarchs. The God whom we worship is the father of all men; he sends his rain and his sunshine alike upon the evil and the good. The ties of a common humanity unite us with every creature and stamp the character of brothers upon the whole intelligent creation. But while this is our duty and should ever be our practice, it is equally imperative upon us to admit no traitor or spy into our camp, to mar our happiness or disturb our peace. It is necessary, therefore, having relieved your present wants, that you should now undergo a strict examination, to prove that you are no enemy in disguise, but a true and an honest man. Are you an Odd-fellow?

A. by Junior Warden.—I am.

Price, $1.25.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,
Price, $1.35.

THE FALL CAMPAIGN.

The hurry of harvest is over with all its anxieties, disappointments or glad surprise. The summer vacations are ending and the sober, earnest work is resumed with the return of sober, earnest days. Mothers whose little children have drooped through the sultry days of July and August, bid the summer good bye with a sigh of relief. We turn from another season, which we looked forward to with joy, greatful to God for his tenderness and mercy. It has brought unexpected afflictions to many of our readers, the death of friends, the loss of property, disappointed expectations, yet these are only the thorns among our beautiful flowers of love, peace and prosperity. With heart and voice we can say his "mercy endureth forever."

The Cynosure was enlarged last April. The publishers in enlarging it, sought to make it in form and appearance all that could be desired. They did not ask, what will be the cheapest, but what will be the most convenient and acceptable shape in which to present the paper to our readers, believing that such a shape would ultimately prove to be the cheapest.

The editors and contributers also have, with self-denying vigor, endeavored to give our subscribers the greatest possible value for their money. These labors have not been bestowed in vain. Warm, whole-souled commendation of the paper has come from all parts of the country, and from Canada. This evidence that our labor has been appreciated, together with a feeling of God's approbation, has strengthened us and made us hopeful when the Cynosure cash receipts were much less than enough to pay the Cynosure expense.

Now that the summer is over, we expect that the tide will turn.

As we have said all along, we need a list of 10,000 subscribers in order to publish the paper in a satisfactory manner. Money is not, we believe, the object for which we labor, but we need it as a means for accomplishing an important end, viz., arousing this country to the evils of secret societies, and in promoting a pure Christianity.

We hope all our friends who desire to see this cause succeed and the paper patronized as it deserves to be, will commence to work for its increased circulation and persevere in that work. The subscriptions of about one-fourth of our subscribers expired this summer, many of these were three months men and we should judge that only about one-fourth of them renewed their subscriptions. We promised last June to tell you about the middle of September how the States stand in patronizing the Cynosure after the summer's work was over.

It is two weeks before this report will be given. Let subscribers in Illinois, and Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania and all the other States send in as many subscriptions before this report is made as possible. Our friends in Indiana have only two months more to work for the accomplishment of the task that has been given them. The task of getting one thousand Cynosures taken in Indiana by the fourth of November next. Do not fail in this undertaking. You will not if you each take this as a personal request and work in earnest. There is not a State in which the Cynosure is taken of which we do not ask a similar effort to extend its circulation.

The fall and winter are yet before us. Dr. Cook, of Indiana, writes: "We need a full force of lecturers in the field this fall and winter. We will put forth renewed efforts accompanied with persevering prayers for the accomplishment of this work.

The Cynosure is taken in thirty-two of our thirty-seven United States, and also in five of our ten territories. We believe that these subscribers can promote their own best interests by extending the circulation of the Cynosure in their localities as really as they promote the interests of the Cynosure in this way. Send in one subscriber for three months if you cannot do more; but there are multitudes of people in our land who do not read the Cynosure who would be sincerely grateful to persons who put the Cynosure into their hands by persuading them to subscribe for it.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

All will be glad to see that we have secured the Encampment Degrees and also the Rebecca or Ladies Degree for publication which will make a complete Exposition of Odd-fellowship. We are sorry to be behind the announced time in completing the book, however, but we hope to have the first edition ready by Sept 10th.

Extra copies of the Cynosure, circulars and subscription papers will be sent free to persons who apply for them for canvassing purposes.

WANTED THREE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-FIVE RENEWALS for the Cynosure. Three hundred and sixty-five subscriptions expire during the month of September. We ask as a special favor that all these friends renew promptly.

An agent who travels much in the central part of our State writes that he thinks that we will have a hundred subscribers in Morgan county this fall. There is not a county in the State but what casts more than one thousand votes. Can we not have a hundred subscriptions in every county? We will then be prepared to hold a rousing State meeting at Springfield or in Chicago. Do what you can! Every effort helps.

BEHIND TIME.

On account of not receiving the copy for the Encampment Degrees as soon as expected, the Publishers have been delayed in completing the Exposition of Odd-fellowship. We hope to announce the completion of the book in our next issue.

Executive Committee Notice.—The Executive Committee of the National Christian Association will meet at the Cynosure office on Saturday, September 19th, at 11 o'clock A. M., for the transaction of business. A full attendance is requested. By order of the Chairman.

NOTICE.—All persons desiring to consult with the Corresponding Secretary of the N. C. A. concerning lectures or any other topic connected with the work of opposing secret societies, can see him or his assistant at the Christian Cynosure office, No. 13 Wabash Ave., from 9 to 11 o'clock, A. M. any day in the week except Sunday. C. A. BLANCHARD, Cor. Sec'y.

Our seventh annual meeting is to be held in Pittsburgh next May or June. Seven years previous to this date the first convention of the Nat'l Christian Association was held in that city and at one of its sessions passed the following resolution: Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that we need a paper, promptly started, ably edited, and widely circulated, which shall make opposition to secret societies a speciality. The Cynosure was started to meet the requirements of that convention. It was "promptly started." It is "ably edited." Let us have it "widely circulated," before we return to Pittsburgh after seven years' of labor to give account of our stewardship.

Topics of the Time.

THE TWIN RELIC OF BARBARISM.—Brigham Young has replied to the charges in court of his nineteenth and lately seceded wife, that he has but one lawfully wedded wife; the others are celestial wives after the manner and belief of the Mormon church. This reluctant admission from the head of a family of sixty-nine women and children, whom he meagerly supports on an income of $6,000 per month, is strangely significant. Although a mere dodge to avoid punishment for bigamy, it reveals the disgraceful and slavish position of the Mormon women, and the utter hollowness of the Mormon pretensions. Polygamy has been the corner-stone of their system and a Biblical right was claimed for the practice. Men were driven out from Salt Lake, were persecuted, were murdered for not subscribing to the doctrine. But now that the examples of Abraham and Jacob have failed to exhonorate Brigham Young, his power must certainly wane among his miserable dupes, when the plural wives understand that they have no legal claim on their husbands nor the husbands on them, and that the ceremony of marriage was of a mere spiritual nature. What effect this new feature may have in court it is too early to anticipate.

CHURCH WORK FOR TEMPERANCE.—The late General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church, under a conviction that the existing evils of intemperance are largely due to the negligence of the churches, and may be removed by harmonious action on their part, appointed a committee to suggest action. The report proposes an early convention to organize a National Alliance, and carry into effect such measures as shall make the work of the church what it should be. In many States the temperance laws make prohibition the work of individual towns. A church alliance could only remotely assist them. But in State and national work it may find a field of action suited to its nature, where the wind-mills are giants. So long as the general government licenses the brewer, the distiller and the tobacco factory, and a State remains without a law which provides for local prohibition, there is a great work open for the church organizations which must not be neglected.

A NEW CONTROVERSY.—Prof. Tyndall, the leading English scientist, some time ago set the world agog by a challenge that revealed more ignorance than originality, viz., the "prayer test." He is anxious that the current of religious controversy shall not stagnate, and has, therefore, put forth another proposition in an address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, of which he is President. Stated briefly, it is that matter is self-existent; that all living forms are derived from organisms less complex, that all have developed from some single original form by processes only material, and that this form sprung, in some way yet unknown, from matter itself, and, therefore, the intervention of a Creator is superfluous. He recognizes religion as a simple emotion, but useful as such in the regulation of society. This materialism is no new thing. Nearly the same ideas were held before the time of Epicurus, and Cicero held that the Latin religion was chiefly useful in the hands of government for the control of the populace. There need be no alarm over the expression of such sentiments except for their author. Those who say in their hearts "there is no God" will sometime come to be of a better mind, and the refutation of their arguments will strengthen our reasons for the hope of a better life.

ICELAND'S THOUSAND YEARS.—If antiquity were proof of virtue the sixty-six thousand dwellers in the ice-guarded island of the north Atlantic might turn missionaries to the race. For during the first week of August they were celebrating the thousandth anniversary of their settlement amid volcanoes, geysers and icebergs. Though so old, Iceland is yet a dependency of Denmark, whose King, Christian IX., attended the celebration, with other visitors from Europe and America, bearing to his subjects the present of a new constitution. The celebration began on Sunday with services in the three hundred Lutheran churches of the island and continued until Friday with dancing and festivities. Though not attended with great magnificence, the celebration was sufficiently impressive for the simple-minded islanders. It is to be hoped that the new constitution will not engender political strifes, such as the younger nations have learned to dread, among a people who have lived in a quiet and almost patriarchal style so many years. The isolation of the Icelanders has saved them from many temptations. The art of war is unknown, and the simple pleasures of the household flourish in perfection. But should the civil polity practiced by more pretending peoples obtain a foothold their millenium is at an end.

A Voice in Canada.

AN ESSAY ON SECRET SOCIETIES READ BY REV. DANIEL POMEROY, BEFORE THE BRANTFORD DISTRICT MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION OF THE M. E. CHURCH, HELD AT SPRINGFORD, ONT., AUG. 6, 1872.

Every intelligent man must regard secret organized power as dangerous to the well being of community. The strife, bloodshed, and commotion, found in every country and age where Jesuits carry on their secret correspondencies, are evidences of the unholy, withering nature of their organization. The Ku-klux Klan is surely of no advantage to community in the United States. The Fenian organization has spread terror and alarm all over this dominion.

Many in the United States might say, "Oh! be charitable to the Ku-klux Klan. Their aims and motives are innocent. There is no cause of alarm. True, they have their secret lodges and are bound by oath to be true to their purposes, but no person knows that they are planning evil. Many, however, suspect evil, and the evil has been felt and seen in riot, plunder and blood.

Many in Canada were offended when Jesuit and Fenian organizations were denounced and proscribed as dangerous, and said, "These are controlled by holy priests, ministers of the most high God." Go and ask those families who are bereaved of their loved ones who were shot down like dogs at Ridge Way, if Jesuit and Fenian organizations are not dangerous.

Another oath-bound organized secret faction under the name of Freemasonry is in existence in our country which we have a reasonable right to suspect and proscribe. The very act of taking a secret oath which binds to secrecy in connection with system of falsehood, should awaken suspicion in every thinking mind. There is no propriety in making any society secret unless some undue or improper advantage is intended. The first great truth of society is the equality and unity of the human family; and the first great lie of society, including almost every possible wrong, is partiality of favoritism between man and man, where both have acted alike. The simple fact that men possess common human attributes makes humanity a unit. God as the father of all mankind made all men equal in their wants and interests, and with equal rights adapted to the social state in which he placed them. Some of these rights are rights of life, conscience, property and commerce, and any act that interferes with this equality of rights is impious. To deprive a fellow man of life is murder. To deprive him of this liberty of conscience is tyranny. To deprive him of property is robbery; and to deprive him of his equal and just rights of commerce is equal robbery. We repeat it. To assert favoritism in public transactions on the mere grounds of a secret confederacy is a great lie, and when reduced to practice is unjust and impiously cruel; and when sworn to is in itself a moral perjury. It swears special favoritism to confederates as just.

We are not left without proof with regard to the oaths and actions of these secret organizations. Revelations have been made upon these subjects which alarmed thousands of respectable men, and men, too, of stout heart and sound mind. All readily concede that Fenianism and Ku-kluxism are unmitigated curses in society, and the revelations that have been made on Masonry prove to it to be of the same character.

In the year 1826 Wm. Morgan, of the village of Batavia, N. Y., wrote a book exposing the secrets of Masonry. As soon as it became known, Morgan was seized, (Sept. 11th, 1826) and carried off, no person could tell whither. Committees of vigilance were formed and an investigation was instituted which resulted in tracing the abductors and their victim to Fort Niagara; and it ultimately appeared from the confession of Valance and other evidences that he was taken out on Lake Ontario and sunk in its depths. Our venerable Bishop Richardson of the M. E. church in Canada, then a traveling minister, was lodging at the house of Mr.—— who was an actor in the crime; and he (the Bishop) was disturbed by Mr.—— rising from his bed and going away in the night. On the next morning the Bishop asked the cause of the disturbance, when Mr.—— appeared confused. Subsequently when conversing with him about the murder, the Bishop asked him, "Why did you not save that man's life?" To which he made no reply.

Prosecutions were instituted against those who were connected with the atrocious murder, which resulted in the conviction on some minor charges, and imprisonment of Loton Lawson, N. G. Cheesbro, Edward Sawyer and John Sheldon; and although no murder was judicially established, it was made evident that oaths are administered and taken by those who are admitted into some of the higher degrees of Masonry which disqualify them for serving as jurors or witnesses where a brother Mason of like degree is a party, and his antagonist is not a Mason. Judges both in Canada and the United States have given this decision. In 1828 in western New York Anti-masonic societies were formed which cast, in the year 1830, 28,000 votes for Mr. Granger for Governor. Similar societies were formed in other States numbering hundreds of thousands. Fifteen hundred lodges suspended, forty-five thousand of their number became Anti-masons. All these Anti-masonic societies were convinced that Morgan was murdered as described. That Morgan was missed is true; that Masons tried to establish that he was still alive is equally true; that they failed to produce him to save their brethren from imprisonment is also true; and whoever makes an investigation of the subject and says that he does not believe that Morgan was murdered by Masons, community is compelled to question his judgment or his veracity. Books are in the hands of the public, published by Morgan, Elder Bernard and other, professing to make true revelations of the oaths and practices of Masons. These revelations prompted thousands of the citizens of Rhode Island to petition the Legislature of that State to make inquiry into Freemasonry. The Legislature appointed a committee with power to examine Freemasons to ascertain whether the oaths taken by Freemasons were the same as published by Morgan and Bernard. The committee succeeded in bringing before them men who had taken the first ten degrees of Masonry, who were still adhering Masons. They put them on their oath under the pains and penalties of perjury; in these circumstances they owned that Morgan and Bernard had published the oaths of Masons word for word. Here under oath they dare not deny the truth because there were thousands of seceding Masons who were ready to confront them and prove their guilt.

In the year 1833, petitions were sent to the Legislature of the State of Connecticut, signed by thousands, praying for legislative enactment against taking oaths not appointed by law. The petitions were referred to a committee whose sittings were open to the public and resulted in bringing Masonic oaths to light. The committee examined Messrs. Hanks, Welsh and Hatch, all men of high reputation, and who had taken many degrees in Masonry. These men stated under oath that Masons swear to conceal the secrets of Freemasons, and in some degrees treason and murder are not excepted. They swear to deliver each other from trouble or difficulties without exception of right or wrong, even at the peril of their own lives. They swear to favor each other in political action and business transactions. They swear to retaliate and persecute until death the violation of Masonic obligations. The report of the committee was that the administration of such oaths were highly improper, and should be prohibited by law: 1st, Because they were unauthorized by law: 2d, Because they obligate the person so taking them to violate and disregard the law; 3d, Because the administration of extra-judicial oaths is blasphemous. This report agrees with the 25th article of the Articles of Religion of the Methodist Episcopal church, which reads: "As we confess that vain and rash swearing is forbidden Christian men by our Lord Jesus Christ and James his apostle, so we judge that the Christian religion doth not prohibit, that a man may swear when the magistrate requireth, in a cause of faith and charity, so it be done according to the prophet's teaching, in justice, judgment and truth." The Rev. Mr. Finney, well known in the Christian world, in a late work published by him, states that he had taken the three first degrees of Masonry and that the oaths published by Morgan and Bernard are as he took them in a Masonic lodge, and as they were uniformly taken.

If there is any faith in which Christians agree, it is that we should love, obey and promote truth, and hate, repel and destroy falsehood. Truth has two meanings: 1st, The correct understanding of a thing; 2d, The correct representation of a thing to others. Falsehood is the opposite of truth, and means either the wrong understanding of a subject, or the wrong representation of a subject to others. All truth is valuable according to its trueness, all falsehood is evil in proportion to its falsity. Truth begets perfection. Falsehood begets deformity. Truth begets life. Falsehood begets death. Every truth has a value. Every falsehood is dangerous. We do not believe that doctrine, that a pleasing lie is better than an unpleasant truth. Give us the truth though it be bitter. God loves the truth and hates falsehood. To love truth is God like. To love error is perversion, depravity, devilish. Jesus says lie not at all, and if one single lie was established against him we would reject him. Paul would not have told one single lie to have converted the whole Roman Empire to Christianity. How disgraceful to Christianity, and how reproachful to its founder that a word derived from the name of Jesus, JESUITISM, signifies chicanery and lies. Jesuits teach that telling lies with good intentions is not only right but meritorious; that it is the intention that makes the character of the act; that good intention purifies lying and perjury. They regard it insulting to their church to call their false histories lying, and their false swearing when done in favor of the church, perjury. They call these things expediencies for good. But expediencies for a confederacy, and truth and right are different things. Nothing should be expedient which is either false or unjust. It is as sinful to swear falsely in favor of Romanism as in any other matter. It is as sinful to commit a moral pejury in a Freemason lodge on your knees before a minister, it may be, as to commit purjury in a court-house before a judge. It is as sinful to lie about the history of the Romish church, or about the history of Freemasons, as to lie in relation to anything else; and it is as much a crime to blaspheme in a Freemason lodge as it is to blaspheme in a bar-room. Every man who has read history and the popular works of Freemasons and who has listened to Masonic lectures knows that Freemasonry is a system of falsehood. William Preston in a treatise on Masonry, published in the year 1792, regards it as coeval with creation, and states that God is a Mason. One of our own doctors in one of his popular lectures represents it as having its origin in the building of the Tower of Babel. Others more moderate fix its origin at the building of Solomon's Temple, when as they say Hiram sent an architect to draw the design of the temple, and a band of workmen, among whom was a widow's son who formed a Freemason's lodge which met in the temple. Solomon's Temple figures prominently among Masonic symbols, and Masonic writers and orators abound in allusions to it. Every intelligent man knows that all these pretentions to antiquity are black falsehood. The Bible informs us that the design of the temple was given by God himself. From the best and most learned sources we know that operative Masonry had its origin in the seventh century, when a company of builders engaged in erecting bridges and Roman edifices obtained a Papal bull securing to them certain privileges. Subsequently for their advantage they admitted in to their number common laborers to assist in the work of building, and those Romish priests who traveled with them for the purpose of giving directions and managing the finances. Through the influence and advice of these priests, that they might have easier access to their pockets, men of wealth, who were interested in these edifices were also admitted; here began speculative Masonry. Gradually this coaliton of operative and speculative Masonry declined. In the year 1717 four lodges met at the celebrated Apple-tree Tavern, London, and organized speculative Freemasonry, using some of the old rules and adopting some new ones. All pretentions to farther antiquity is positively false.

Freemasonry professes to be benevolent. This, too, is a false pretense. Masons may pay to each other some stipulated sums as debts, as insurance companies do, but do they build asylums for the poor and destitute? The opposite is the fact. The halt, the maimed, the blind, the old—the real objects of charity are by them excluded, neither do they send the Gospel to their brother pagan Masons. Where and when have they given the first example of true benevolence?

It also professes to be Christian. What a falsehood! To come at once to the point. It is easily proved that papal Christianity is only another title for pagan idolatry. It is a system of idolatry in a Christian name, whose costume is a strange mixture of paganism, Judaism and Christianity. From the Hindoo, Romanism borrows her masses for the dead and multiplicity of intercessions of the dead for the living, from Apollo's ever-flaming shrine she gets her ever-lighted candles to illume her altars, from the Persian priests she stole her tiara, from the Jewish Rabbins she took her embroidered mantle, and her name from Christianity. Were we here to go into detail we could easily verify the identity of Romish and pagan idolatry. Masonry being the offspring of Romanism is a motley mixture of pagan Romanism and Chistian Romanism, between which there is littledifference. Captain George Smith, a Masonic writer, remarks on the origin of Masonry: "We deduce it regularly from the first astronomers on the plains of Chaldea, to the wise and mystic kings of Egypt, the sages of Greece and the philosophers of Rome." The ancient Druids of Europe and the Magii of Persia were priests of the sun. In Masonry many of their ceremonies are preserved in their original state. Masonic lodges, if built for the purpose, are constructed to correspond with the apparent motion of the sun, and in the roof or ceiling the sun should be represented. In some of the ceremonies the Master asks the Apprentice the following questions and gets the following answers: Q.—How is a lodge situated? A.—East and West. Q.—Why so? A.—As the sun rises in the East and opens the day etc. Q.—Where stand your Wardens? A.—In the West. Q.—What is their business? A.—As the sun sets in the West, etc. "Egypt," says Smith, "from whence we derive many of our mysteries, has always born a distinguished rank in history. In their system their principal hero-gods, Osiris and Idis, theologically represented the Supreme Being and universal nature, and physically the two great celestial luminaries, the sun and moon, by whose influence all nature was actuated. The experienced brethren are well informed what affinity these symbols bear to Masonry and why they are used in all Masonic lodges." In speaking of the apparel of Masons he says: "The Druids were appareled in white at the time of their sacrifices and the Egyptian priests Osiris wore snow-white aprons. As Masons we imitate their apparel and assume the badge of innocence."

Again, in their lodges they do not pray in the name of Christ. And again, persecution as a distinguished feature of Masonry is surely of pagan and Roman origin. From all these and thousands of other evidences it is proven that Masonry is a summation, a concentration of paganism and Romanism, modified to serve the schemes of designing men. One minute its advocate tells us that it is Christian, and the next that it is found in every land whether pagan or Christian. Well does Rev. E. Bristol remark that it is like Voltare's "Laire," a Christian in Italy, a free-thinker at Paris, and a Mussulman on the shores of the Nile, and yet it is Christian! What a falsehood? and what base hypocrisy in ministers of Christ to be one day at his altar administering the Lord's Supper and the next day worshipping in a Freemason lodge with infidels, Jews, Pagans and Mohammedans and have no more Christ in their prayers than the worshippers of Buddha or Juggernaut.

It professes to have and to reveal mysteries. This is also untrue unless it is a mystery to the subordinates what is done with their money. It professes not to persuade men to join its ranks. So Romanism professes perfect liberality in their convent schools—no cœrcion, no proselyting allowed. But they lay their plans silent and deep. They appeal to the worst passions of the human heart, ambition, vanity, luxury and excitement; with a rush of holy days, costumes, processions, emblems, images and mysteries which keeps the youthful mind in a constant whirl until it is whirled into the vortex of Romanism. In Masonry the powerful tendency of all these false pretensions to mysteries, to antiquity, to benevolence and to advantage both for time and eternity, is to excite the curious, to delude the credulous, to bribe the avaricious, to induce the ambitious and yet it does not persuade. How false! These secret societies are an offence to society. They come in between the most sacred relations of life. The Roman wife has deep confidences with her priest that she does not confide with her husband. Freemasons have confidences with others which they dare not confide in their own families. They use their money for secret purposes, and in many ways make their own families secondary considerations. Shame! The scenes at some Christian funerals are offensive. The minister of the Gospel reverently and solemnly reads a Christian burial service. He is then crowded back by a gang of swearers, drunkards, infidels and deists who commence a pagan service to which the whole aproned herd respond, "So mote it be. So mote it be."

Masonry is a system of blasphemy. It represents God as a Freemason and honors extra-judicial oaths administered by even pagans or deists. These secret, offensive, sinful, blasphemous organizations are in favor of somebody and against somebody else; they must be in favor of their members and against those who are not members. Those who are not members have given them no cause for their organization. They have attacked, wronged and insulted society for low and sordid purposes. Society has born the wrong until the forbearance is no longer a virtue and now it becomes the duty of every honest man, in the fear of God, to adopt measures to protect society from organizations whose members are sworn to be partial between man and man, between brother and brother, to conceal wrong and to persecute some classes of men until death. It becomes imperative duty to protect society from secret factions based upon falsehood, perpetuated by falsehood, and bound together by extra-judicial oaths. And while we war with the wrong we should pity the men who have stained their moral conscience, insulted injured society and brought reproach upon the cause of God. Old Sir Thomas Brown pitied the very devil as a fallen angel. Every noble nature pities a fallen one. Then with our hearts moved with natural compassion let us defend the great truth of the unity of humanity, and promote the equal rights of all men. If we give a silent assent to these secret societies and allow them to delude the unthinking and credulous to swear fidelity to their false systems, and to pour monthly into their hands their hard-earned dollars by the thousand; and allow them to work through the church, by petitions, by lawyers, by judges, by juries, and by their members for their crafts; and if we handle the subject at all, handle it tenderly, shutting our eyes to the bitter truth that they aim at supremacy in commerce, state and church, until they have their blightening hands upon our altars, upon our public education, upon our political system, upon the liberty of the press, upon the liberty of the pulpit—then we may write Ichabod upon all, and our betrayed children will wail curses upon our unfaithfulness. May God bless the right and remove the wrong.

Stand Like an Anvil.

"Stand like an anvil!" When the strokes
Of stalwart strength fall fierce and fast;
Storms but more deeply root the oaks
Whose brawny arms embrace the blast.

"Stand like an anvil," when the sparks
Fly far and wide—a fiery shower;
Virtue and truth must still be marks
Where malace proves its want of power.

"Stand like an anvil," when the bar
Lies red and glowing on its breast;
Duty shall be life's leading star;
And conscious innocence its rest.

"Stand like an anvil," when the sound
Of pond'rous hammers pains the ear;
Thine but the still and stern rebound
Of the great heart that cannot fear.

"Stand like an anvil;" noise and heat
Are born of earth and die with time;
The soul, like God, its source and seat,
Is solemn, still, serene, sublime.

How not to Do It.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

One of the most amusing representations of Dickens was his Circumlocution Society, the object of which was to teach "How not to do it."

It would seem as though a similar society had been gotten up for the benefit of the Christian ministry to aid them in evading questions of Christian reform. Take for instance the Congregational ministry of Wisconsin and Illinois. They as a body stand strongly committed against Masonry and kindred societies. As individuals they are almost unanimously opposed to them. And yet in view of the fact that a large and increasing percentage of the membership of our churches, especially in the cities, are already Masons, and that Masonry rules these churches with absolute despotism (so far at least as relates to that institution) they do nothing but oppose their passive influence to every effort to break the spell that has come over the churches and save them from the abomination that maketh desolate,

When we who are in earnest in this work present ourselves and our cause before them, they tell us—but with many expressions of grave doubt and questioning fear—"that they are opposed to Masonry as much as we; but they do not approve of our methods of action." In reply we ask for their methods and express a willingness to adopt any method which is legitimate and gives prospect of success, and it comes out that they have no method; no, they are to busy in their works to devise plans for carrying on this reform. We suggest different ways, but none suits them. If we pipe unto them, they will not dance. If we mourn they will not lament. They admit the justice of the cause, but simply take no stock in it.

The grand result of all the circumlocution of Antimasonic resolutions in both State and local associations is to teach these good brethren "How not to do it."

Well, it used to be so in the anti-slavery reform. Some whom God had appointed as watch men on the walls, did see the sword coming and did not warn the people, and yet he saved the nation, but the watchmen are yet to be judged. So it will be to-day. God may know how to save a guilty nation even though her watch-men shall fail to warn the people of their danger, and even confederate with her enemies.

Farm Ridge, Ill., Aug. 8th, 1874.

Two Examples.

That sharp discipline is a good thing is evidenced by its need in the family, the army, the school, the counting-house, and the church. Rebellious and unrepentant characters, who have repeatedly shown that they are beyond the influence of persuasion and love, need to have a bit put into their mouths.

The last few months have brought to light two modes of treatment of church offenders. Both cases belong to Brooklyn; both occurring in the largest congregations in that city of churches. It is profitable, we think, to look at the different management and the results. The crimes were the same, each offender originating and circulating wicked accusations against the brethren. In the one church, where liberty is misunderstood, the name of the offender was allowed to be quietly dropped from the roll and church connection, although the church authorities knew well that the offender had broken the divine commandments and was reveling in sin. Here was pre-eminent consideration for the feelings of the unworthy member. Love and charity,—a spurious kind which is found outside of the Bible,—was supposed to be equal to the emergency. The present condition of affairs in that unhappy church proves how inadequate this new human treatment is to the work of individual amendment and church harmony.

In the other church, the offender, who had forgotten St. Paul's description of the tongue and what a mighty fire it kindles, was cited promptly before the church courts to answer for his conduct. He skulked the investigation, although many opportunities were afforded him of explanation and defense. Whereupon, in the presence of a congregation numbering five thousand people, the offender was declared to be no longer worthy of connection with the church. That church has peace now.

We think it must be apparent to all which is the wiser and more Scriptural procedure of the two, and which course is the correct one for churches to follow when tormented with offending members. Christianity does not emasculate from its system the attributes of justice and severity. They are the reserve force to be brought into operation when the gentler overtures of mercy and brotherhood are persistently disregarded. The only consideration which should be allowed to enter into the case is the requirements of the Bible and the welfare and peace of the church. If offenders are to be allowed to escape punishment the number will increase on our hands. The churches will presently be full of trouble and confusion. After kindness has failed to procure apology and repentance from church offenders, we recommend the exercise of excommunication and the harsher things of the law. The spectacle in Brooklyn where the contrary course has been pursued for years in a truly sorrowful one.—N. Y. Witness.

Truth Will Live.—Philosophy has sometimes forgotten God; a great people never did. The scepticism of the last century could not uproot Christianity, because it lived in the hearts of the millions. Do you think that infidelity is spreading? Christianity never lived in the hearts of so many millions as at this moment. The forms under which it is professed may decay, for they, like all that is the work of man's hands, are subject to the changes and chances of mortal being; but the spirit of truth is incorruptible; it may be developed, illustrated and applied; it never can die; it never can decline. No truth can perish. No truth can pass away. The flame is undying, though generations disappear. Wherever moral truth has started into being, humanity claims and guards the bequest. Each generation gathers together the imperishable children of the past, and increases them by new sons of light alike radiant with immortality.—Bancroft.

For many walk of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ; whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is their shame, who mind earthly things. Phil. iii. 18, 19.

Annual Meeting of the North-east Pa. Association, Nov. 3d, in Free Methodist Hall, Wilkesbarre, Pa.

The Indiana State meeting, we learn, will probably not be held until near the last of October. Meanwhile let every worker in the State do everything possible for the success of the meeting. Correspondence and suggestions should be sent to the State Agent, J. T. Kiggins, Ligonier, Ind.

TO BRO. J. T. KIGGINS, INDIANA STATE LECTURER: —A note in the Cynosure of the 20th ult. states that you have entered a homestead claim in western Kansas. As I reside in western Kansas and am interested in the interest of reform as advocated by the Christian Cynosure, and as you are a lecturer on those principles, I wish to form your acquaintance. Please communicate in the Cynosure where the place of your future home is. This will give others an opportunity of forming your acquaintance, and uniting in pushing on this battle. We do not intend if you come to Kansas to allow you to entirely retire from the conflict. Lecturers are much needed in this western country. Yours respectfully,

H. T. BESSE.

Peace, Rice Co. Kas.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE CHRISTIAN REFORM IN FREEDOM AND PRAIRIE CENTER, LA SALLE COUNTY, Ill.:—I intend (D. V.) to lecture on the subject of Freemasonry and kindred societies at Freedom on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Sept. 22d and 23d; on Thursday evening, the 24th, at Freedom Center, and on Friday and Saturday evenings, Sept. 25th and 26th, at Prairie Center. H. H. HINMAN.

Reform News.

—Bro. Stoddard spoke at the Wesleyan Conference, Fairmount, Ind., on Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon; also on Saturday last. He expects to visit Hamilton county this week, stopping at Marion on Saturday. Next week on Wednesday, the 16th, he has an appointment at Silver Lake, Kosciusko county.

—Elder D. P. Rathbun was announced to speak at Senecaville, Ohio, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday last. For particulars of the latest attempt on his life see editorial.

—J. F. Phillips, of Coatsville, Ind., has been preparing to commence work as a local lecturer at the earnest request of Bro. Kiggins. His idea of the necessity of neighborhood lectures are good. Men are needed in every county in the United States to make a stand against the lodge

—A letter to the Wesleyan tells of an address in the court-house in the city of Elmira, N. Y., on the evening of July 23d by Rev. John Levington. The various lodges, of which that has an abunant supply, worked hard to snuff out the meeting.

—The General Agent writes that there are some six counties in Indiana which have organized politically and have a ticket in the field. The work will be pushed vigorously in these localities until the State election which occurs October 13th.

The Ohio State Convention—Letter from Dr. Wishart, President of the State Association.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Some account of the Ohio State Convention has already appeared in the Cynosure. As it was my privilege to be there, I feel like adding a word or two to what has already been said. There were many things noteworthy at this convention and I do not propose to notice everything of this kind. But among the things deserving notice, I would mention the cordial and kind reception extended to us by the genial pastor of Darby Chapel, and the abundant entertainment given by the good people of his charge. These things indicated that both the pastor and the people were in cordial sympathy with the cause that had called us together. There was quite a large attendance during the cessions of the Convention; especially in the evening of each day the church was crowded to its utmost capacity. The Convention was characterized by a spirit of earnest devotion; many most fervent and importunate prayers went up to that God who is light and in whom is no darkness at all, and who has commanded his people to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

The first evening of the Convention was spent in hearing an address from Rev. J. P. Stoddard, in which he showed "How a Man is Made a Mason;" how it interferes with his liberty, changes his relation to his family, etc. This address was most clear and forcible in style, was delivered in a most impressive manner, and will, I think, not soon be forgotten by those who heard it, not even by the Masons themselves who were present on that occasion. On the following morning some friends from Logan county came to me to inquire whether they could get brother Stoddard to lecture a while. They wished to have this same address and some others like it delivered in various parts of their own county. They were accordingly introduced to brother S. and I suppose entered into an arrangement by which they could obtain their request.

The second day of the Convention was spent in devotional exercises, in business matters, and in hearing addresses from various delegates. After one of these addresses in the forenoon, an opportunity was given for the presentation of objections, when a gentleman arose in the audience, and with a pretentious shake of the head and a countenance threatening great things, expressed his approbation of Masonry and announced himself as willing and ready to maintain the affirmative of the proposition that a man may be a Mason and a Christian at the same time. I thought with myself, so he may, but if he is a genuine Mason he will only be a nominal Christian, and if he is a genuine Christian, he will only be a nominal Mason. For that the principles of Masonry are in conflict with the principles of Christianity is a proposition susceptible of the clearest demonstration. And to suppose that a man can intelligently and honestly maintain and carry out each of these principles at the same time, is to suppose that he could be an honest hypocrite. This gentleman with the threatening countenance, I was afterwards informed is a member of the Masonic fraternity and at the same time professes to be a minister of the Gospel of Christ. Can he or any other Masonic minister say with the great Apostle "That he has renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness nor handling the Word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth commending himself to every man's conscience in the sight of God." It is strange that there should be such ministers, but I remember that during the days of slavery, there were not only advocates of the "peculiar institution," but actual slave-holders, who professed to preach the Gospel of the merciful and compassionate Saviour.

But to return. I may farther state, that Rev. Wm. Dillon, of Dayton, proposed to meet our Masonic friend in debate at any time, upon a fair statement of the point at issue. But whether this mystic brother will ever consent to meet him upon such a statement—a statement that will guard against prevarication and evasion and lead to an honest discussion of facts,—is to me very doubtful. If I mistake not there is more boast than debate in this gentleman.

In the evening of this day the audience was very large and most of the time was spent in hearing an address from Rev. William Dillon of Dayton. This address was clear and logical and was listened to with marked attention.

On the following morning after attending to the election of officers and some other matters of business, the audience was again addressed by brother Stoddard. In this address, the subject of which had been announced the day before, he maintained the affirmative of the following proposition: "Resolved, that no man can be a true Christian, and at the same time carry out the principles of Masonry. We are sure that we only express the sentiment of all or nearly all who heard this address, when we say that it was characterized not only by clear and logical reasoning, but in some parts by the most persuasive and stirring eloquence; the audience was not only interested and impressed, but sometimes deeply moved; and we only assert what the audience declared by their vote at the close of this address, when we say that our good brother S. completely demonstrated his position.

At this point it became necessary for us to leave the convention and return home, though we did so with reluctance. But before leaving we were much pleased to find that brother Stoddard had come to the conclusion that he would come up to our place on Saturday, spend the Sabbath with us, and rest a few days. He came, but our people did not permit him to rest very long. They made an appointment for him to lecture on Tuesday afternoon, and though there was not much time to circulate the word and some of the farmers were yet busy in harvesting their oats, yet there was quite a good attendance. This lecture was followed by another one that evening, when the audience was quite large, and this again by another the following afternoon, when the audience was not so large, but still quite respectable. I only speak the mind of this community, when I say that these lectures were all excellent, eminently calculated to instruct and confirm the friends of our cause and to convince and silence gainsayers. They were in my judgment a good specimen of the leniter in verbis et fortiter in rebis, soft words and hard arguments. The friends here have made arrangements to have brother S. spend one month lecturing in this county the coming fall. Thus the work goes on—the truth is mighty and shall prevail.

WM. WISHART.

Anti-secrecy in Kansas.

WINCHESTER, Kas., Aug. 24, 1874.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Opposition to secret orders is making itself felt in various parts of this State. Bro. Kiggins in his recent visit to these western prairies has done good service to the cause in various localities. He spent several days in this vacinity in the first week of this month. He delivered a course of four lectures in this village, on four several evenings, which were listened to by large and appreciative audiences. He showed up in vigorous and lively style the unchristian and unrepublican character and evil influences of secret orders in general and of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship in particular. Very few of the members of secret fraternities attended. An opportunity was given for defending these orders but no defense was offered. Since the debate here last winter, the friends of secrecy appear to be strongly inclined to carry out, practically, the Masonic virtues of "secrecy and silence." In these lies their strength.

On the 4th inst. our County Anti-secret Association held its annual meeting at Round Grove, about seven miles south from this village. An anti-secret meeting was rather a novelty in that community. Curiosity brought out a large assembly. The grangers were out in force, with a sprinkling of the membership of other secret fraternities. In the forenoon Bro. Kiggins gave us a somewhat lengthy, able and eloquent address in which he showed up in a telling manner the tomfooleries, evils and dangerous influences of the grange. In the afternoon, after the election of officers for the ensuing year, a preamble and resolutions were presented, upon which a lively discussion arose. The grangers have not yet become so eminent in the virtues of secrecy and silence as their senior Masonic brethren, and consequently they stood up in their own defense. Though their speakers claimed to be only plain farmers, untrained and unpracticed in public speaking, yet they did the best they could. And we must say they made about as good a defense as their cause admits. Speakers were lustily cheered by their friends on either side, but good order prevailed throughout the entire day. One principle appears to be established here, and we presume elsewhere, and that is, secret orders may be discussed.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted:—

Whereas, Secret societies, of every name and grade, which require their members to pledge or obligate themselves to keep certain secrets, which at the time the pledge is taken are unknown to the individual, are in conflict with sound morality and good government; and,

Whereas, We regard Freemasonry as a deep-laid conspiracy against the Christian religion and human rights, to which all the "minor orders" are tributary and auxiliary; therefore,

Resolved, 1st, That it becomes all patriotic citizens to oppose the progress of these orders by assisting and co-operating with each other, in disseminating a true knowledge of the character and principles of these societies.

2d. That we will not support by our influence, means, or votes any minister who worships at the Christ-rejecting altars of the lodges; or any man for an office of honor or trust who is bound by secret oaths or pledges, believing that the first requisite to be a servant of a free people is that the man himself be free.

3d. That the grange movement is a deceptive and swindling child of the thing called Masonry, carrying with it no advantages that may not be secured by open organization, and with immensely less expense; adapted to the use of scheming demagogues and dishonest, knavish persons. And we will raise our voices in prayers and protest against it. J. Dodds, Sec'y.

Correspondence.

From Vermont.

Bentonville, Vt., Aug. 28, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

When I came to Vermont it was with the intention of entering the field as a lecturer. I spoke a number of times with apparent success; but my health has failed, and so for the present I have ceased that work. I have traveled over a large territory and have distributed and sold many books, have obtained some subscribers, and found many true-hearted men and women who are opposed to the lodge. Many remember the days of Morgan; how Major Flint of Randolph and others went through the State and lectured, and how Elder Adams of Windsor appointed a meeting in the east part of Brookfield, and told the people that he could initiate a man if they would bring him forward. A young man was found who consented to go through the ceremony, and many remember the circumstances. Others tell of men who were sent for and great crowds that came together to hear the revelations of Freemasonry. But a few years since the order was stigmatized but now it shows its head in most of the large towns.

But a few years ago the Free-Will Baptist denomination would not receive a Freemason into its membership; neither would they ordain such a man to preach the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ; neither would they organize a church without examining all its members concerning Masonry. But now a preacher comes here from New Hampshire and leads the young preachers and others into the lodge. One preacher one in of our first churches went forward and took one degree, and the church was so aroused against his action, that he promised to go no farther. But he met with the lodge slily, and went to another State where he took other degrees.

But most of the members of our churches and the ministers are opposed to this system of darkness, but dare not show their colors. Some have brothers, some sons, some husbands, in the lodge. One preacher whom I talked with said he was an Anti-mason and the first time he voted it was against the lodge, but now his son had become a Mason, and he would not consent to examine the subject.

What we want here is an able lecturer, and a State convention, held somewhere near the center of the State. I would suggest Randolph Center, which was noted in years past for its opposition to the lodge, and there are a goodly number of the Cynosure taken in the place. Will the brethren of our cause express their mind concerning this plan and report so that we can have a meeting this fall.

I lately saw a man from the town of Warren. He told me that his father was a Mason when Morgan was murdered, and he never renounced, yet does not now go with the Masons. He also had an uncle who lived in Hartland and belonged to Windsor lodge. They met to choose a man to go to Batavia, N. Y., to help dispose of Morgan. This uncle was then young and belonged to the Royal Arch Chapter. He was chosen to go. He was gone three weeks and returned. In a short time, he took poison and destroyed himself. The man who gave me this information is surrounded with the white aprons; but he is one of the right stamp, and Vermont is alive with such men; but there are few who have heard of our reform. Elder Isaac Jackson.

Mantorville, Minn.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I am in full sympathy with the anti-secret movement and have taken the Cynosure from the very first issue and am always ready and glad to stand and to act in defense of its principles. I cannot remember when I was not opposed to the principles of secrecy, because I have always believed it is of the devil. I am especially grieved by the course intelligent Christians and ministers take in regard to sworn secret organizations. They seem to be so loth to even talk of, discuss, or even to examine the subject; and it really seems to me for no other reason, (if the truth was known,) than that their own conscience and better judgment would force them to give their influence against them. I know of no person actively engaged in opposition to sworn secrecy in all these parts except myself and I often feel condemned for being so half-hearted in the matter. I think it is very doubtful if another copy of the Cynosure is taken in this county (Dodge, Minn.)

I firmly believe the secret orders are doing more to retard true Christianity than most if not all other means which the devil now has employed. Time and space would fail me to speak of the multitudinous ways by which this destroyer of men's souls operates and no one, not a reader and thinker on the subject could believe. At various covenant and business meetings of the Baptist, I never have heard a single inquiry made other than by myself in relation to whether candidates to be received into the church or dismissed from the church, or ministers ordained for the sacred ministry, whether they were sworn subjects of another order. But I have many times known a great solicitude manifested by ministers and others to have a letter granted if there was any danger of the person uniting with any other order of Christians; and in case this was apparent, refuse to grant such letter.

This of course is the dark side. I hope, however, in the mind of others and in other parts the case is different. I know that Paul said on a certain occasion as he stood up for truth, he was forsaken of all, but he prayed that it might not be laid to their charge. I am glad that in other places the cause of truth is gaining ground. I hope and pray it may grow and increase until the principle of sworn secrecy is driven back to the evil one from whence it came.

Yours for the truth spoken openly,
S. Hillman.

The Slave Power and the Lodge.

Salem, Ohio.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

In 1843 the leading religious influences and nearly all the popular preachers in the country were on the side of slavery, and prophesied falsely in proclaiming peace to the wicked, and denouncing the abolitionists for demanding that the slave had a right to himself, to his wife and his children. And however high to ecclesiastical authority, whoever failed in demand the liberation of the slave, as the duty of the master and the right of the slave, was verily guilty concerning his brother.

Alas! that a similar state of facts should exist to-day touching another institution existing all over this land. How many church officers are allied to the secret oath-bound institutions of the country, and swear oaths that common sinners would stagger at; oaths which if heard in the streets, would make the swearer liable to be arrested for blasphemy; oaths not known in formula to the laws of the land! And these ministers bind themselves in wicked covenant with the deadliest and most insiduous enemies of Christ and his religion to do things utterly opposed to Christianity and even good citizenship. For they swear to make a criminal's secrets their own, "murder and treason not excepted," and this deep, dark and damning work they call "The hand-maid of religion," and falsely pretend that its origin is most ancient and most honorable, a religion thus allied cannot prosper; and we should dispair were it not for our faith in that same hand of God that overthrew, that haughty, insolent slave power and rebuked the false teachers who preached peace to the oppressers when destruction was at hand. So that when they saw that God "was still mighty to save", then they said to their congregations, "we want you to understand that we are abolitionists. God grant to hasten the day when these same men shall say to the people, "These secret combinations are the 'hand-maid of the devil' and we are Anti-masons."

The Evil Leaven.

Gilford Village, N. H.

There are many true men in New England, but they are isolated. They have no means of communicating with each other and are situated about as abolitionists were in the South before the war, save only the fear of actual violence. I need not tell you the secret and subtle devices employed against every man who dares openly to oppose this gigantic and deep-rooted scheme of iniquity. The very acts you record as of constant occurrence in the West are also frequent here. But the most of the people are asleep as to the cause. They see unworthy men elected to office, condemned convicts pardoned, the worst criminals suffered to escape untried or acquitted by a disagreeing jury, the laws powerless against a certain class of men; and yet they know not the cause. The same shameful clannishness crops out even in our ecclesiastical assemblies. It pervades the whole social atmosphere like a pestilence. It has corrupted our republican system of government; it has infused its subtle poison even into the Christian churches; it clogs the wheel of justice; it creates a satanic schism in the Christian brotherhood; it tends to subvert morality and to extinguish vital Christianity among men. God bless the Cynosure and the noble men of the West who are doing signal service for the church and the world.

S. C. KIMBALL.

A Comparison.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I was presented a copy of Odd-fellow's Manual by one of the order to see "how I liked it." The gentleman who handed me the book is a member of the M. E. church, but tells me he expects to reach heaven by attending to the duties envolved in the manual. This book is about the size of our common ten-cent Testament, and sells to secret-hunters at the (im) moderate price of one dollar and fifty cents. Of course since I had accepted the Christian Scriptures as the rule of faith and practice, I felt called upon to examine the relative claims of the two little books; which resulted thus:

The author of the manual is one James T. Ridgely, G. S. G. L. United States. I soon began to suspect that perhaps its high sounding titles as well as its teachings had originated "when folly and superstition every hope have blighted" and not one ray of light-divine appears. It abounds with vain, vague and foolish humanisms, secret signs, tokens and emblems which they claim must first be learned before we can fully understand the sacred Scriptures. Hail mysterious science! Lo, hither come, for we are most worshipful, not meek and lowly, ah! none of that. Come and be saved in the Grand Lodge above. Our only condition of salvation is obedience to the things written in this manual.

But I must notice this little ten cent volume. Its author is "Jesus Christ the Son of God." The Father with his voice from heaven says, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." This book treats of the divinity of Christ who left us this word, "All power in heaven and earth is given into my hands;" no power left for other hands as regards the plan of human redemption. "Go ye therefore and preach the Gospel"—not tell idle tales about pictures and signs. "No sign shall be given you." "None other name given under heaven nor among men whereby you can be saved;" secret orders to the contrary not excepted. "By me if any man enter in he shall be saved." Hail Saviour of sinners, King of kings and Lord of lords! "Speak Lord, thy servant heareth." "He that climbeth up some other way the same is a thief and a robber."

There it is, gentlemen. You will have to excuse us. We don't wish to climb to three nor thirty-three degrees. You may do all the climbing, we hope to enter by Christ the Door. You speak well of yourselves and your other ways; but never a word for Christ. You speak of God ignorantly—on page 109 you have it, 'Sarah, the wife of God!" What reckless, vile insolence! Odd-fellow human independance. "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?' Your language is that of Ashdod and not the language of Canaan. Will you not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? Jesus is our Captain. "The good time coming" will surely come. Ever reign, Jesus King of heaven! Put down all rule and authority. Devils may transform themselves into angels of light, but our Christ forever eclipses the "Great Lights" of secret mongers, so much so that they are very darkness,—"How great is that darkness? I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord, than to be worshipful master ("call no man master") in the tents of the wicked (lodges). I have no reason for joining you. You will never be troubled to "vouch for me." I regard that you "deny the very Lord that bought you;" and ask me to accept your teaching, based on no better authority than heathenish folly. "You make void the commandments of God by your traditions." You "teach for doctrines the commandments of men." This is Bible language and aptly applies to all who teach humanisms, either in church or in secret cliques, leagues, lodges or other combinations. "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ let him be accursed when he cometh."

Yours truly,

JAMES SPRINGER.

Experiences.

EAGLE HARBOR, Mich.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I hear much said at the present day about the benevolence and brotherly love of the order of Freemasons. With your permission I will give a short chapter that has come under my observation. An acquaintance, a Mason, who in an early day came from England to Albany, on entering the lodge found he had taken more degrees than any other man there. As it was his intention to travel through the then wilderness to western New York to locate on a new farm, he thought it would be safe to deposit his surplus money in said lodge for safe-keeping. He did so. After finding a home he went to work, being very careful to send in his monthly dues by letter, to receive acknowledgment of it from the proper authorities of the lodge. After a year or two he crippled himself with an axe, and lay on expense until he became in want. He made his request to the lodge for help; no answer now. After several applications he wrote for his money deposited in the lodge. He could get no reply. Suffice it to say that man has ever since been a strong Anti-mason.

Now another case of the much applauded institution. In 1823 I became acquainted with a family in which were several boys and girls. The three eldest boys as fast as they became of age joined the Masons. The sisters being beautiful singers used to attend on St. John's day and all the public festivities to sing for them. As time wore away the eldest brother became somewhat noted in the lodge for lecturing ability. The second moved to Michigan in an early day; became one of the associate judges; died young, leaving a widow and a family of helpless little children in want. Not the first cent of lodge money helped that family. The third brother toiled hard to bring up a large family of children always keeping up his lodge dues. His wife fell sick with inflamatory rheumatism. The husband after lifting and toiling over her some seven or eight years day and night, wore out and died; yet in good standing in the lodge. This poor woman was left to suffer on some two years more, and finally was gobbled up and carried to the poorhouse. After lodging there one night kind friends found her, took her home with them and cared for her tenderly through life. The eldest brother became entangled by signing bank paper for friends; lost his farm; became dependent on friends and is now an old man fourscore and not a penny's help from the lodge.

AARON PHIPPS.

Birds of a Feather Flock Together.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I have before me a pamphlet of which the following is the title page:

THE OCCULT SCIENCES.—Catalogue of a singularly curious collection of above 700 works on Alchemy, Astrology, Magic, Necromancy, Sorcery, and Witchcraft, Appartions, Ghosts, and Second Sight, Geomancy, Chiromancy, and Metoposcopy, Fortune-telling and Juggling, The Cabbala, The Rosicrucian Doctrine, Freemasonry and Mystics, Animal Magnetism and Mesmerism, Dreams, Popular Superstitions, &c. &c, on sale by George Bumstead, 205 High Holborn, London.

The date of this catalogue is the year of our Lord 1846. Among the books given in this catalogue is one which is thus announced:

Ahiman Reson (The), containing a view of the History and Polity of Freemasonry, together with the Rules and Regulations of the Grand Lodge, and of the Grand Holy Royal Arch Craft of Pennsylvania, 8 vo, calf, 6s. Philadelphia, 1825.

By the above announcement we see that the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Pennsylvania is considered "Holy," or was so considered in 1825; and doubtless "the ancient land-marks of the order has been preserved." The question occurs to us that if other "ancient and honorable" institutions come to thrive among us as Masonry has done, whether, by the year 1925, the word "holy" may not be aplied to alchemy, astrology, magic, fortune-telling, jugglery, witchcraft, et id omne genus.

OUR MAIL.

Rev. M. Matthieson, Socorro, New Mexico, writes:

"I could not get you any subscribers as the people here all are Mexican and cannot read English. I never did and never shall belong to any secret order. I love the M. E. church and shall preach the Gospel in it, likely, as long as the Lord giveth me health. We have to work hard here and wish the prayers of Christians. The Romanists are hard on our track. But the Lord helping, we will prosper."

Rev. J. S. Yockey, Fayettville, Ohio, sends thirteen new subscriptions and five renewals as the result of four days' hard work. (Are there not other friends who can devote some time to hard work for the Cynosure subscription list?) He writes:

"I have succeeded in getting some renewals and some new subscribers for your excellent paper, by three or four days of hard work. Some that are getting the paper for three months and will stop this month if not renewed, did not renew for various excuses; but I believe not one objected to the Cynosure. The Knights of Pythias are pretty strong in this place; also the Good Templars, a few Freemasons and Odd-fellows. The hall where the Knights of Pythias and Good Templars meet is right opposite our church, (U. B.) and I think we shall open siege against them this coming winter by getting a lecturer to lecture in our church."

M. L. Cavanaugh, Seattle, Washington Territory, writes:

"I read your paper and send it out to my neighbors. I tell them to read it and give it to their neighbors. As soon as I can learn the names of some Iowa people that have settled about twenty-five miles east of me I want to have two or three copies taken out there."

In company with another friend, he sends twelve three months' subscribers, and says:

"I hope you will hear from me again soon."

The Cynosure needs the efforts of many such earnest workers. The publishers and the editors are doing all they can to make the paper valuable. The people also need the paper just as greatly as the publishers need the money to pay the bills for paper, ink, press work, type-setting, etc.

E. Harrow, Yuba City, Cal., writes:

"They (Masons) are trying to breeze me out. Can you have a lecturer on this coast?"

We hope so, before long.

Joseph McKelvey, Solomon Rapids, Kan., writes:

"I wish we had an able lecturer in this section for a few months, but am not able to bear expenses. Some able man is very much needed, one who is thoroughly master of the subject and acquainted with all the forms of interruption that are sometimes made in the course of a lecture by the opposition. Could some one be sent in this section? I would pledge myself to pay ten dollars towards expenses. What more could be had I would not say. . . We are not very well off out here on the prairie, but wish to be instructed as well as strengthened and will pay what we can."

If any one who reads the above can go and answer Mr. McKelvey's requirements we ask him to communicate the terms to the Corresponding Secretary, at 18 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Allan Wright, Joliet, Ill., sends $7.25 and writes:

"Quite hard times. The dry weather was very bad for us. Money scarce. Wish I could do more."

A gentleman suggested to us yesterday that the cause of the general drouth migbt be found in the general profanity of the people. "By reason of swearing the land mourneth."

LESSON XXXVIII.—SEPT. 20, 1874.—THE SYROPHŒNICAN MOTHER.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK vii. 24-30.—Commit verses 28, 29.

24 And from thence he arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into an house, and would have no man know it: but he could not be hid.

25 For a certain woman whose young daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of him, and came and fell at his feet:

26 The woman was a Greek, a Syrophenician by nation; and she besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter.

27 But Jesus said unto her, Let the children first be filled: for it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs.

28 And she answered and said unto him, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs.

29 And he said unto her, For this saying go thy way; the devil has gone out of thy daughter.

30 And when she was come to her house, she found the devil gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed.

LEADING TEXT.—Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt.—Matt. xv. 28.

CENTRAL THOUGHT.—All things are possible to the believer.

BIBLE READING.—(1) Matt. xv. 21-31; (2) Acts xvi. 16-34; (3) Ps. ii. 1-12; (4) Isa. xlii. 1-16; (5) Luke xiv. 15-33; (6) Acts x. 9-45; (7) Mark vii. 24-30.

INTRODUCTION.—The Evangelists, guided by the Holy Ghost, select events and truths that fall in with their particular aim. Matthew writing for the Jews gives this miracle, because it has a message for them. Mark writing for Gentile converts, finds in this a fitting lesson for them also.

ANALYSIS.—I. The woman, by race a Syrophœnician, by religion a Greek, by residence of the borders of Tyre and Sidon, her name not known. II. Her affliction, a suffering child, possessed of a devil, in great misery, the case hopeless for human help. III. Her request of Jesus, inquiring him out, for "he would have no man know, &c.," ask the cure of her daughter. IV. Her graces, though seemingly turned aside, she presses her request, willing to be counted as, "heathen," "dogs," and to take the crumbs as dogs do. V. Her reward—healing for her child, and commendation for her faith.

LESSONS.—(1) The lowly may come to Jesus. (2) The sufferings of the afflicted may be God's means of bringing them to the Saviour. (3) The timid are encouraged to seek Jesus. (4) The prayerful may learn to persevere in prayer though the answer is delayed.

TOPICS FOR STUDY.—The treatment Jesus received—its effect—whither he retired—why—the locality—the people—this applicant—race—religion—affliction—her appeal—its reception by the Master—by the disciples—her renewed plea—our Lord's direct commission—her acceptance of the lowest place—meaning of her words—the Lord's assurance—the deliverance—its probable results—and the lessons to various classes—the lowly—the afflicted—the timid—the prayerful.—American Sunday-School Union Lessons.

A correspondent makes out that it was Bishop Asbury, of the Methodist church, who first introduced the Sunday-school into this country, or at least into Virginia where he established them in 1786, five years after Robert Raikes started his schools in Gloucester. The Friends took up the idea soon after in Philadelphia, and in 1791, the good Bishop White, of the Episcopal church, became president of a school in that city. The next year it seems they were introduced in to the far West at Campus Martius, a stockaded fort at Mariette, Ohio, by Mrs. Lake, a Christian woman, who couldn't bear to see the children of the garrison spending Sunday after Sunday in frivolous amusements. She accordingly gathered as many as she could—about twenty in all—and taught them the Westminister Catechism and lessons from the Bible. The accommodations for the school were of a primary sort, consisting of only a few low benches, such a thing as a chair being unknown in the garrison. The top of a meal chest was the nearest approach to a cushioned seat in the good woman's room. This school, our correspondent states, was the first Sunday-school started in the West. These facts are interesting in view of the immense number of schools that have grown out of these small beginnings. Robert Raikes and Asbury, and Mrs. Lake, and all the other Sunday-school pioneers need no memorial. They have a monument in every class that meets on Sunday the world over.—Christian Union.

Forty Years Ago.

[From the Anti-masonic Review, 1829.]

History of Freemasonry.

[CONCLUDED.]

The Rosicrusian mania sprung up in Germany, A. D. 1610, nearly and overspread Christendom. This puff of indefinable extravagance originated from the writings of John Valentine Andrea, a celebrated theologian of Wirtemberg; (see London Mag. 1824, Vol. 9, p. 143,)—who amused himself with tales of spiritual wonder and mystical glory. as a literary hoax, in the style of Munchausen's wonderful adventures in his memoirs. The visionary minds of that day took his work in earnest. They claimed, in general, for the rosy cross philosophy, whatever is now particularly claimed for Freemasonry, a heavenly origin, a magic influence, a wonderful secret, and unbounded excellence. The universal medicine and the philosopher's stone, were gravely professed for the glory of its mystical laboratory; and to so great a pitch of extravagance did its vain professors run, that modern Freemasons are sober men in the comparison. This folly was greatly admired in England by some men of a strange fancy, and of great learning; and by others publicly professing the black art. Among the former, the name of Elias Ashmole, the Antiquary, stands conspicuous; and among the latter, Wm. Lilly, the Astrologer; and somewhere between them, is Robert Fludd.

This Ashmole is greatly accounted of as a brother by Masonic historians, and is the first accepted Freemason claimed by Professor Robinson. Ashmole says he was "elected" in Mason's Hall, Basing Hall street, A. D. 1646. (See Biog. Brit.) This is the hall of the London company of stone masons, chartered 1677, thirty-one years after Ashmole's admission into its livery, and remaining to this day, as it ever has been, in the possession of the stone masons; a society from, and independent of the modern Freemasons. And it is evident that Ashmole was only free of the mason's company as his friend Lilly was made free of the salter's company, and as the Lord Mayor is usually made free of some one of the twelve principal companies of tradesmen or mechanics in the city of London; and that Ashmole was not initiated, passed, and raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, and in a modern lodge of Freemasons. Therefore we think the record must be wrong, which makes Ashmole a Freemason of modern type.

It is an undeniable fact that the conceited mystery of the Rosicrucians, and their vainglorious pretenses to everything good and great and magical, or holy, are united with the emblems and working tools of a handicraft mason, the compasses and level and square and leather apron, to form that lying wonder of the nineteenth century which is commonly called Freemasonry. This union did not take place in one day; nor until the false philosophy of the Rosicrucians fell into merited disgrace, and the sect ran out. Ashmole died A. D. 1692, and with him the last of the rosy cross philosophers; but the spirit of this order, after lingering a few years among men of less note, passed, by a species of metempsychosis, into a new body, the company of masons, with whom it first appears in the early part of the eighteenth century.

When Ashmole died, 1692, Sir Christopher Wren was at the head of the English architects, holding the office of Deputy Surveyor of the king's buildings: in 1698 he was made by William III. Suveyor General of public works; and in 1714 to 1718, for political considerations, he was removed from office by George I. All Masonic historians call Sir Christopher Wren Deputy Grand Master at the time when he was Deputy Surveyor, and Grand Master of Freemasons at the time when he was Surveyor General to the throne. But in doing this they make a very short rope to hang themselves; for by their own showing the first Grand Lodge was formed in 1717;* then, how could Sir Christopher Wren be Grand Master in 1698, nineteen years before there was a Grand Lodge?

During this period the Rosicrusian pretensions were seeking, like a troubled spirit, for some resting place. The age is one of the most extravagant speculation: and moved with a strange desire of fame and money and conviviality, four companies of stone masons, who were left of those that had been associated in building the proud edifices of London after the fire of 1616, met, the lodge that had worked on St. Paul's Church being at the head, and formed the Grand Lodge of London, in February, and elected their officers June 24th, A. D. 1717. With a view to fill up their ranks, and to increase their consequence, they voted to accept men of other trades and professions, as members of the society. (Vide Preston, Smith, Lawrie, Hardie, Tannehill, et alias particularly the Ahiman Rezon of Lawrence Dermott, quoted in the fourth number of the A. M. Review and Magazine.) Three years they struggled, accommodating the Rosicrucian pretensions to the emblems of a handicraft mason; and then, in 1720, burnt their papers for the benefit of the mystery. (See all the above writers.) They gave out that this bonfire was made "by some too scrupulous brethren," who feared that the secrets of Masonry would be exposed in the Book of Constitutions about to be published; but the smoke of that fire was not thick enough to envelope the origin of their mystic order in impenetrable obscurity. No doubt they hoped by burning their pretended parchments, to destroy all evidence disproving their claim to immemorial customs and imprescriptible rights, which claim was in a course of preparation for the public in the dreaded Book of Constitutions. After three years more, the volume came forth from the hands of Anderson and Desaguilliers, or Desaguliers, and blowed the first strain of Masonic vainglory and unearthly mystery, which is heard from any book or printed treatise!

Anderson and Desaguilliers, a Scotchman and a Frenchman, in London, were the men who first published to the world, the high pretensions of Freemasonry; men of low character, and of a base spirit, whose Book of Constitutions of Masonry, was ushered from the press, A. D. 1723, and is hardly older than our grandfathers! (See Robinson's Proofs of a Conspiracy, p. 19, and page 60; Lawrie, p. 92.) This volume of mock constitutions is the basis of all Masonic history, and its delusive statements have been servilely copied and greatly magnified, until the mystic wonder has grown beyond the size and power of the fabled monsters of antiquity.

Now the false spirit of the rosy cross philosophy was fairly embodied with the emblems of a mechanics' society; and was brought forth by the Book of Constitutions in the form of Freemasonry. From the time of its birth the lying wonder began to run to and fro in the earth, wherever British commerce could convey it; and charters for holding Masonic lodges were everywhere sold at a cash price, and an annual stipend, by the Grand Lodge of London. To that Grand Lodge the inhabitants of most parts of continental Europe, of the East and West Indies, of Africa and of America, paid an annual tribute for the right to confer the three degrees of Morgan's Freemasonry! The date and Grand Master who issued the warrant, are carefully recorded, in Preston, Smith, Tannehill, and others, for holding lodges in all quarters of the earth. A. D. 1729, Freemasonry was first introduced into the East Indies; 1730 the Grand Lodge of Ireland was formed; 1731 a patent was sent from England to erect a lodge at the Hague; 1733 Freemasonry established itself in North America at Boston; 1736 at Cape Coast in Africa, and at Geneva in Europe; in Scotland the same year the first Grand Master was elected: and so the triple-headed monster, Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master, went deceitfully round the earth while it was yet in its teens.

This is the nucleus of the history of Freemasonry. Around it we shall gather distinct dissertations upon the Rosicrucians, upon the Scotch masons upon the York Masons, and upon the Ancient and Modern Masons. We shall hereafter, if life is spared, trace upon it the rise of the degrees of Knighthood, the chapters, the councils, and the sublime sovereignties of sublime Freemasonry, even to that lying "under the celestial canopy of the zenith, 32 deg., 45 sec., north latitude." We will unravel the labyrinth of this boasted mystery; we will expose the falsehood of its appearances, and put the light of truth in the place of its misty darkness; that all the world may know how utterly worthless in its history is this modern Bethaven, this house of vanity; and how despicably false it is in its divine importance and assumed antiquity.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, September 10, 1874.

"The National Congregational Council" meets in New Haven, Conn , the 30th of this month (30th.) Mr. Hinman, our lecturer for Illinois, thinks the forming of this Council at Oberlin under the hand of a Masonic chaplain (Quint) the heaviest blow our cause has received yet. We shall see what Bacon, Quint and Dexter will do to fluid the churches to the great question.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTH-WESTERN IOWA —ADDRESSES—THE DENOMINATIONS, METHODIST EPISCOPAL, COVENANTER, BAPTIST, ETC —THEIR MISSION—THE UNITED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

CLARINDA, Page Co., Iowa, Aug. 28, 1874.

To the Readers of the Cynosure:

I am amongst an interesting people. Covenanters, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, United Brethren, are the denominational names here. But the people are those whom enterprise has drawn, and perhaps in some instances misfortune has driven, from the older settlements, to start human society amid these rolling prairies and bluffs. For the earth seems here to have been in a state of fusion, and when you approach the Rocky Mountains, it has settled into ridge and hardened into bluffs.

I have spoken to large audiences, in College Springs once, here, at Clarinda, twice. (This is the county seat). To-night I speak in the Covenanter church (Rev. Mr. McKee's). To-morrow night in the Congregational church at College Springs, and on Sabbath, in the United Presbyterian church at the same place. The leaven of opposition to the devil-worships has pervaded all the denominations here. Even the Episcopal Methodists are not excepted. I spoke in their church at Clarinda, and several important members of that great denomination here are setting themselves strongly toward Christ and against the human substitutes for his atonement, in the shape of secret rituals and mock-solemn rites. But it must in truth be said that the Methodist Episcopal preachers in Iowa, so far as I learn, are almost all Masons and Odd-fellows. Indeed they could scarcely be otherwise. Many of them are half-reclaimed rowdies, caught at camp-meeting and set to preaching, with little knowledge in their understandings, and one article in their creed, viz , belief in the M. E. church as an expedient to get to heaven by. Some of them seem to be converted to Christ; and these are seeking holiness; lean toward the Inskip national movement, and begin to understand and hate the lodge. Others have no religion but emotions, nothing to teach. These join the lodges, and, by the acquired cunning of peddlars and traveling agents they become the worst members of the community. They are apostles of the world, the flesh and the devil in the shape of the lodge. They light on every religious excitement, and by tact, by grips, and tokens of secret recognition, draw together a group of hearers on class papers, and form, in the community, a sort of religious pigeon-net by which the lodge catches and controls its victims. But the Methodist people proper begin to penetrate this craft, and tire of this sort of amphibious preachers, who, like the "frogs" of the apocalypse are at home alike in both elements, church and lodge; and who, like the mongrel Samaritans of old, "fear the Lord and serve their own gods."

I more and more admire the Scotch Presbyterians, especially the Covenanters. They are a sharp, clear-cut sect who have aimed to present the Christian religion, pure and simple, to the eyes and understandings of mankind, as the theory of their denominational practice. Their fathers knelt down by a tomb-stone table in Grey Friar's church-yard, and signed a "solemn league and covenant" to stand "for Christ's crown rights," against king, priest and pope. They stood square against the crushing power of the British crown, and when crushed, hid in wild moors and worshipped in caves and glens. Had they understood Cromwell they would have accepted him. But the Bible said "king," and Cromwell was not one. They were slaughtered by Charles II. because they despised and rejected, his "Tulkan," or fifth calf-bishops. They would not own "William and Mary" at the Revolution, because they claimed Christ's headship in the church. They were willing the king should rule in the things Cæsar, but not in the things of God, conscience, worship, and faith. And when they got to this country, they stood, and still stand aloof from the United States constitution, because it recognizes no God but the people, and puts the religion of the Bible on a level with a Hottentot's worship of a monkey, or a Chinaman's worship of a cock, or a devil supposed to be represented by one. When urged that this fault of the constitution does not vitiate it, they reply: Defects do not vitiate and destroy a family or government, but fundamental defects. As if a railroad corporation should put its funds into a woolen factory, it would forfeit its charter. So they hold that our government charter is forfeit by ignoring God, and running the government in the apparent human interests of the hour. And to me, there is something sublime in a set of farmers, out in these prairies, refusing to vote or hold office under the United States constitution, till it shall acknowledge its power to rule men to be derived from God. For this end they are laboring in the cause of national reform. God grant them speedy success. Their pastor , Rev. David McKee, is a clear, thinking man, beloved by his own people, and respected by the entire community.

The Baptists, too, are here an excellent people like those in north-eastern Pennsylvania; and, with the United Presbyterians, who are are a sort of voting Covenanters, and the Congregationalists, under a calm and determined pastor, with some little discount in their membership, are all opposed to the lodge as an opposition government and a rival religion. The General Assembly Presbyterians here, have, in some prominent instances, been roped into the lodge.

Deacon R. E. Adams, who left Wheaton and settled here a few years since, has acted as a general agent and missionary for Christ against the "unfruitful works of darkness" here, and God has greatly owned and blessed his exertions. In "the battle day of God" approaching, when these limbs of popery and priestcraft shall fall into one party against Christ and popular government, the children of these bluffs and prairie uplands, reared to see that Christ is the only way to God and to reject the pitiful falsehoods and swindles of the Freemasons, Odd-fellows and the grange, will form a legion of light against the "rulers of the darkness of this world." The Lord hasten it!

I muse on these various denominations. What is their relation to goodness and to God? I half incline to think God has chosen each for its specific mission and end; and thus,

> "Builds, on wants, and on defects of mind
> The glory, peace and virtue of mankind."

But, when I see how the devil dodges between them and hides his dark worships under the name of Christ and the wings of his churches, had not history proved its folly, I should be almost tempted to form, for the hundrdeth time, a sect whose creed is that there shall be no sects. As it is, I still hope that Bro. Crooks' suggestion that there be an organization of "The United churches of Christ" which shall exclude the worshipers of the devil, will yet be realized.

Yours in Christ, J. BLANCHARD.

THE MISSOURI STATE CONVENTION—A FORTUNATE MISTAKE —THE MEETINGS AT ALBANY, AND IN PAGE COUNTY, IOWA— THE TRIP TO MISSOURI.

ON BOARD THE C., B. & Q. R. R. TRAIN,
FRIDAY, September 4, 1874.

On Monday last a company of four of us left College Springs, Iowa, for Albany, Gentry county, Missouri, under the mistaken impression that the Missouri State Convention was to meet there. The mistake resulted admirably for the good of the cause. The State Convention was held at Brashear, Adair county. About seventy-five members participated; a State Association auxiliary to our National Association was organized; between three and four hundred dollars pledged for a State lecturer; three Odd-fellows present seeded, and declared their ritual revealed as they received it; one Freemason, who, within three years, had been Master of a local lodge in Missouri, did the same for the Masonic order which the Odd-fellows had done for theirs; and this effective meeting was held, and a great success achieved with no help from abroad. Even Rev. D. P. Rathbun, who was confidently expected, failed to appear. The Conference of the United Brethren, Bishop Glosbrenner presiding, held its annual session in Brashear at the time, and such of its members as were zealous against the secret orders, aided the cause and good speaking was had.

Meantime, instead of reaching that meeting, we went to Albany, Gentry county, the home of G. W. Needles, Esq., and the place of publication of his paper, The American Freeman. I spoke to a fair congregation called out by posters, in the M. E. church on Tuesday night. Wednesday forenoon we had a pray-meeting in the same place, and at night, I addressed a large crowd in an Advent tent which was courteously offered us by the preachers. Meantime, Rev. Mr. Barker, pastor of the Congregational church of College Springs, Iowa, addressed an audience in a school-house some ten miles out. I heard Mr. Barker's address warmly commended by some of those who attended it.

Thus three meetings were held in Missouri instead of one, by reason of our mistake. And to crown all, Mr. Needles himself came home from the State Convention at Brashear on Wednesday, in time to furnish his interesting report for the great meeting in the tent, which gave it the character and effect of a ratification meeting, called by the Providence of God. Friends in Albany, taken by surprise by our unexpected coming, sent our Iowa party to the two hotels, paid for our handsome entertainment, and Mr. Needles also insisted on making a private collection to meet our expenses on the journey there.

In Missouri, the ballot-box stands close behind the Bible; and the friends in Albany express the opinion that, if they put a county ticket in nomination there, the Republicans, who are in a dead minority, would favor it, and they would draw Anti-masons enough from the Democrats to run them hard if not defeat them. "To this complexion it must come at last."

I wish I could describe my visit at the College Springs so that our readers might enjoy it as I have done. I spoke seven times in six days in Page county. At Clarinda, the county seat, the audiences were fair as to size, respectable and attentive. The other meetings were crowded in-doors, and, in some cases, many stood outside at the windows. I have not seen so many horses and vehicles together on the Sabbath, for years, as at College Springs. An extensive revival last winter had prepared the public mind to receive the truth; and the crowded audiences at the ordinary meetings at the churches there contrast strikingly with meetings in other places where the ministry shuns questions of reform.

Our route to Albany, Missouri, sixty miles, lay through high rolling prairies streaked with wooded ravines, bluffs and headlands. Cabins and stables of decayed logs, shingled with rived clapboards and guarded by troops of dogs still linger as land-marks of the old era of slavery. We stopped over night in one village which Nasby only could properly describe. There was neither church, nor Sabbath-school, nor public worship of any kind. But there are a post-office, three grog-shops, and a cluster of dwellings, whose misery was enlivened by a wedding and a "chevairee" the night we stopped there. The land-lord of the forlorn hotel was either absent or drunk, and his two bright but profane boys were at the "chevairee." We slept in the reception room in two beds, and were warned not to be discomposed when the boys should return to sleep in the same room on the floor. A couple of travelers came in after we had retired, and as I had my clothes on I officiated as hostler and piloted them to the crazy apology for a stable. A little sorrowful Virginia woman keeps the house; and, strange to say, keeps it well. Her cooking was respectable; her words few; her demeanor wary and respectable; and she glided around among the male specimens of humanity who infest, rather than inhabit, the place, as I have seen a shrivelled and rueful hen guiding, sheltering, and feeding a litter of half-feathered, hard-drinking ducks.

But slavery has left Missouri and the rail-road has come there: and the finger-marks of enterprise, reform, and rising energy and vigor are seen all along the road.

We passed one quarter-section, surrounded by a beautiful half-grown hedge in the open prairie. Flocks of sheep, and herds of improved cattle were ruminating over the near prospect of change, when they must take the cars and follow their fellows to Chicago. And although knots of lazy, idle men, not over cleanly clad, still cling to the shop-doors and "shady-sides" in the villages, I have seldom seen better looking, more intelligent and attentive audiences than I addressed in Missouri.

The pastor of the Methodist church South said he was a Freemason; but he was more frank and gentlemanly than the same sort of a person manufactured out of a Yankee; and his colleague in the North church at Albany was neither a Mason nor Odd-fellow; and his wife, who came with him to our prayer-meeting, said she was preparing an essay against the secret temperance orders.

In short, if Gentry county is to be taken as a specimen, Missouri bids fair to be redeemed from the blight and curse of the lodge, before Massachusetts. I conversed with some of their lawyers in the court-house, and found their leading men at heart opposed to the meanness and secrecy of the dark orders; and if Mr. Needles, with The Freeman, is sustained, as I hope and trust he may be, the politics of Missouri will soon feel the weight of his hand. Are there not among the subscribers to the Cynosure, and, among their acquaintance, some who can spare one dollar and fifty cents a year to take his paper a few years till it conquors a large local subscription list?

Yours in Christ, J. B.

THE BLOOD-THIRSTY LODGE.

Rev. A. Crooks writing to the American Wesleyan from the Central Ohio Conference tells of a third and monstrous attempt on the life of Rev. D. P. Rathbun, well known as a seceding Mason and lecturer against the lodge. The account is given briefly as follows:

"As indicated above, brother Rathbun was in attendance from New York; but it was at the expense of fearful peril. Taking the boat at Ogdensburgh, New York, for Cleveland, Ohio, Thursday the 13th inst. (Aug,) he anticipated an enjoyable trip. But these hopes were doomed to sad reverses. After earnest and repeated debate with Masons on the subject of Masonry, a member of this most charitable fraternity presented him with an apple, which was received with thanks and eaten without suspicion. In a few minutes, agonized and delirious with intensest pain, our brother fell helpless to the floor. The apple had been impregnated with a virulent poison. A young German physician nobly came to the rescue, gave him powerful emetics, causing violent vomiting and the expulsion of the deadly deposit from his stomach, and giving almost instant relief. But this was not all. The mere attempt to take life was not enough to appease Masonic vengence. In addition, reputation must be pierced through the heart. When confronted by brother Rathbun and accused of putting poison into the apple and thus attempting murder, the vile wretch denied, and stoutly denounced his victim for being beastly intoxicated, and was ready to bet fifty dollars that there was a whisky-flask in his satchel. "I am not a betting character," said brother Rathbun unsuspectingly, "and neither am I a drinking man. There is no flask there." The satchel was produced and opened, and to the utter surprise of its owner, sure enough, there was a flask! Through forgetfulness the key was left at home and the satchel not locked, and the double conspirator against life and reputation had stealthily made this deposit, and hence his confident readiness to bet. Warned of an arrest so soon as the boat touched at Cleveland, and a man called "Buffalo Bill," declaring that he had seen the would-be murderer "below fixing an apple," the boat was run to the Canada side, and the monster who gave the apple, "Buffalo Bill," and every member of the crew but two, deserted; these two having to mann the boat as best they could and bring her to Cleveland.

Those familiar with the brief history of our reform will recollect the brutal assault on Mr. Rathbun in the summer of 1870 while preaching in Beuna Vista, N. Y. Several ruffians waylaid him near his home and, preventing his outcries, dragged him through a mud hole, kicking and stamping him into the mud, only leaving him when alarmed by the cries of his wife. In the winter of 1872, while riding home from an Anti-masonic meeting with Rev. J. L. Audrus, a Baptist minister, he was fired upon from a roadside thicket several times, one shot wounding him in the wrist. These murderous assaults were with great clearness traced to the Masonic order, but no effort was made to bring the perpetrators to justice. This is now the third and most villainous attempt at assassination. We adore with gratitude the God who keeps the steps of this good man, and suffers no device formed against him to prosper. But we are reminded that unless this fearful business is stopped some valuable life may yet be sacrificed to the demon of the lodge. And besides, the public will be persuaded by the ever busy tongue of the lodge that Freemasonry is slandered unless some of these deeds are brought home to its doors and proved in court. But once establish a case, and the nation will arise to crush the blood-thirsty jesuitry of the lodge. It will be an unanswerable argument for the abolition of secret orders which every paper will publish and every American read and ponder. As a matter of self-defense every active man in this reform has an interest in having the culprit convicted no less than for the interest of the cause he has espoused, and, if the present one will not, at the first attack where the proof will warrant, we should unite to strike a deadly blow at the hidous devil of Freemasonry.

MASONIC POLITICS.

On this day, Sept. 10th, a Congregressional Convention meets at Rockford to re-nominate, if the symptoms do not deceive us, General Hurlbut for Congress.

When Judge Whitney was swearing in a Univer salist preacher to make him a Master Mason, the preacher stopped at the prayer to conceal all a Master Mason's crimes but two. Whitney, to induce him to go forward, repeated the assurance that his oath was not intended to biud him to do anything against his duty as a citizen or a Christian, and added, "of which you are to be the judge." The preacher then went through with the oath.

After he was led out to put on his clothes, Hurlbut arose and asked Whitney, who was Master of the lodge, whether he meant to say that a Mason could judge for himself and refuse any act which he thought inconsistent with his duty as a Christian or a citizen? Whitney replied, Yes. Hurlbut dissented and insisted that the lodge was to judge, and the individual had no discretion, but was bound by the judgment of the lodge. This happened in Belvidere Lodge, No. 60, Boone county, Ill. After long controversy the lodge sustained Hurlbut and denied the right of private judgment, holding Masons bound to conceal the crimes of Masons unless otherwise decided by the lodge.

When afterwards Ellen Slade was murdered in Belvidere this same Hurlbut took the ground that Masons were bound to screen her murderer because he was a Mason. Whitney took the other side, and held that Masons were not bound to conceal known crime, because against their duty as citizens. The Grand Lodge of Illinois sustained Hurlbut and expelled Whitney.

In case Hurlbut is nominated at Rockford will not some of his constituents see that these facts circulate through his district. No sworn slave of the lodge is fit to represent a free people.

NOTES.

—A letter has been received from Tiskilwa, Ill., replying to the statements of the M. E. minister of that place; but as it has no signature but "Observer" we cannot publish it. The real name of the author should always accompany an article for publication. It need not be published if so desired.

—Bro. J. M. Rownd corrects a statement made in connection with a extract from a letter to the Methodist Free Press, published in these columns two weeks ago. He is not a minister of the Free Methodist church of Summerfield, O., as the statement would imply, but is a class leader in that body.

—The Anti-masonic Christian Herald has removed from Senecaville, Ohio, to Connersville, Indiana, where it has hope of better support. It has doubled in size and improved greatly in appearance, and is now to be furnished weekly at $1.00 per year. W. A. Wallace is still the editor and publisher. He has earnestly struggled with poverty and opposition in his enterprise, and for these causes he has been compelled to suspend publication for two months, but has now hope of good support and hearty sympathy from friends in the locality of Connersville, in which we trust he may not be disappointed.

—The Detroit conference of the Methodist Epicopal church has wisely concluded that it does not exercise the legal function of sitting as jury on the mental soundness of its members. Last week on Friday it restored Rev. John Levington to his privileges as a Christian minister and appointed him to a charge. Two years ago it presumed to set him aside as insane on the subject of Masonry; the words of the resolution being that his mind "has so long and intimately dwelt on exciting themes as to seriously impair his nervous system." Now after two whole years, while his mind has been wholly given to the investigation and discussion of these same "exciting themes," namely, the idolatrous and blasphemous nature of the lodge and the hypocrisy of Masonic ministers, and therefore his insane condition becoming more alarmingly dangerous—behold! the conference gives him an appointment to a church. Nothing is said about the shockingly impaired nervous system; so far as the conference vote is concerned Mr. Levington is yey in as sad and commiserable condition as ever, and by inmplication much worse, but he is placed over a church. Alas! for a body of religious leaders who could so wrong one of their ablest members, and dare not confess their sin though their action acknowledges it. God overruled their base action to give more liberty to the effort against the lodge, which liberty has been used, as all our readers know. Although his efforts in this reform will be somewhat limited, if Bro. Levington accepts the situation, yet they will not be less decisive and vigorous.

—The Western Rural of this city may be excellent in suggestions for the farm, but when it prints items like the following, it prepares its way to withdraw from every Christian family. The August 22d number says:

"If there is a poor-paying investment in the world a little less profitable than all others, it is the investment of mind, body and means in foreign missionary labor."

Prof. Max Muller, the distinguished Oriental scholar, in a lecture delivered some time since in England on missionary and non-missionary religions, showed conclusively the error of such opinions as the above, which are seldom held by any minds not embittered towards the Gospel. He said:

"What, it may be asked, is the use of missionaries? Why should we spend millions on foreign missions, when there are children in our cities who are allowed to grow up in ignorance? Why should we deprive ourselves of some of the noblest, boldest, most ardent, and devoted spirits, and send them into the wilderness, while so many laborers are wanted in the vineyard at home?

"It is right to ask these questions; and we ought not to blame those political economists who tell us that every convert costs us $1,000, and that at the present rate of progress it would take more than two hundred thousand years to evangelize the world. These is nothing at all startling in these figures. Every child born in Europe is as much a heathen as the child of a Melanesian cannibal; and it costs us more than one thousand dollars to turu a child into a Christian man. The other calculation is totally erroneous; for an intellectual harvest must not be calculated by adding simply grain to grain, but by counting each grain as a living seed that will bring forth a hundred and a thousand fold."

The Sanitarian.—The September number of this excellent health journal abounds in good things, among which must be named the article on school Diseases, Physiology of Intemperance, Sanitary Notes, Unwholesome Meat and How to Prevent It, and the Position of Woman with Reference to Education. The Home Circle.

Brought Home.

Sun of my soul! Thou Saviour dear,
It is not night if Thou be near.

Twilight was fast throwing her sombre shadows over London. Even the din of the great city seemed for a time to have lost its accustomed clamor, and to have sympathized with the surrounding calm of an autumn day. From his study window, the curate of St. Matthew's Highgate, gazed out on the scene, with many conflicting thoughts. Tired and weary with his arduous labors, from which he had just returned, he needed the tranquilizing hour to soothe the soul, which distress and "man's inhumanity to man" had harrowed, in his daily round of parochial duties. Many were the thoughts which agitated his mind, and made him for the time the prey of the giant self.

His once happy home came up in contrast to his present surroundings, the loneliness of his heart, the forsaking all that to the worldling makes life dear and bright; all, all had been given up for a life of poverty and self-denial. In vision the scene changed, the cross-lifted Saviour with marred form drew near, and the words which echoed comfort and peace to the tempest-tossed disciples, came to his thoughts in sweeter than æolian strains, "Be not afraid, it is I." Can you fathom the peace which brought strength to his weary nature and caused him to consecrate himself afresh to the Crucified's service?

A rap was heard at the study door, and it being opened, his housekeeper appeared.

"Please, sir, there is a man desires to speak with you."

"What is his errand, Martha?"

"He did not say, sir, but he seems to be in great distress."

"Well!" with a sigh of weariness he said, "tell him to come in."

A few moments elapsed before there appeared at the door the face of middle age, on whose brow the signet of care and dire poverty had left their marks. He spoke in a hurried and incoherent manner, as if for want of time. It was the oft told tale of want and sickness. Fever had entered his home, and the grim spectre of death was on the threshold, ready to snatch from his grasp the mother and eldest child. His wife had so pleaded for the consolations of her church that the desire to please her and to put an end to her importuning had led the father to do, what at any other period he would have spurned as a woman's idle fear, which was to be done away with by ridicule.

The clergyman arose and followed the man out of the door and into the street, and by rapid walking managed to keep up with his silent guide, from whom he could only elicit an occasional yes or no, in reply to questions in which he endeavored to obtain information in regard to his early history. It was not difficult to see from his conversation that he was a man of good intellect, but his mind had been severely shaken by the inroads of infidelity.

They soon arrived at the court, and entering a sunken doorway, ascended the stairs and entered the attic which was honored by the name of home.

The scene was beyond description. On the bed were the forms of mother and daughter. The little sufferer tossed and swayed about by paroxysms of pain, ever and anon clasped the cold form by her side and plaintively pleaded "Mamma." There was no response, for the arms which were wont to clasp her darling, were now motionless, the eye which once beamed with the look of a mother's love had the unnatural glare of death. "Gone! Gone! Gone!!!" he groaned, and with folded arms and stoic look, the husband gazed on the face which even death could not rob of its peaceful smile. Willie, the youngest child, stood with mute surprise and gazed on the scene which his infantile mind could not understand, and the holy calm of the chamber was only broken by the moaning of pain which came from the parched lips of the little sufferer.

With a sigh as if the paroxysm of pain had ceased, the child opened her eyes, which, for a moment, sent a bewildered gaze around the cheerless room, and rested with a tender look of love on the face of the father.

"Papa," she exclaimed, "I am so cold. O papa, dear, do you wish me to believe what you have taught me, or shall I believe like mamma, on Jesus, and love him as she did?"

What a test of his creed! There he stood with folded arms and with glaring eye, unconscious of the presence of a stranger. It was but a moment, and then the strong man became like a woman, tears coursed down his furrowed cheeks, the compressed lips were loosened, and he exclaimed in broken utterance,

"Nellie, O darling, believe what your mother has taught you.'

There was a sigh of relief, and the eyes lost their look of love and became glazed with the stare of death; a murmur, which in the stillness of the room, was heard,

"Jesus, mamma's Je———"

And the tired spirit winged its flight to the bosom of the Saviour.

Long he looked at the little form, until the voice of the curate was heard repeating the comforting words, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

The outbursts of grief which seemed to be comfortless subsided into a moan as of a weary child. Seating himself by the corpse, he buried his face in his hands in earnest thought.

The little boy sought to solace his grief in the arms of the curate, who, with winning voice tried to bring within the grasp of the infantile mind the great truth of the resurrection. He told the child that his mother and sister had only fallen asleep, to be awakened in their graves at the judgment, and that their souls were enjoying perfect bliss in the paradise above, waiting and watching for him and his father to come to them. Thinking that the child might arouse the father from social grief, he drew the little one closer, and whispering asked:

"Did your mother leave no message for your father, my child?"

The eyes were turned upward in earnest look, and then brightened as he replied:

"Oh! I forget; shall I tell him now?"

"Yes, you may."

The child left the knee of the curate, and approaching the father, he drew away the hard hand moistened with the tears and said:

"Papa, papa,—Mamma told me to tell you to meet her in heaven."

The words of the child seemed to recall the man to the realities of the situation, for he awakened as if from a long sleep, glanced at the little pleader with a yearning, fatherly look, and drew him to his breast with the exclamation:

"God helping me, I will."

The curate left the room, as it was a joy in which a "stranger does not intermingle," feeling as he never felt before, that another prodigal was and that there was more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than over the ninety and nine that need no repentance.—Our Church Work.

Affliction.

Affliction acts as a dyke against the overflow of evil; it incessantly restrains and thrusts it back. Imagine a rising ocean tide with no ebb, incessantly advancing, and covering first the rocks along the shore, then the valleys, then the plains, then the mountains, engulfing fields and towns, urging on its way without a pause, inflexibly pursuing its devastating course till all life had disappeared. This is the picture of what evil would be if left to itself, without suffering to restrain it. Imagine all lusts, all passions, all evil desires, meeting with no obstacle, gradually accumulating hour by hour, and tell me what would become of the moral world. Man would attain to the infinite in evil. But the infinite of evil is destruction and annihilation, and at the foot of the slope of sin is the bottomless pit!

But every day this formidable flood of iniquity is held back by an irresistible power; sin finds its limit in suffering; passion strikes against a fatal bourne, where it perishes; lust is quenched in disgust; however insatiable the thirst for pleasure, the cup of delight always contains bitter and terrible dregs which compel the most eager lips to turn from it; and death is there, to say to the raging waves of our dissolute passions, thus far shall ye go, and no farther! Thus far, namely, to that gravestone, against which evil always dashes itself at last! In short, it is a fact that if anything prevents our world from being destroyed by its own corruption, if there is a healthful substance, a purifying salt to stay this putrefaction, it is suffering and death. Yes, however startling the paradox may appear, pain is a preserving power in this sinful world.—Pressense.

Borrowing Trouble.

This is one of the "little foxes" that spoil so many grapes for us. Not content with the ills we have, we are continually flying to others that we know not of, taking anxious thought for the morrow, anticipating a thousand evils in the future, and losing the peace and happiness the present might yield. While thus forecasting trouble, opportunities leading to success pass unnoticed, as also the beginning of real disasters, both which we might attend to, improving the first and checking the last, if our thoughts were in the present, as they should be.

It is perfectly right, and indeed wise, to have a plan of life running through the years, and then to work up to it as we may, day by day, and hour by hour. Is it not true that those most given to borrowing trouble are uncertain and aimless as to the work of their lives; that they drift with the current instead of setting their brows against wind and tide toward a certain definite haven? But how if one cannot have a plan; if one's movements are so hampered by circumstances that he cannot feel certain of attaining the far distant results of well-considered purposes? To such may come with power the reflection that man proposes and God disposes, that the best laid plans are often overtaken with ruin, and the most any of us can do with certainty of being in the right path is to devote ourselves and without hesitation to the duty of the hour, turning everything that happens, whether prosperous or adverse, to the furtherance, as far as we may, of our designs.

How many of us in childhood in passing over a winding country road, have not thought, as he looked ahead that it was certainly coming to an end, and then what? But as we went on, a turning in the road gave us to see a way out of our fancied entanglement. Just so in life, a little way ahead we fear that everything is coming to a dead-lock, but time takes us through and often when we anticipate passing into straits and shoals we find ourselves in waters wide and deep.

We have real troubles enough most of us without borrowing any from the future or the past, and why not borrow joy? The skies will always be blue though clouds may overcast them at intervals; the spring will never fail to come with its wealth of glowing green, and we have the promise that while the earth remaineth seed-time and harvest shall not cease. So will there ever be reasons for thanksgiving, causes for satisfaction, sources of joy in even the coldest, dreariest life, if so be the eyes are open to see them and the heart to feel. To illustrate: not long ago we rode through a charming section of country with an intelligent and cultivated lady, whose conversation was not about the picturesque landscape we were passing over, the bewitching melody of birds that sang from every bough, the vernal airs that played about us, the wealth of blossoms that reminded us of the Garden of Eden, but of petty housekeeping cares and small domestic troubles—the little foxes that spoil so many women's lives. She was borrowing trouble from the past instead of opening wide her heart to all the beauty and fragrance and melody that sought an interpreter there. Was that wisdom?

Philosophy and religion, either one, certainly both together, will give any rational soul peace. Where are the frets that robbed our grandmothers of the joys they deserved to have? Just where ours will be fifty years hence. Were not those of them who preserved unwrinkled brows and placid tones, in spite of all that adverse fate could bring, the truly wise and blessed? If we believe that God is our father, that he exercises not only a general but a special providence over the children of men, where does the propriety of borrowing trouble have reasonable place? Let us rather borrow joy, and thus disarm the future of all evils but its own. —N. Y. Tribune.

Wealth of the British Aristocracy.

The enormous wealth of the very few may be judged by certain examples and facts, which are here given on creditable testimony. There are thirty thousand great English land-owners, who together derive a land revenue of some sixty millions of pounds sterling. There are considerably more than a million peasants, who have hitherto been totally dependent for bare existence on the lords of the soil. One quarter of Scotland is owned by eight noblemen, of whom the chief are the Dukes of Hamilton, Buccleuch, and Sutherland, the Marquis of Bute, and the Earl of Breadalbane. The English county of East Sussex, embracing more than eight hundred square miles, is almost exclusively the property of the Duke of Richmond and the Baron of Leconfield. So extensive is the property of the young Marquis of Bute, whose income is fully three hundred thousand pounds a year, that not long ago his agent spent nearly two millions in repairing his magnificent manor and estate of Crichton Mount Stuart, the marquis' residence near Cardiff. Mr. Bright once instanced the case of a nobleman with an income of one hundred and twenty thousand pounds, who annually spent forty thousand, and laid down the remaining eighty thousand in "rounding" his property, by buying up every parcel of ground contiguous to his estate which he could induce the owners to sell. This was one example of the pregnant fact that the land has long been in process of concentration in the hands of fewer and fewer possessors, thus ever widening the gap between rich and poor. The tendency has been encouraged and protected by the still enforced laws of primogeniture and entail. To be sure, the law of primogeniture, as it now stands, only operates in the case of a proprietor dying intestate; and but very few land-owners do die intestate. Nine out of ten, however, do as a fact leave the bulk of their real estate by will to the eldest son, to maintain the dignity and prestige of the family. The law of entail is far more serious in its results, as tying up land and perpetuating vast and ancient estates beyond peradventure. Simply stated, the present English law of entail enables the owner of a landed property to devise it for the term of a life in living, and for twenty-one years after; and this entail can only be cut off by the concurrent consent of two parties—the existing occupant and the heir. If, therefore, Lord Hardhunter has a son two years old, and that son lives to be eighty, Lord Hardhunter may, by an entail, easily cut the estate absolutely off from the market for a hundred years. In various ways this often works other injustice than that of restricting land in so small and overcrowded a country. The present Duke of Newcastle having run through his fortune and a greater part of that of his duchess, went into bankruptcy loaded down with debts, one alone of which amounted to eighty thousand pounds. But the creditors could not touch his entailed estate, and so this noble bankrupt still finds himself in possession of one of the most enviable properties in the kingdom.

Among other immense properties of the few rich may be mentioned that of the Duke of Westminister, who owns besides Belgrave and Eaton squares, and a large part of the fashionable quarter of Westminister, the magnificent manor of Eaton Hall, near Chester, Halkin House, in Flintshire, and Motcombe House, in Dorsetshire, each surrounded by thousands of arable but, to some extent at least, uncultivated acres. The Earl of Derby may be said to own almost square miles of blocks in Liverpool, and Knowsley, his ancestral country-seat, is larger than most New England townships. The Duke of Sutherland is said to be able to ride by rail from sunrise to sundown on his Scottish estates, and has five noble castles. The Duke of Devonshire is the lord of no less than eight castles, all of which are rural palaces fit for royalty, among them peerless Chatworth and the only less superb Hardwicke Hall. In London he has a residence on Piccadilly, where land can be worth scarcely less than ten pounds a square foot, which is surrounded by gardens, and occupies a broad square. The Duke of Buccleuch has ten castles, in each of which a liberal domestic establishment is kept up all the year round. The income, probably, of every nobleman who has been named exceeds fifty thousand pounds; a majority of them would show revenues of one hundred thousand, and at least three of them, the Dukes of Westminister and Sutherland and the Marquis of Bute, receive annual incoms of more than three hundred thousand. Nor are the titled and hereditary aristocracy any longer the only great land-owners. In comparatively recent years the successful merchants, manufacturers, and bankers have been eager to secure what is called in England "a stake in the country." Again and again which have estates belonged to noble families for centuries, and whose entails have become exhausted, have been bought in by these parvenus, who in their turn have become lords of the manor and masters of peasant communities. Still a third class of landed proprietaries has been those of the church endowments. Thus we have three very powerful sources of social and influential power arrayed together to maintain the present condition of things, to keep the peasant where he is, and to defend the laws of primogeniture and entail from attack—the hereditary nobility, the manufacturing and banking princes, and the clergy.—Harper's Magazine.

"Do Your Best."

"When I was a little boy," said a gentleman, "I paid a visit one evening to my grandfather, a venerable old man, whose black velvet cap and tassel, blue breeches and huge siver knee-buckles filled me with awe. When I went to bid him good-bye, he drew me between his knees, and, placing his hand upon my head, said, 'Grandchild, I have one thing to say to you; will you remember it?' I looked into his face and nodded, for I was afraid to promise aloud. 'Well,' he continued, 'whatever you do, do the best you can.'

"This, in fact, was my grandfather's legacy to me; and it has proved better than gold. I never forgot his words; and I believe I have tried to act upon them. After reaching home, my uncle gave Robert and me some weeding to do in the garden. It was Wednesday afternoon and we had laid our plans for something else. Robert, vexed and ill-humored at his disappointment, did not more than half do his work; and I began pretty much like him, until grandfather's advice came into my mind, and I determined to follow it. In a word, I did my best. And when my uncle came out, I shall never forget his look of approbation as his eyes glanced over my beds, or the fourpence he slipped into my hands afterward, as he said my work was well done. Ah! I was a glad and thankful boy; while poor Robert was left to drudge over his weeds all the afternoon.

"At fifteen I was sent to an academy, where I had partly to earn the money to pay for being taught. The lessons seemed hard at first, for I was not fond of study; but grandfather's advice was my motto, and I tried to do my best. As a consequence of this, though I was small of my age, and not very strong, my mother had three offers of a situation for me before the year was out. When I joined the church, I tried to do the Lord's work as well as I could; and often when I have been tempted to leave the Sabbath-school, or let a hindrance keep me from a prayer-meeting, or get discouraged in any good thing, my grandfather's last words, 'Do the best you can,' have given me fresh courage, and I would try again."

Let every boy and girl take this for their motto. Acted upon, it will do wonders. It will bring out powers which will delight yourselves and friends. "Do your best," or as the Bible says, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—Early Days.

A Mother's Recompense.

How many days of care and nights of watchfulness, my little man, has mother bestowed on you? It's only fair that now you should do a little for her, as she is weak and ill. It's not a great deal in itself, to be sure; you have brought her a cup of tea, and now you are reading to her. But in her eyes it is a great deal; it more than compensates for all she has done for you. It helps to lull her pain and sooth her weariness, and she thanks God for her boy, precious to her beyond all cost of pain or labor and anxiety. Ah, boys, girls, see to it that you are thus a comfort to your parents. They will love you, but above that, let them rejoice in you.—Christian Weekly.

Useful Advice to Boys.—To throw stones. Fold each one carefully in a feather bed, and give good notice to all in the neighborhood when you are going to pitch.

To carry gunpowder in the pocket. Soak it well in cold water, then wrap it up in a cover of oiled silk.

To slide down the banisters. Let a surgeon sit upon the lowest stair. Also carry a pailful of poultice in each of your hands, as you may need it.

To cure creaky boots. Wear them always in going to the cake pantry.

To be polite to sisters. Get their big brother to introduce you to them. —Hearth and Home.

Switched Off.

"Yes, mother, I know; but then you see my good feelings only last a moment."

So said my boy to me last evening, in answer to my appeal.

"I know it, Henry," said I; "but how long does it take to switch off a locomotive on the wrong track? Once started on the wrong track, no matter how smoothly and swiftly it may run, it is running to destruction. On the other hand, a moment only, and the switch-tender will have put the locomotive on the right track, and the cars will go on safely.

"So with the heart. It takes only a moment to pray sincerely, 'Lord, save me.' It takes only a moment to say from the heart, 'Lord, give me thy Holy Spirit; make me thy child; do not leave me; let me not leave thee.'"

"On the other hand, it takes but a moment to say, 'Pshaw! what's the use? I don't care!' It takes only a moment to say, 'I'm not going to be laughed at for being a Christian, I know.' It takes but a moment to drive the Spirit of God away, by simply diverting the mind, which may be done in many ways.

"And so the soul may be switched on to the right track or on the wrong track in a moment of time, and either run safely to the end of life, by God's grace, or run swiftly and surely to destruction."

A thought worth remembering from Dr. Johnson:

"Pride is a vice, which pride itself inclines every man to find in others, and to overlook in himself."

Religious Intelligence.

—At a single session of the Chautauqua Lake Assembly 178 clergymen of different denominations were present, together with 125 superintendents and nearly 2,000 teachers, besides as many more scholars and lookers on.

—The most marked features of the mission work among the Kaffirs at the present time is the progress made in the higher schools. Toward the foundation of a high school the heathen tribe of Fingoe have recently contributed nearly $7,500.

—Monastir is a city in European Turkey, whence a resident missionary writes that he recently noticed in one of the warehouses, a number of barrels of rum, from Boston. He says that America sends to foreign ports considerably more liquor than gospel.

—The annual conference of the English Methodist church met in July in West Cornwall. Rev. Mr. Punshon presided and six hundred ministers were present. The denomination contributed in England about $100,000 per month last year for the erection of chapels, school-houses and parsonages.

—Bishop Miles, Senior bishop of the colored Methodist church of America and generally considered its ablest representative, preached lately in Mr. Settle's church, Louisville. This is the first instance in that city where a colored man has preached in a white man's church to a white congregation.

—Henry Martyn once said: "Truly, if I ever see a Hindu a real believer in Jesus I shall see something more nearly approaching to the resurection of a body than anything I have yet seen." Now there are more than 200 persons laboring in native congregations in India, and a considerable number of them are converted Brahmins.

—An English missionary in Japan writes encouragingly of the work of Christianizing that interesting country. He says: "I am glad to say there is now in Japan a living—I think thriveing—native church, which fairly represents all classes, and not least those whose education will enable them to form acalm and unbiased opinion as to the claims of religion."

—The Young Men's Christian Association of Illinois chose, at its late meeting, an evangelizing committee of eight, who are engaged in a ninety days' campaign of three days meetings to commence Sep. 21. Thirty places have been visited to secure the necessary co-operation and arrange for meetings. Everywhere the plan is meeting the most hopeful encouragement.

—It is illustrative of the degrading powers of Romanism that in Spain, where there are 16,000,000 of population, 12,000,000 are unable to read or write. This fact also furnishes a poor ground of hope for the prosperity of a republic in that unhappy land. It however calls loudly for the most earnest endeavors of Protestant Christianity for the evangelization of the people.

—The Central Ohio Wesleyan Conference, held in August at East Orange, Delaware county, was a strong and harmonious meeting. An increase of some 200 members was reported for the year, and every charge but one is supplied with a pastor. Rev. A. Crooks, the agent of the denomination was present, also D. P. Rathbun, the well known anti-lodge lecturer. Bro. R. spoke to a crowded audience on the evening of the 22d ult.

—The Presbyterians have about 100 churches among the freedmen at the South. A writer says of them: "Better organized, more orderly, and more interesting churches I have seldom seen. The eldership are prompt in their duties, and the deacons take entire charge of the temporalities. Usually they have Sabbath-schools, embracing old and young, as all set their hearts on learning to read the Bible. They observe regular church prayer-meetings and other weekly gatherings.

—Pres. Wallace, of Monmouth College, has written a letter to college students in the last United Presbyterian full of sterling advice, reminding of the excellent works of John Todd, and Dr. Samuel Miller. He says: "Be a consistent Christian, an earnest Christstian, an active Christian. Take your place in the Sabbath-school at once. If you are not needed as a teacher, enter a Bible class, and make all you can out of it. You will find many earnest Christian men at college. Become intimate with them. You may get much good from them. In all respects, study to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ.

—Burmah is chiefly indebted to the American Baptist church for its present advanced stage of evangelization, and the missionaries recently held a five days convention. The proceedings were conducted in Burman, Karen and English. There was an attendance of 137 delegates. Among the reports, it was stated that missionaries, in their travels among the Gaychos, found a chapel in nearly every village, built in the expectation of the appearance of a supernatural prince. The people heard the Gosqel gladly, and changed their chapels from temples for superstitious uses to places for Christian worship. The Baptists now have in Burmah 375 churches, 19,307 members, and 476 teachers.

News of the Week.

The City.

The Inter-State Industrial Exposition opened yesterday evening with better prospects than last year, successful as it was then. Besides the enlargement of the main buildings the Art hall has been greatly enlarged and will contain a large and costly display. The facilities for exhibiting machinery and agricultural implements are also increased greatly. Most of the railroads entering Chicago sell excursion tickets during the Exposition.——Two police officers were practicing with their revolvers in the north-western part of the city last week when a bullet fired by one of them struck an old lady standing in the door of a saloon 600 yards away. She died in fifteen minutes. ——The grand jury of Cook County has been investigating the alleged corruption in the county Commissioners in this city. Their conclusion is that there has been undoubted corruption, but there has been so much false swearing all around that they are unable to find a bill. This business is odorous of the lodge and plainly shows the need of a purging of our civil and judicial offices.

Country.

The vote on the Ohio Constitution was very light, being but 361,480; while 526,426 votes were polled at the last Presidential election. The constitution was defeated by the overwhelming majority of 147,285, the majority against the anti-license clause being 7,286. Ohio may be set down as a temperance State.——A test case being brought up in Harrisburg, Pa., last week by the Sunday Leagues, it was decided by Judge Pierson that the transgressors of Sunday laws can be fined for each and every sale of cigars or merchandise on Sunday.——Last Thursday a locomotive and car ran from Clinton, Iowa, on the Chicago and North-western road to Chicago, a distance of 138 miles, in 153 minutes, or 142 minutes allowing for stoppages. ——The Steamship City of Peking, built at Chester, Pa. for the Pacific Mail Company has been visiting the Atlantic seaboard cities on a trial trip with almost an ovation. She is one of the largest vessels afloat and is a credit to American builders; but the effort to get a subsidy from Congress by her owners last winter was anything but creditable.

The South.

The fearful tradegy at Coushatta, near Shreveport, La., has stirred the whole country. The particulars are as follows:

On Saturday, August 29, H. K. Twitchell, Deputy Postmaster; W. F. Howell, U. S. Commissioner at Coushatta, La.; Robert A. Dewees, State Supervisor of Registration of Desota Parish; Frank Edgerton, Sheriff; N. C. Willis, Justice of the Peace, and Clark Holland, Supervisor of Registration of the Red River Parish, were visited by regularly organized and armed White Leaguers from surrounding parishes at Coushatta, the capital of Red River Parish, who demanded that they should resign their offices. They refused. Shortly after the White Leaguers returned, reinforced and demanded their surrender. They surrendered in order to save their women and children from the horrors of a bloody fight, but this was not done until they had been assured by the White Leaguers that they would be protected from further personal violence, and that the women and children would not be molested. They were then made prisoners, together with seven colored men, and placed in the parish jail, where they were guarded by the White Leaguers. On Sunday, the 30th, they were sent under a guard of their own chosing to Shreveport, but were overtaken and murdered on the way. Four were Northern men. Gov. Kellogg has offered a reward for the arrest of the murderers and the authorities at Washington have been informed of the affair. Other numerous outrages in Alabama and elsewhere are also having the attention of the Attorney General.

Foreign.

Charles Perkins, formerly United States consul at Lisbon, has been arrested in Paris on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses.——The French government has suspended a prominent Parisian journal for two months for an article against President Serrano of Spain.——Jules Simon, in a speech on Monday urged the dissolution of the French National Assembly. His declaration that there were but two parties in France, Republican and Bonapartists, is probably a challenge to the Monarchists to show their force.——The steamer Faraday is now crossing the ocean with another cable—the direct line between Ireland and America.——It is reported that the Arabian ports on the Red Sea are infected with the plague.

To all Seceding Masons.

By vote of the National Christian Association, all seceding Masons are requested to send their names to the Recording Sec'y. with their endorsement of Bernard's Light on Masonry, post-office address, number of degrees taken, number of years connected with the lodge, the date of leaving it and where residing when they joined.

Home and Health Hints.

A Simple Ornament.

A very pretty mantle-piece ornament may be obtained by suspending an acorn, by a piece of thread tied around it, within half an inch of the surface of some water contained in a vase, tumbler, or saucer, and allowing it to remain undisturbed for several weeks. It will soon burst open, and small roots will seek the water; a straight and tapering stem, with beautiful glossy green leaves, will shoot upward and present a very pleasing appearance. Chestnut trees may be grown in this manner; but their leaves are not as beautiful as those of the oak. The water should be changed once a month, taking care to supply water of the same warmth; bits of charcoal added to it will prevent the water from souring. If the little leaves turn yellow add one drop of ammonia into the utensil which holds the water, and they will renew their luxuriance.

Patterns.—A stamp inclosed to any pattern-selling house in New York city will secure in return an illustrated catalogue containing every description of garment worn by women and children, also shirts, drawers, and dressing-gowns for men. From this one can select the patterns she wishes, the prices and numbers of which are given in the catalogue. The chief dealers in patterns in New York are Butterick & Co. Harper's Bazar, Madame Demorest, Domestic Sewing Machine Company, and Burdette Smith. Public favor seems about equally divided between them. There is no need now of puzzling over a dress or any other garment to make it fit. The directions on each pattern, if followed by a person of taste and judgement, insure fair and often delightful success. N. Y. Tribune.

Why Ears Should Not be Boxed.—In Physiology for Practical Use (D. Appleton & Co.) we find the following: "There are several things very commonly done which are extremely injurious to the ear, and ought to be avoided. . . . . And first, children's ears ought never to be boxed. We have seen that the passage of the ear is closed by a thin membrane, especially that adapted to be influenced by every impulse of the air, and with nothing but the air to support it internally. What, then, can be more likely to injure the membrane than a sudden and forcible compression of the air in front of it? If any one designed to break or overstretch the membrane, he could scarcely devise a more efficient means than to bring the hand suddenly and forcibly down upon the passage of the ear, thus driving the air violently before it, with no possibility for its escape but by the membrane giving way. Many children are made deaf by boxes on the ear in this way."

—A correspondent in the Journal of Pharmacy says: "Having noticed mice in our seed barrels, I bethought me how I might trap the little intruders. I thought of saturating a piece of cotton with chloroform and throwing it in, then closing the lid. On raising it again in a few minutes, I would find that life had almost if not quite departed. Having on one occasion left the barrel, on again returning I found three mice with their heads in close contact with it and dead. In the evening I saturated another piece and placed it in the barrel, and, on opening it the next morning, to my surprise I found nine dead mice."

TO MAKE WALL PAPER STICK.—Make a paste of flour same as you do for starch—do not let it boil. When cold apply to the paper with a brush, not having it so thick but that it will spread evenly over the surface, or so thin as to wet the paper through. Cheap paper is not so cheap at least as a little better paper.

—The whole science of hygiene may be included in the one word CLEANLINESS. The removal of refuse of all kinds, solid, liquid, and gaseous, is embraced within it, and pure air and water becomes a necessary result of the operation. It is a trite saying, "Nature abhors a vacuum," or, more correctly, it may be said, Nature always supplies superfluous dust, we admit air and generally far purer air, and water, to take their places.—Sanitarian for September.

Wet the spots of iron-rust on muslin or white dress-goods thoroughly with lemon juice, then lay in the hot sun to dry. Repeat the same if the color is not removed by one application. When dry, rinse in clear, cold water. Lemon juice cannot be used on colored goods, as it will take out printed colors as well as stains. It will remove all kinds of stains from white goods.

To Keep Butter.

Mix two large spoonfuls of salt, two of saltpeter, and two of pulverized white sugar into twelve pounds of butter; put the butter in a large stone jar with a stone cover; fill the jar two-thirds full of butter, then put a piece of cloth on the top and fill up the jar with salt. It should not be opened until winter.

Another method is to take one pound of white powdered sugar, two ounces of saltpeter, one pound of salt, and six quarts of water; scald and skim the mixture. When very cold, pour it on the butter.

Farm and Garden.

TO CURE A RUNAWAY HORSE.—A correspondent of the Prairie Farmer tells "how he cured a runaway horse," on which all previous prescriptions had been tried in vain. At last he observed the fiery, untamed steed never gave him any trouble at night, particularly if it was quite dark. On this hint he acted. He made a hood of leather and attached it to the head-stall in such a way that by pulling a cord the hood came down and completely cut off his view. Adjusting this appliance, he drove to a favorite place and let him have his will. In a few moments he was under full sail, then the cord was pulled and the hood fell. Mr. Horse could see nothing, began to slacken of his own accord, and finally stopped stock-still. The hood was lifted, he began his pranks again, and again the blinder covered his eyes. He was guided against a cart standing in the road, which hurt him some. In a little while she could not be whipped into a run, and was completely cured of this bad habit.

WHY POTATOES RUN OUT.—A New York farmer asks why it is that potatoes so soon run out. There are two grand reasons. There are but few potatoes in a hill that are fit for seed. Some are overgrown, coarse, rank, and will not transmit the original quality. Others are undergrown, and not full developed seed. A potatoe of medium size, perfect in all its parts, with change of ground, will produce its like ad infinitum. One other reason—cutting potatoes between stem and seed end continually is wrong. It requires the stem and seed end to make to make perfect seed. If cut, cut lengthwise. Single eyes will run out any patato. There is no other seed that will bear mutulation like the potatoe; the only wonder is, that it does not ran out completely.

If an edge tool is so hard as to crumble, grind it on a dry stone until edge turns blue. It will then cease to break, and the temper will generally prove to be about right. Scythes and axes are sometimes too hard at the edge, but if treated in this way will give no further trouble.

FEEDING MEAL TO COWS IN THE FALL.—One of the best farmers in the town of Canterbury has a habit of commencing to feed his cows with corn meal as soon as grass begins to get short in the fall. He gives them at the beginning about two quarts each a day, and increase it to three as the food in the fields grows less.

Facts and Figures.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS held a position under the government during every admistration from that of Washington to that of Polk—during which he died. He had been minister to England, member of both houses of Congress. Secretary of State, and President of the United States. He died while a member of the House of Representatives.

"For Sale.—The presentation to the church-living of——. The incumbent is over 80, and very feeble. Apply to," etc.

Such are the ingenuous advertisements of the dealers in English church-livings. There are 13,000 of these, and 7,900 are said to be in the market. The trade in them is open and unblushing, and is partly conducted by clergymen. As England has abolished the custom of selling military offices for ready money, it is urged that her next step should be to stop the scandalous sale of ecclesiastical offices. To do this, congregations must be given the right to choose their own ministers. But this would be only a preliminary to the disestablishment of the church.

—A GERMAN statistician gives the following dates as the periods in which certain usages were adopted in the Roman Catholic church: Holy water was introduced in A. D. 120, and penances instituted in 157. In 348 monks came into fashion, followed in 391 by the Latin mass, and in 550 by extreme unction. Purgatory was introduced in 593, and in 715 came the invocation of the Virgin Mary and the saints. Kissing the Pope's toe was instituted in 809, and 993 saints were first canonized. Bells were rung in 1000, and ten years later priestly celibacy was ordained. Four years afterward indulgences were proposed and dispensations granted in 1200, the elevation of the host dating from the same year. The Inquisition was established in 1204, and confessions in 1215. Then came the Immaculate Conception in 1860, and that of Infallibility in 1870.

According to a correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer, who fully investigated the subject, the average receipts of the New York dailies for advertising amount annually to $8,908-000. Of this sum the Herald receives upward of $2,000,000, or about $6,-000 a day, the Staats Zeitung $1,825-000, the Times $1,460,000 and so on down to some of the more obscure sheets, none of which receive less than $100,000. The weekly papers take nearly half a million annually as their share of the advertising patronage, and perhaps fully $5,000,000 is spent in posters, circulars, steamboat and street-car advertising, etc. The writer also shows whence this immense revenue comes, and quotes the following figures from the ledgers of some of the leading business firms: A. T. Stewart, for instance, is said to spend $500,000 a year for printers' ink; Lord & Taylor, $225,000: Arnold & Constable, $175,000: Robert Bonner, $200,000: Babbitt, the soap man, $225,000; while Barnum pays out every year about $400,000, and all have made their fortunes largely through this instrumentality.

ODD FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1874, by Ezra A. Cook & Co., with the Librarian of Congress Washington, D. C.

GOLDEN RULE DEGREE CONTINUED.

A. by Junior Warden.—A brother Patriarch who wishes to be instructed in the Golden Rule.

Sentinel: Is his mind open to the reception of truth, and is he prepared to receive and practice the high duties of this sublime degree?

A.—He has hitherto proved himself a faithful and true man, and I have no doubt he is worthy of further confidence.

Sentinel: Then let him enter.

[The candidate is then led into the room which is dimly lighted and the bandage is removed from his eyes.]

Junior Warden to Candidate: You see around you representatives of the different nations of the earth, with all their conflicting interests, feelings and prejudices. Here is the European, in whose land civilization and the arts have longest flourished and Christianity is universally recognized. And there the Asiatic, representing the ancient country of Adam and Noah and Abraham, now overrun by semi-barbarous nations, with people as diverse in faith as manners and complexion. In yon dark Nubian you behold the representative of those who dwell upon the burning sands of the Equator, and dance to the music of a reed beneath the spreading palm, while near him is the rude Laplander, who, far at the frigid North, drives over drifting snows with his reindeer and sledge. Here is the enlightened and polished man dressed in costly raiment who moves in the midst of all the blandishments of art and science. And there is the unlettered child of the forest who roams the wilderness, chases the fleet deer and hunts the panther and the bear with his quiver and bow. In that ancient relic you behold an emblem of Judaism. Here is the cross, the symbol of the Christian, and there the crescent, the badge of the followers of Mahomet. And these have been and many of them still are ready to immolate the man of another nation or creed upon the altar of their own peculiar faith.

Amid such a group, have you the fortitude to speak out truly and avow what you are?

A.—I have.

Junior Warden: Then, of what nation are you?

A.—[French, German, Spanish, or whatever nation he may belong to].

Junior Warden: And of what faith?

A.—[Jew, Christian, or Mohamedan, as the fact may be].

[An uproar ensues with the exclamations of: Heretic! Seize him! Bind him! Cast him into prison! Give him to the sword! Traitor! etc., during which the candidate is seized and bound.]

Chief Patriarch: (Giving three loud raps) silence! What means this uproar?

A. by Junior Warden.—A stranger has found his way hither who confesses that he is a (Frenchman, if he is) and a (Christian, if he is) and they have seized and bound him.

Chief Patriarch: Have the Patriarchs forgotten that Golden Rule which teaches that "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them?" Quickly bring hither the stranger.

[The candidate is presented to the "chair" bound in chains.]

Chief Patriarch: Remove those chains which have been imposed by the intolerance of man and let our brother feel that a code obtains here which tramples on human prejudices and asserts the high birthright of humanity.

Chief Patriarch to Candidate: My friend, be always just and fear not. You have not hesitated when occasion demanded, though surrounded with danger, to avow your principles. This is the solemn duty of every honest man. The authority of conscience should at all times be respected, and as it determines, so should we act in all the relations of life. But here more especially we endeavor to inculcate a just observance of those high moral affections and duties for the enforcement of which society can enact no code. Here no artificial distinctions of nations, sect or tribe are recognized. All stand upon one common level and are alike entitled to that consideration and regard which each claims for himself. The rule by which we walk is founded upon the immutable truth that all men are brethren. From one common source the existence of all is derived, and we are bound to each other by common ties. A nerve of the same life runs through all the race, and gives to each an interest in the welfare of all that live. Recognizing as we do this bond of union, the evils that afflict our brother man become in a measure our own. His misfortunes are our misfortunes and his sufferings do but increase the pains that shoot through our systems and render life so feverish and fitful. If we smite him we smite a member of our own body. And if we strike for his blood our flesh shall feel the wound. From all this vast brotherhood we claim sympathy in distress, truth in intercourse and full and free toleration. As we claim these for ourselves, and yield them up at the mandates of none, so are we bound freely and fully to accord them to others. Friend, do you acknowledge the truths of the great principles we have recited, and are you willing to enter into solemn obligations with us to make them the rule of your life?

A.—I am.

Chief Patriarch: Go then to the chair of our Most Excellent High Priest; listen attentively to his instructions and receive the solemn obligations of this degree.

[The candidate is conducted to the High Priest who reads the following:]

PARABLE AGAINST PERSECUTION.

Aram was sitting at the door of his tent, under the shade of his fig-tree, when it came to pass that a man, stricken with years, bearing a staff in his hand, journeyed that way. And it was noon-day. And Aram said unto the stranger, "Pass not by, I pray thee, but come in, and wash thy feet and tarry here until the evening; for thou art stricken with years, and the heat overcometh thee."

And the stranger left his staff at the door, and entered into the tent of Aram. And he rested himself. And Aram set before him bread and cakes of fine meal, baked upon the hearth. And Aram blessed the bread, calling upon the name of the Lord. But the stranger did eat, and refused to pray unto the Most High, saying, "Thy Lord is not the God of my fathers, why, therefore, should I present my vows unto him?" And Aram's wrath was kindled, and he called his servants, and they beat the stranger, and drove him into the wilderness.

Now in the evening Aram lifted up his voice unto the Lord, and prayed unto him. And the Lord said, "Aram, where is the stranger that sojourned this day with thee?" And Aram answered and said, "Behold, O Lord, he ate of thy bread, and would not offer unto thee his prayers and thanksgivings. Therefore did I chastise him and drive him from before me into the wilderness."

And the Lord said unto Aram, "Who hath made thee a judge between me and him? Have not I not borne with thine iniquities, and winked at thy backsliding; and shalt thou be severe with thy brother, to mark his errors and to punish his perverseness? Arise, and follow the stranger, and carry with thee oil and wine, and anoint his bruises, and speak kindly unto him. For I, the Lord thy God, am a jealous God, and judgment belongeth unto me. Vain is thine oblation of thanksgiving without a lowly heart. As a bulrush thou mayest bow down thy head, and lift up thy voice like a trumpet; but thou obeyest not the ordinance of thy God if thy worship be for strife and debate. Behold the sacrifice that I have chosen. Is it not to undo the heavy burdens, to let the oppressed go free, and to break every yoke? to deal thy bread to the hungry, and to bring the poor that are cast out to thy house?"

And Aram trembled before the presence of God. And he arose, and put on sackcloth and ashes, and went out into the wilderness to do as the Lord had commanded him.

Brother, you will now place yourself in the attitude in which you were initiated into this order and repeat after me the following:

OBLIGATION, GOLDEN RULE DEGREE.

I, ————, do sincerely and solemnly promise that I will never reveal the secrets of the Degree of the Golden Rule, to any one not legally athorized to receive them. And I do further promise, on my sacred honor, that I will truly endeavor to practice the principles of this degree.

[The Patriarchs being seated, the candidate is now instructed in the Enter Sign, Pass Word and Explanation, Check Sign, Sign ,Grip, Emblems and Significations.]

Enter Sign.—Three raps on inside door.

Sign Golden Rule Degree.

Check Word.—Same as Patriarchal Degree Given at the door.

Pass Word.—A. M.

Explanation.—Gold a metal.

Token.—Pure Gold.

Check Sign.—Same as Patriarchal Degree.

Sign.—First Position.—Close all but index finger of right hand and extend thumb along this finger. Bring forearm and hand straight forward and raise to an angle of forty-five degrees, finger pointing upward.

Second Position.—Bring hand and arm down to an angle of forty-five degrees, index finger pointing downward.

Grip, First Position.—Bring right hands together, palms down, and lock little fingers.

Grip Second Position.—Bring back of hands together and lock index fingers.

Grip, Third Position.—Unlock little fingers, each placing ball of thumb on nail of the other's index finger, keeping index fingers locked.

The Emblems of the Golden Rule Degree are the Tablets of Stone and the Cross and Crescent.

High Priest: Junior Warden, you will proceed in the duties of your office.

[The candidate is again blindfolded and conducted slowly around the room, during which the Patriarchs lay aside their disguise and the room is brilliantly lighted, when the candidate is conducted to the chair of the Chief Patriarch.]

Junior Warden: Worthy Chief Patriarch, I present our brother to you for further instruction.

Chief Patriarch: You will please first restore him to light. (Blindfold is taken off.)

Chief Patriarch to Candidate: Brother, look around you, behold the change a few moments have wrought! Emblematic of that change which shall occur when the golden rule shall have asserted its power and obtained its dominion over the world. The high and impassible barriers that separated man from his fellow man are broken down. All have thrown their badges aside and sit together as brothers, in harmony and love. The decendents of Abraham and the followers of the Crescent, are commingled with those of the Cross, as one happy family knowing no diversity of faith or creed and a calm repose has come upon the elements of strife. The spear of the warrior is broken and the sword of the conqueror lies rusting in its scabbard, and discord and contention shall be known no more.

That the book is one of great interest and value is shown by the following

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samnel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issned by him, purporting to give a full and accurate acconnt, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volnme written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curions and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The anthor opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they pnrport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed hy many to be, in its obligations, the author of this hook must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acqnainted with Mr. Greene, and have no donbt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighhor in Batavia, N. Y.,, and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abdnction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What beeame of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actnally Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abdncted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS. in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

TRACT NO. 21:

MASONIC CHASTITY.

BY EMMA A. WALLACE,

The author, by wonderfully clear illustration and argument, shows the terribly corrupt nature of Freemasonry. No true woman who reads this will ever speak with approbation of this institution A 4-page tract 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

GERMAN CYNOSURE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason

By REV. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church,

WORCESTER, MASS.

This is our first German tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT

TO THE YOUNG MEN OE AMERICA. Postage, 3 cents per 100 Tracts. Tracts Free.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES,

Are intended for those who wish to give their commission to subscribers.

Subscriptions may all be sent at one time, or at different times, and in all cases the sender should keep an account of the names and amounts sent.

CLUB RATES.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Note if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

THE FALL CAMPAIGN in the Publisher's Department opens very quietly. Is it the oppressive calm which precedes a glorious refreshing; a pouring in of letters containing subscriptions which will fill up every yawning crevice made by the numerous discontinuances of three months' subscribers during the hot summer days just over? Let our agents (we wish every honest friend of the cause was a Cynosure agent) answer, by sending in letters weighty, on account of valuable post-office orders and large with long lists of Cynosure subscribers.

We hope that you will go to this work boldly and continue in it courageously, perseveringly and patiently.

Are you willing to allow the Cynosure with its precious truths to continue to have a list of less than five thousand subscribers without putting forth your best efforts to make the number larger? The cause to which it is devoted, together with the value of the paper itself, seem enough to inspire any one to the work who desires a pure Christianity and a government acting on the principle that all men are created free and equal. This opposition to secret societies which in its last analysis is but a struggle for the redemption of our souls (and the souls of our children) through Christ and the preservation of our individual liberties and equal rights with our neighbors; this opposition, we say, seems to us, enough to make every person who reads these words an agent for the Christian Cynosure. But that there may be the greatest possible incentive for our friends to put long, strong strokes into this work the Cynosure cash-book adds its mite.

All through the spring and summer the out go has been greater than the income with many of our subscribers; and now they receive a bountiful harvest as the reward of their energy, wisdom and faith. Thus with the Cynosure up to September first, its expenses have exceeded the receipts by $921.71. As the fall opens we begin to look to God, the giver of all blessings, for a harvest. We trust that he will establish our work and encourage our faith.

The payment of this debt together with bills which every day brings in, would be a heavy load for a few friends to carry. But, as an agent writes, "The drops make the bucket full" so a reasonable amount of help from our many readers will cancel it with little apparent effort. HOW MUCH WILL YOU DO TOWARDS GETTING SUBSCRIPTIONS?

One of our subscribers gave his son $1,500 to start in business with. The son knew not the treachery of Freemasonry, and because of this ignorance lost his money. His father feeling that he should have instructed his boy on this subject, now gives him a thousand dollars more. Prevention is cheaper than cure. Give the children instruction on the evils of secret societies.

If you have conscientious boys and girls going to schools which allow secret societies give them a copy of the pamphlet on that subject, but especially furnish it for teachers of the young.

—The huge proportions of the lumber trade of this country may be seen from the following figures which are on the authority of Mr. Dodge, of New York, an extensive lumber dealer. The lumber sold annually in New York amounts to about 200,000,000 feet, and 5,000,000,000 feet in and west of Chicago and in the entire valley of the Mississippi. There are 1,000,000.000 to 1,200,000,000 feet sold annually in Chicago alone. The bulk of the lumber comes from Michigan, Canada, and Maine. The pine altogether form Michigan and Canada, and the spruce and hemlock from northern New York and Maine. The total annual crop in Michigan being about 2,000,000,000 feet, and in Canada about half that amount, of which 600,000,000 feet comes to the United States, while the rest goes to Europe in the shape of deals. Very considerable amounts of lumber are sawed at points widely separated from each other. Williamsport, Pa., annually manufactures 250,000,000 feet, chiefly for consumption in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and New Jersey. Bangor, Me., alone manufactures 200,000,000 feet, and 50,000,000 feet of spruce timber is annually cut in Nova Scotia, and for the most part shipped direct to the Southern States and countries. The general plan pursued everywhere, however, is this: The logs are cut during the winter months by an army of men who invade the primitive forests for that purpose. They then haul them to some neighboring stream, where they leave them in such manner that the high waters of the early spring shall float them down to the mills situated below, upon these streams, where they are sawed and shipped by vessels or barges across the lakes, and then by barges from various distributing points in all directions.

Topics of the Time.

ARE WE AMERICANS?—In a late meeting of the Chicago Council two architects were elected to supervise the construction of the city officers in connection with the county Court-house. A German and an Irishman were elected. Neither of them had the best reputation as architects, nor qualification for the office save that one was an Irishman and another from the land of lager. The Council that elected them was chosen in the same manner. The party opposed to the American Sabbath and American temperance laws got together and nominated a ticket half German and half Irish. There seems to be throughout the whole country an endeavor on the part of Germans to turn this country into an outlying province of the German empire. Unless the Americans will allow them to drink their beer and carouse on the Sabbath they will turn Hessians, and, after the manner of their illustrious ancestors, whip the Yankees at Trenton. This may be done; the American institutions which have cost so much of labor and blood may be overturned by the ignorant and debased part of our population which now increases at so fearful a pace. One thing is sure, however, if our country is converted from Puritan principles it will be converted from Puritan practices. When these public-spirited men have transformed us into a nation of beer-guzzlers, we will have a standing army into which they can be drafted. The men will earn two or three dollars a week as they do in Germany and England, and we shall settle down into the same national course that obtains in Europe, where the people, free from tyrannical Sabbath laws, are permitted to choose between being shot down to please their kings or emigrating to Puritanical America.

NATIONAL HONOR.—Some weeks since we alluded in these columns to the injustice and wickedness of Custer's expedition to the Black Hills. We have another example now at hand. A parcel of Indians were hunting on their own lands near the Kansas border. They were invited across the line by Kansas men, and when they complied with the invitation five of them were shot down like dogs. No white man was punished or will be for the murder, but Gov. Osborne sent to the Secretary of War asking for two thousand guns and cartridges enough to kill some more Indians. So in San Francisco and the western coast, generally, when a lot of debased men choose to stone a Chinaman to death, the authorities look on and no one is punished. What do these things show? They certainly ought not to make us proud. They seem to indicate that the only principles which the United States respect are rifled guns and fixed ammunition. All this comes of our neglect to recognize and abide by the law of God. Were we only just we should have no difficulties with Indians, and Chinamen would have no difficulties with us. But Indians and Chinamen are weak, and as we are heathens instead of Christians, we oppress and defraud instead of protecting them. Then come national taxes for the people and contracts for the ring. The Chicago Tribune seems greatly exercised over Mr. Podsnap, and the Advance had lately an article on the same gentleman connected with the unsearchable judgments of God. These individuals protest against any interpretation of present providences. They want no connecting inferences drawn between Indian speculators and grasshoppers, or Southern outrages and floods. Had they been in Egypt during the olden time they would have stood by while God was sweeping the land bare, and at every proposition to let Israel go would have cried out with these modern friends of Mr. Podsnap, "God's ways are past finding out, so we can't know whether he has anything to do with this matter or not. To your brick-kilns, O Hebrews." We believe that the heathen Pharoah had better sense and a fuller comprehension of the case than these gentlemen. God has declared that the nation or kingdom that will not serve him shall perish. Or, to put this in other words, the nation that has no honor shall be wiped out. We as a government have little, if any, and the sooner we endeavor to get upon solid ground the better. We are not safe as we are.

SABBATH LAWS.—A mass meeting was held in the Military Park, Newark, on Sabbath, September 6th, to protest against the Sabbath laws. Four thousand people were present. The chairman greeted the audience as composed of those who were struggling for freedom and against despotism. He said that the Germans had come to this country assured by the Constitution that perfect religious liberty was guaranteed to all. He declared that in the State and municipal laws they found impediments to the free exercise of their religious views; that these regulations were the result of a fanatical and obsolete spirit, and that what they wanted was the repeal of those laws which infringed personal liberty and the establishment of Sunday as a people's day. There are only two answers possible to the demand which these gentlemen make. One is: Our Constitution is right, our laws are wrong. You may drive the reaper, run the train, get drunk, swear, and exercise your personal liberty as you like. The other is: Our Constitution is wrong and our laws are right. We are a Christian nation. If you come here you must submit to our laws, and if you don't like our laws you may stay away. We favor this last answer. We would write it in flaming letters that a world might read, and gladly say farewell to every man, woman and child who would leave our land for such a cause. The jails would be comparatively empty. The Ortweins would no longer murder the Hamnets, and we would not soon have another Probst. If now some fool go and say we have called all Germans murderers and jail birds, we cannot help that. An intelligent boy ten years old knows perfectly well that the men who are opposed to our Christian laws are, four-fifths of them, frequenters of rum shops and gin mills, and that nine-tenths of our murderers and thieves are found in such places. There are citizens of foreign birth who pay taxes, obey laws, and add to the moral and intellectual wealth of the country. There are others who come here to enjoy privileges which our fathers bought for blood. They strive to break down our public schools, and our national religious customs. They do this only that they may more closely resemble the swine that trample on pearls to eat swill (drink beer). Their homes are comfortless; their wives toil like oxen before the plow, and their children know the biting shame that covers the drunkard's little ones. The question is this: Shall we be heathen to please this sort of people, or Christians to please the others, and protect ourselves?

A Candid Review of Masonic Principles.

BY A THEOLOGICAL STUDENT.

DEAR BROTHER:—What you urged most when we talked upon the subject was that I ought not to judge of Masonry from the representations of its enemies. Well, a little about this and then a little about Masonry. The friends of Masonry approve of it as a system, and, therefore, say nothing against it. Asking me not to listen to its enemies is asking me to hear only one side. When those who are the friends become the enemies of Masonry I would rather suspect, if they be true and Christian men, that they have some good reason for thus changing than turn away with my fingers in my ears and say, they are its enemies and therefore ought not to be heard. Its enemies are no more likely to be prejudiced or one-sided than its friends. If true and good, there can be more said for than against Masonry, and its friends have the vantage ground; and the more its enemies say against it the more clearly can they be proved to be wrong, and its beauties and excellencies be made to shine forth. In view of the above considerations I maintain that I have taken the only rational and safe course in hearing both sides and forming an opinion based upon the decision of my own judgment. In every other matter you would do likewise. Upon second thought you will not condemn me in this.

Now for Masonry. It was first thrust upon my notice in a neighborhood where I resided. I learned something of it from its friends, and, starting with this, my Bible, reason and sense of manhood, as my stock in trade, I set up in a private way as an Anti-mason. These were the only "enemies of Masonry" that I consulted. I suppose you fear none of these. Then, first, look at the thing itself. It requires of its members an oath to perpetual secrecy as to what it is. It requires a preference for Masons over all who are not Masons. It claims to be at least very religious, and has prayers that are offered by Christian, Jew, Mohammedan, pagan and deist, alike.

Now let us apply the Bible as a test to it. God has never required, nor authorized man to require us to bind ourselves to anything the nature of which we are not to be first fully acquainted with. Nor does he sanction our committal to anything which, in its consequences, is to be concealed from us until we are committed. This method is founded in reason. Whatever is true is best proven by scrutiny. All good is best recommended by being shown. Hence, "He that doeth truth cometh to the light." Masonry, like Satan, takes the opposite method and relies for success upon the darkness of concealment. It requires an oath of its candidates upon the assurance that no wrong is meant, all is right. He accepts its assurance in lieu of his own judgment, and, after he is pledged, discovers to what he is pledged. He commits himself to that which thousands, such as Finney, have examined and renounced as evil, and then learns that he is committed in a measure for life—right or wrong, for life. God has nowhere countenanced the principle that underlies such an act. (Lev. v. 4, 5.)

God requires us to renounce that which we see to be an evil. Renunciation implies the duty of exposure. Masonry requires that in no circumstances shall a candidate reveal, but ever conceal, under penalty of death, every "part or parts, art or arts," &c., of the secret good that it professes to be. He may conscientiously and intelligently believe, after a long acquaintance with it, that it is an evil in itself, and dangerous alike to church and state, and that his duty to truth and morality, to his country and his God, require its exposure; but Masonry requires him to observe perpetual silence or share the persecutions of a Rathbun or Finney, if not the grave of a Morgan. In short, it says, "You sware, under penalty of death, that if, after examination, you conclude Masonry to be an evil, you will let it alone." So it forbids what God requires. This device, more than any thing else, has saved the institution from dissolution. Had the thousands now living who have left the order but done their duty to their country and their God, instead of feeling bound by a sense of obligation to Masonic assumptions to stultify their conscience, it would ere this have found its grave, nor have left the world so much of a memorial as an epitaph. Even in our own seminary I found a Master Mason who has quickly and forever left the order. The Masonic oath and the fear of Masonic power have so effectually gagged him that I alone of all his fellow students know the fact. Said he to me, "Were I in the world I might be a Mason. But while I am a Christian I cannot." I have good evidence that there are thousands such. When a few bolder spirits dare to break loose from the restraints that Masonry would assume to impose, they are called its enemies, prejudiced, unworthy of being trusted, men who are laughed at by the order, &c. The mass keep silent in deference to Masonry. The few speak in deference to God. So Masonry lives and men are deceived by the multitude of its boasting and the pomp of its professions.

The basis of Masonic preference differs from the Christian. God requires us to do good, "especially unto them who are of the household of faith." All the provisions of Masonry are for Masons as such, and they, as such, are to be preferred to all others. This preference extends to social acts, moral obligation and religious duty, as may be seen more especially in the oaths of the Master Mason degree. When occasions for preference arise and you are under the necessity of choosing between the Mason who is not a Christian and the Christian who is not a Mason, what are you going to do? Will you prefer each before the other? Or will you disregard Masonry and obey God, or wink at God and obey Masonry? You cannot then serve God and Masonry.

God requires us to return good for evil and to restore a fallen brother in meekness. (Gal. vi. 1.) Contrast the death-penalties, the bloody phraseology, and the actual persecutions of Masonry, that are such a terror to thousands of seceders. In this it is the opposite of Christianity. If the teachings of the latter have blessed the world by developing the nobler elements in man, those of the former being opposite, curse the world by developing the baser elements of his nature.

Masonry claims to be religious. It has its sacerdotal titles and dress; it quotes Scripture and reads prayers. Whose are its priests? Not those of the Christian's God; for they may be Jews who reject the one only Priest of the Christian. Not of God as Jehovah; for they may, as the high Masonic authorities inform us, be either pagans or deists. They are priests to that Masonic myth, the "Supreme Architect of the Universe." Scripture is quoted in the lodge. But it is so carefully culled that Voltaire could endure it and be charmed with Masonry. As for its prayers, they are offered by Jew and Christian, Mohammedan and deist in a mutual fellowship of devotion to the same —myth! It may not occur to you that such acts of worship if not rightly performed are wrongly. If not offered to the true God they are to a false one, or else are a mere aping of worship. If not so as to inspire reverence, they blunt the religious sensibilities. I cannot think of the majority of the men who officiate in the lodges of this State without a shudder of horror. It is a profane burlesquing of all religion. Where, in the whole volume of God's Word can the first word be found that will sanction such things? Now, brother, don't evade this to your conscience by saying that this is an abuse of a good thing. The act itself is impious. There is a religious meeting. A deist prays. A Jew prays. A Mahommedan prays. A pagan prays. And you, my Christian brother, pray. All pray. They have one language, one prayer—one God. Nay, are they praying or mimicing prayer?

After the Bible test I have placed Masonry in the balance of reason and found it wanting. I would not sign a note without reading it. Why the Masonic compact? I would not surrender my own judgment in choosing a wife. Why follow the judgment of others in being wedded to Masonry? I would not invest in patent-rights upon the mere assurance that there was a grand chance of making money. Why in Masonry? I would not sell my right of free speech upon the subject of theaters. Nor for all that Uncle Sam could give me wear a gag of silence upon the subject of rum-selling. Nor upon any terms consent to silence about Freemasonry. But in becoming a Mason a man consents to sell the precious birthright of free-speech and to wear a gag of silence forever upon the subject of Masonic secrets. Why thus consent to make Masonry an exception, to be free upon every subject but this? For my part I can be neither hood-winked nor cable-towed out of the privileges of my citizenship in such a way. I might be told of Masonic influence, of its power for favoritism, of all the nice preferences it can secure one in traveling or in difficulty; but my manhood recoils, and I fling the villainous bribe in its face, satisfied to be a man amongst men rather than be treated as a pet in society by Masonic exclusives. I want nothing but what I can earn by real honest worth; nor can I conceive why others may not do the same unless they feel a lack of worth. You might gain all your rights in society without Masonic help, unless prevented by it. You ought not to want more with it.

If Masonry were merely a business society of some kind, its favors as such would be unobjectionable. But it discriminates in favor of its own in all those things which concern us as citizens and in which we have equal rights. This you know if you have gone to the trouble of examining into its principles or of watching its workings. Many of the favors that it holds forth to tempt, or lavishes to please, are such as I have a right to outside the order. But in many things my rights as a citizen are curtailed because I am not of the order. Thus the rights of the citizen are made a sacrifice to Masonic law. This, you are aware, is a violation of the principles of our government and one of the greatest dangers that can threaten us. In conclusion, Masonry offers facilities for forming monopolies. In the Master Mason's degree favoritism extends further than in that of the Entered Apprentice. The Royal Arch includes and goes beyond the Master Mason's, and is favorable for a more select circle with stronger ties and still more exclusive advantages. And so up to the Knight Templar degrees, each successive step narrowing the numerical circle and widening the range of facilities for taking advantage of society to promote their own exclusive interests. With such machinery, so worked behind a curtain of secrecy, that cannot be lifted but in the presence of a death-penalty, and with such facilities for taking advantage of others, secure against exposure, no body of men can be safely entrusted. It would not be safe to entrust the church with such power, to be used with such secrecy, for its exclusive benefit. Is the order made of more trusty stuff?

The foregoing are some of the considerations that have led me to oppose Masonry. They are such as a reflecting mind is led to do with only a slight knowledge of Masonry. A further acquaintance with its teachings and workings convinces me that its influence in society is pernicious and the dangers it threatens alarming.

The Law of the Romish Church on Secret Societies.

[From the Pilot, June 6.]

The following memorandum on secret societies, which we take from the Catholic Review, will indicate briefly the direction of the thought of the church in condemning such societies:—

The secret societies condemned by the church are those only which adopt and enter into a close, hidden secret organization in order that by means of such secrecy they may the more securely plot against God or the people, that is, against the well-being of legitimate ecclesiastical or civil authority. Thus the decree of the Sacred Congregation (15th August, 1846), referred to by the Prefect of the Sacred Congregation of the Faith (13th of July, 1865), defines that "the secret societies condemned by the church embrace all those which have for objects anything hostile to the church or state, whether they exact or not an oath of secrecy from the members." See Decreta Concil, Baltmore, 1866—paragraphs 511, 518.

The societies thus far authoritatively designated as comdemned are: First, "The Freemasons," by Clement XII., 1830; Benedict XIV., 1751; Pius VII., 1811; Leo XII., 1816; Pius IX., 1865, and on several occasions. Second, The Carbonari of Italy and France by Pius VII. and Leo XII., as above; the Fenians in Ireland—as appears on good authority—1870. Fenians condemned at least in the British Dominions. Besides the aforesaid, the Sacred Congregation (21st of August, 1850) declares that the Odd-fellows and the Sons of Temperance are included in the Pontifical Bulls (see Concil. Balt., as above paragraph 514). With respect, then, to the societies thus named, there can be no controversy among Catholics in the countries at least where they are condemned by name.

Since doubts frequently arise whether or not certain societies, instituted among laboring classes, and having the appearance of secret organizations, come under the ban of the church, to decide on the point with a close approximation to certainty, we must have before our eyes "the chief reasons why secret societies are condemned," as given and defined by Benedict XIV., in his Apostolic constitution "Providas," 1751 (for which see Busenbaum, vol. II. appendix; also Concil. Balt., paragraph 510).

Among the chief reasons, writes the Pontiff, are:

First, In societies of this nature, men of every sect and religion are associated together on equal common footing (invicem consociantur), from which circumstance grievous detriment can accrue to the purity of Catholic religion.

N. B.—Societies of this nature, formed, as they claim to be, on a basis of a "common religion," or a system common to all—which is mere natural philanthrophy—and for this end expressly excluding all dogmatic religion from their assemblies, pratically ignor all difference in religion and thus endorse indifferentism—than which nothing surely can be more hostile to Faith—hence to the Catholic church.

Second, their strict and impervious secrecy excluding all revelation of what occurs in their meetings, and Third, the oath, binding members to such secrecy, that under plea of such oath, they are not to disclose or tell even when interrogated by legitimate authority, anything done in their meetings against religion, the common weal or the laws.

N. B.—Those two conditions render such societies eminently dangerous to civil society. For, as the well-being of civil society rests on the proper administration of justice, where such administration is rendered impossible society is imperiled. Now, justice cannot be administered without full knowledge of the cause in question, and where such secrecy as is maintained by oath-bound organizations is to be met with, knowledge of the cause is impossible, hence the administration of justice is impossible, and hence such oath-bound organizations, though they profess not to plot against church or state—against religion or civi society—are equally dangerous to both. The oath in such a case is moreover contrary to piety, hence hostile to religion.

Futhermore, the same Council of Batimore (1866, paragraph 319) declares, as not to be tolerated, those societies whose members from the beginning—that is to say, beforehand—bind themselves to obey or carry out whatsoever command they may get from their superiors, and in the same paragraph those societies are declared as entirely illicit, which are associated together for mutual defence by a league of such a nature as may imperil the peace of the community by riot or bloodshed.

N. B.—It is evident, indeed, that any organized body of men whatsoever, whose members blindly bind themselves to obey and carry out the behests or commands of their superiors, irrespective of human or divine law, is absolutely condemnable and eminently dangerous to society, while it is equally evident that a society leagued by a bond of mutual defence, to be made in any case, irrespective of right or wrong, and independent of the law which binds and protects the community and independent of the officers of the law, is of its nature entirely illicit, calculated to produce disorder, riot and bloodshed, and hence adverse to the common weal.

Albert Pike on the Scottish Rite.

[The following is from an "Allocution" lately delivered by the Sovereign Grand Commander before the Supreme Council, Southern Jurisdiction, at Washington, D. C. The present state and vast assumptions of this branch of Freemasonry are too plainly stated to need comment.]

The Ancient and accepted Scottish Rite is necessary to the well-being of the world. Its mission is that of a reformer, and it will be true to it and do its work well some day. It is the apostle of truth, justice, right and toleration; and it is the only apostle of all these in the world. And it alone knows the real origin and true interpretation of the ancient symbols of Blue Masonry, and the profound philosophical and religious truths that they conceal; so that its adepts alone know the true meaning and whole value of the first three degrees and the Word of a Master, by which one is enabled to travel into foreign countries and earn Master's wages—the Holy Doctrine of the Ancient Sages. . . . . .

Looking only upon the surface, and judging only by the increase or decrease of initiates and bodies, one would without hesitation pronounce the condition of the Rite unprosperous in this jurisdiction, and if profoundly interested in it, be disheartened. The number of initiates has only here and there increased, and nowhere largely; few new bodies have been formed and many have become dormant or died, and our revenues have been far less than in some former years.

I suppose that of the 33ds in our jurisdiction there is not one in every ten, if there is one in every twenty, who really knows anything about the Rite. Generally they confess it. I am quite sure that not one in twenty has even once read or heard the readings that follow the 32d degree; and four-fifths of our Honorary 32ds are equally unlearned in the Rite, and in knowledge mere apprentices. As it is almost the general rule that when one is rapidly advanced to be a 32d, he shall at once lose all interest in the Rite, and if bodies exists where he lives, never attend them, I am sorry to say it but it is certainly true that in parts of our jurisdiction the Princes of the Royal Secret are the most utterly useless of all the brethren of the Rite. And we have made more than one or two Honorary 33ds who have never been of the least use afterwards, notwithstanding their solemn vows and promises.

These multiplied evils of the old, miserable and unfair system, caused me to resolve that I, at least, would no longer be responsible for its continuance, or a party any longer to the system by which one who was only an Entered Apprentice a few weeks ago, now writes 32d after his name. Degrees should be the reward of merit, knowledge, and faithful service. Thirty-seconds are being made in the United States at such a rate that we shall soon have more—indeed, I think we have more now—than there are in all the world besides. Already there are in single States ten times as many as there are in all the British Isles. For the most part the recipient gets nothing by the degree but the title and the figures. He neither knows more, nor is better, nor any more entitled to respect. The same process of cheapening the 32d is in the full tide of successful experiment; and I am constrained to say that when lavished on so many, no matter where, whether in Brazil or nearer home, it will soon become as little valued, as it is in fact when so squandered as little worth, as the thirty-third degree of the Rite of Memphis are, or the title LL.D. conferred by a country academy.

In the State of Oregon, our illustrious brother Ainsworth wisely began by establishing at first lodges of Perfection only, and Chapters only after a long interval. He has not yet, I think, established any Council of Kadosh. The consequence is that the Rite is in a more truly prosperous and sound condition there than anywhere else in the jurisdiction, except in the District of Columbia; while in Washington Territory, where the degrees were so lavishly given and the higher bodies so injudiciously established by our Special Deputy, the bodies began to languish almost before he turned his back on the Territory, and have been in a most feeble and sickly condition ever since, the brethren and bodies so impoverished by the heavy expenditures required, that I felt constrained to authorize them to delay paying dues to the Supreme Council until it should convene, promising to recommend their remission, which I now do.

The Rite is not yet planted in North Carolina and Florida. It languishes in Louisiana, owing to political troubles, the decay of business, and the impovishment of the people. In Virginia, the Grand Consistory has no subordinates outside of Lynchburg. In Georgia some progress has been made, but not such as we had hoped for. In South Carolina no bodies exist outside of Charleston. In Mississippi, none except at Vicksburg, and they have fallen asleep. From Texas I have heard nothing for two years; from Missouri, nothing for a year and a half; from Kansas nothing for two years. In West Virginia, the Rite is not planted. In Tennessee one body only exists, a Lodge of Perfection at Memphis, though we have four 33ds and a large number of 32ds in that city, most of whom have never displayed the least interest in the Rite. In Kentucky there are no bodies outside of Louisville; In Maryland none outside of Baltimore. In Nebraska, our Deputy, Ill.·. Bro.·. Furnas, was elected Governor of the State, before he had done anything under his commission, and I have lately commissioned Ill.·. Bro.·. William R. Bowen, thirty-second degree, in his stead, whose views in regard to the proper mode of establishing the Rite coincide with mine, and under whose administration I hope for good results. . . . . .

A Rite that desires to live must be for something more than show and ornament. This is a busy and practical age, if men are tickled with sonorous titles that have nothing behind them; with deep and flashy decorations that are no proof of desert and service; with parade and show and pomp and circumstance, and general much ado about nothing. If an order would have a real life, and be something more than a sham and fraud, its degrees must be worth having by a man of intelligence and scholarship, and it must do something to prove its rights to live at all. If its members will neither labor nor organize for labor, nor read, nor study, nor undertake any good work, but only care to write certain cabalistic figures after their names, wear a jewel, and possess a sounding title, then it had better lie quietly down, stretch out its limbs, close its eyes, fold its arms across its bosom, and decently give up its ghost, if any ghost at all it has to part with.

A New Policy.

We think the time has come for a readjustment, in very important matter, of the general policy of the government in which all the dominant parties have acquiesced. We refer to the inducements held out to foreigners to flock to our shores. It is about time that we were getting over the fancy of making our land the asylum for the poor and oppressed of all other lands, and that we should seek to unify and bring into the spirit of our institutions such of them as we already have among us. It is especially time to let them know that they are not brought here to rule us.

In our early history there was need of a rapid increase of our population, and so far as it could be drawn from other countries without endangering the foundations of our government it was to be sought. But we have now grown into a great nation, about as large as can be well governed. Large classes of people have come among us that have yet to be indoctrinated in the essential principles of republicanism; many who have brought with them some of the worst ideas of the old world, and boastfully assail the principles of morality and social order that have been the chief honor and security of the nation. Unless the influence of this class can be brought under restraint, it must ultimately work our ruin. Most of the disorder and dissipation and violence from which the country is now suffering is from this source.

Perhaps the greatest danger with which we are threatened of this kind is from German immigration. It is true, some of our best citizens are from Germany. The earlier accessions from that country were among the best of our people. And many of the same character are still coming. But with them we have an influx of a class that makes up one of the worst and most dangerous elements of our population. Instead of accepting the institutions of the nation that has given them homes, and showing a becoming appreciation of the privileges they are permttied to enjoy among us, they not only scoff at all that is sacred in our institutions and most cherished in our social customs, but boldly demand that they shall all be conformed to the views and habits they have brought in with them. The worst feature of their conduct, and that which makes the necessity of which we write, is the combination in which they act to enforce their demands. There was a remarkable exemplification of this in the demand made by German editors of Indiana upon the Republican Convention that recently met in Indianapolis, making it a condition of their support of the candidates to be nominated, that they should be placed on an anti-temperance platform. In some such way are they everywhere endeavoring to control the politics of the country.

Now is it not time that all the political parties should cease tampering with such men? Is it not time for such a readjustment of the general policy of the nation as will hold out less encouragement for accessions of this kind to our population, and will aim to make good Americans of such as we have? Is it not time to adopt measures to save the country from the danger of being dominated by men who live among us as foreigners still? Is it not time to be looking to the foundations of our institutions, and seeking to preserve them from the overthrow thus threatened?

We do not say that all immigration should be discouraged. If men of other nations come among us with honest acceptance of our institutions and a willingness to coalesce with the distinctive elements of our national life, let them come. They should be welcomed. But we have enough of the kind who would make Sabbath desecrations and drinking carousals the order of the land. If they have not decency enough to respect our Sabbath laws and social customs, they should at least be taught that they are not the dictators of either the morals or politics of the nation.—United Presbyterian.

In keeping an oath that ought to have been broken, Herod beheaded Christianity in the person of a faithful and prominent believer in Christ, John the Baptist. If Christians do not behead the lodge (that is, destroy its life) the lodge will behead the church of Christ.

The youth who goes through the artful dodging, concealing and manipulation of a college secret society is poorly prepared for doing an open, frank and manly part in after life. He is twisted and curled in all his instincts, and is likely to be a wire-puller and shuffler in everything he undertakes.—Ex.

Annual Meeting of the North-east Pa. Association, Nov. 3d, in Free Methodist Hall, Wilkesbarre, Pa. [See the notice for the formation of a State organization at this meeting.]

—The second semi-annual meeting of the Anti-Secrecy Association of Jay county, Ind., will be held in West Chester, Wednesday, Sept. 30th, beginning at 10 A. M.

Indiana State Convention.

After advising with many of the friends of our reform, we have concluded not to call the State Convention to meet before the 28th of October,—one day earlier than last year. This will give us none too much time to get ready. And now let me ask of will you not co-operate with us in trying to make this meeting a complete success? Dr. Charles Jewett, one of the most efficient temperance lecturers of this generation and the past, declares that the slow progress of that reform has been greatly owing to the neglect of proper and thorough organization. So it will be with every reform. If we would succeed we must have a thoroughly organized and paying membership. Without this our cause will languish, and our laborers will suffer. We may profit by studying the tactics of our enemy. His forces are all thoroughly organized; and there is no lack of friends to carry into effect his wily schemes.

We must not so organize as to

BIND AND BURDEN

our membership. But some have already been burdened because we have not sufficient organization. Let us distribute the burden, and thus make each one's portion lighter. This can only be done by making a rule covering all auxiliary organizations, requiring the payment of a fixed amount by each member, to go into the State Treasury. Let me here say, that I cannot ask a competent man to take my place, unless some provision is made for his support. It is not right to starve men in the midst of plenty. Thorough organization with one well paid and efficient agent, will in a short time

REVOLUTIONIZE THE STATE.

"But," you ask, "what can I do? I answer:

1st, See that a delegate is sent from your neighborhood, church, or association.

2d, If you cannot secure the appointment of a delegate, come yourself, and prove your devotion to this good cause.

3d, Come prepared to assist us financially to the extent of your ability.

4th, Come with words of counsel and cheer, and God will bless you and give us a successful meeting.

JOHN T. KIGGINS.

Information and Action Wanted.

From every locality in the State of Pennsylvania where there is a bevy of men openly opposed to secret societies, and who will appoint a delegate to attend our convention at Wilkesbarree, Pa., on the 3d and 4th of November next, with the view of organizing a State Anti-Secret Society.

LET US HEAR by letter to the committee whose names are below or through the Cynosure. Also from every man who will become a volunteer delegate, self appointed, to said meeting.

LET US HEAR, as above stated, and let communities, churches, any organized body, opposed to secret societies, report and appoint immediately, good men, citizens, clergymen, any suitable person, to attend said meeting.

COMMITTEE: — NATHAN CALLENDER, Greene Grove, Luzerne Co. M. D. MCDOUGAL, Wilkesbarre; A. L. POST, Montrose, Pa.

NOTICE.—All persons desiring to consult with the Corresponding Secretary of the N. C. ARE YOU GOING TO CONFERENCE?

At intervals all through the year, ministers in denominations that consider Freemasonry and other secret societies anti-Christian, go to their district, State or General conferences and associations. A large number of such meetings are held this fall. When you go to your conference will you not remember that the cause of opposition to secret societies is suffering for want of funds; and at the conference introduce a resolution recommending the National Christian Association to your churches, for an annual contribution. If your conference is local, perhaps the best thing to do would be to pass a resolution requesting the General Conference to make such recommendation, and give it to the brethren who are sent to the higher body to present there.

If you have all the causes on your list now that you can afford to aid, would it not be well to weigh carefully the relative importance of the objects you are now contributing to, and if you find this one more important make a change? Be sure to take a copy of your Cynosure with you and extend its circulation if you can. When you return home, let us know how you succeeded with the resolution.

Agents Reports.

There have not been put into the Cynosure very regularly, because the General Agent to whom they were sent was necessarily absent a great deal of the time. Arrangements have now been made to have these reports sent to the Corresponding Secretary and the clerk who assists him will see that these reports are carefully filed and the summary published quarterly. If the State agents will be careful to make their reports fully and forward them each month promptly, the friends of the movement can more intelligently sympathize with, and sustain them, in their labors.

We trust they will send in their reports for July, August and September so that they can be made out for the quarter ending Oct. 1st, and published in the Cynosure during that month? Indianians, Ohioans, Illinoians and New Yorkers wish to know the facts about their agents.

From the General Agent—The Indiana Wesleyan Conference.

FAIRMOUNT, Grant Co., Ind.,
Sept. 7, 1874.

DEAR K:—The Wesleyan Methodist Conference has just closed its session at this place. It was a meeting of great unanimity and power. The interest of each meeting was attested by the numerous attendance, and at times every available spot in and about the church was occupied by eager listeners. There were present men of experience and power "with God and men," whose utterances upon this occasion will be remembered long after they are in heaven. Bro. Crooks was here in the prosecution of the interests committed by the church to his hands, and it is enough, perhaps, to say that no man could have done the work better. Whether preaching, making reports, distributing books or soliciting funds, it was Christ and his cause, first and above all He made us forget the "Old Adam" as he held up the "Holy One" before us and plead his cause. Long may he live to defend the truth and bless the church and the world by his fearless irresistible utterances of truth.

To speak of all deserving of record is impossible at present, and I can only add in general that I have seldom if ever met a body of men and women more devoted or thoroughly in earnest, and God witnessed his approval by the conversion of souls. The utterances of this conference against secretism were numerous and decisive, and each brother returned to enter upon his work with new courage and zeal for the Master. J. P. STODDARD.

Western Pennsylvania—From D. S. Caldwell.

LINESVILLE, Crawford Co., Pa.,
Sept. 5, 1874.

BRO. KELLOGG:—I have been somewhat reticent for the past month, nevertheless, I have been more than ordinarily busy. I left home on Monday morning, the 10th of August, just after our Ohio State Convention for this State, to meet a series of appointments arranged by Bro. Stoddard in this (Crawford) county. I arrived at Spartansburg on the evening of the day I left home, just after a terrific hailstorm which swept over that portion of the State, destroying every vestige of the crop that had not been harvested, cutting the corn, potatoes, buckwheat and gardens all to pieces; also ruining the orchards for miles in its wake. This made the people look and feel "blue," and was anything else than a favorable "God send" to lecturers in the interests of anti-secrecy. The storm blew a large tree across the track into which the train ran, between Corry and Spartansburg on the Oil Creek and Allegheny River road, which delayed the train in cutting the tree out of the way, and repairing some slight damages done by the casuality, so that we did not get through in time to fill our first appointment at Oil Creek Chapel (U. B.), but having two appointments at Spartansburg, we gave them but one, and the other at Oil Creek, so as to catch up to the programme as per arrangement.

Since then we have been following the programme as nearly as practicable, and judging from the eagerness with which the people seem to receive our lectures, I am satisfied that good will result from these labors. I have lectured and preached twenty-two times up to the present, and will some eight more before I start for home to attend my conference. We meet in Meadville, the county seat, on Monday, the 7th, to organize the county, and are looking for a general turn out from the various portions of the same. I shall give particulars in a more detailed form, when I get through with this canvass. To-night I lecture in this place (Linesville), and to-morrow will preach for the people. Money seems to be exceedingly tight, hence but little success in the way of finances either for the Cynosure, or in remuneration for lectures. D. S. CALDWELL.

Southern Illinois—From the State Agent.

WEST BELLEVILLE, Ill., Sept. 9, 1874.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—After being some time detained at home by sickness of myself and family, I left on September 1st to visit the south part of the State. My first stop was at El-Paso, where I was kindly entertained by our very earnest friend, Wm. A. Bartlett, a seceding Mason, who is carrying on the war almost alone, against two lodges, one R. A. chapter and one encampment of Knight Templars. I made arrangements to lecture there on the 11th inst., and came on to Normal, where I stopped a few hours and found a few warm friends, but very strong opposing influences.

From there I came to Richview, Washington county, where the cause of pure Christianity has many warm friends. Arrangements were made that I should preach in the Presbyterian church on the following Sabbath, and lecture in the M. E. church on Sunday evening, and in the Presbyterian church Monday evening. A friend kindly took me from there to the vicinity of Nashville, in the same county, where I lectured on Friday and Saturday evenings to audiences which were not large, but deeply interested. I found here quite a number of young people who have engaged heart and hand in this reform. They hold meetings once a month and are accomplishing excellent results. I was rejoiced, too, at the thoroughly Christian spirit in which the work was carried on.

Returning Sabbath morning, I preached in the Presbyterian church to a good and attentive congregation. In the evening at the M. E. church, my subject was "The Relation of Secret Societies to the Christian Religion." The meeting had been well advertised in the morning by an old Masonic minister who expressed his indignation that the church should be used for any such purpose. As a result the large audience room was literally full. The pastor, a Mason, opened the meeting with prayer. The attention was fixed until near the close, when I began to be interrupted by the Masons, who evidently felt that the exposure of the religion which they practiced in the lodge, was very hard to bear. They did not, however, deny anything that I had affirmed. At the conclusion the pastor said that he would not undertake to defend or condemn Masonry. He only complained that his work was seriously interrupted by this discussion, although it did not seem to interrupt the church work when that pulpit had been used to advocate Masonry. A local preacher who is a Mason, was full of wrath and protested against the church being so "desecrated and defiled," but I had the warm sympathy and approval of the mass of the congregation. I do not believe that any Masonic minister will ever be sent to that place, or if one should be sent, it would result in a considerable secession from the M. E. church.

On Monday evening, notwithstanding there were other meetings, and the report had been industriously circulated that no meeting would be held, yet the Presbyterian church was well filled. I spoke an hour and a half, and had fixed attention to the close. I trust a lasting impression was made.

Leaving Richview at three A. M. Tuesday, I came by carriage to Ashley and by rail to Belleville, in St. Clair county, and from there to Ridge Prairie where I found our earnest friend Wm. Oglesby, prostrated by sickness, and my anticipated lectures in that vicinity had to be given up. I returned the same day to Belleville in time to attend the weekly prayer-meeting of the Free Methodist church. They are doing a blessed work here and are prospering. I am enjoying their hospitalities, and expect to speak in their church to-night. To-morrow I turn my face homeward rejoicing to know that Egypt is not altogether a land of darkness.

Yours in Christ,
H. H. HINMAN.

District Association Organized in Ohio.

SENECAVILLE, O., Sept. 7, 1874.

The friends of the anti-secret cause met at the Wesleyan Methodist church, Senecaville, Ohio, Saturday, Sept. 5th, for the purpose of organizing a District Association comprising the 16th congressional district. John M. Rownd was chosen chairman; H. R. Smith, secretary. On motion of Dr. R. B. Taylor, a committee on organization was appointed. Said committee to report at every session. The friends listened to a telling lecture by Elder Rathbun, on the "Religion of Masonry." On motion convention adjourned.

EVENING SESSION.

Convention called to order by president; prayer by Richard Horton. The committee on organization reported favorably on the following named persons as officers of the District Association: President, Noah Hill; Vice-presidents, Eleazer Thompson and John M. Rownd; Secretary, Evans Thompson; Treasurer, Harmon Houseman; Executive Committee, Wm. Lowery, Thos. Richey, R. B. Taylor, Dr. Wharton, Wm. Casner, John Luper. The report of the committee received and the officers confirmed. On motion the convention adjourned. Elder Rathbun was listened to with great interest by the people as he spoke on the ceremonies of Masonry. Dr. Taylor was called upon and proceeded to throw some hot shots at professed Christians who were connected with the institution and especially ministers.

Correspondence.

The Craft in Pennsylvania.—Bridgewater and Abington Baptist Associations—Something New.

The former, the Bridgewater Association, met at Camptown, Bradford county, Pa., during the last week in August. In one of their sessions Eld. A. L. Post offered a resolution containing an anti-secret clause, which that body after a very spirited discussion by the opposite parties, carried by 24 for to 4 against. On the affirmative, Elds. A. L. Post and W. C. Tilden took a prominent part. Dr. J. E. Cheshire, a secretist, took the negative. Among the things he said, substantially, was that, where the churches came up to duty, in the work of charity, then secret societies will have no mission and will die out. Is not this a grand excuse for the existence of an institution which is "full of all subtilty and mischief, a child of the devil" —a very anti-Christ in its nature and principles?

On the 2d and 3d of September met the Abington Baptist Association at Olyphant, Luzerne county, Pa. Some few churches in this body are anti-secret and sent in their protests by letter. Among these, Scott Valley sent in one which gave a brief exposition of its attitude and position, which was, substantially, a historical vindication of the church against the charge of any unchristian conduct in its act of disfellowshiping secret societies. The letter was of necessity double the length of such letters as usually sent in by the churches, and contained some cuts on the old (?) handmaid which her children would be likely to resent.

Now for a "new thing under the sun."

The resolution above referred to, passed by the Bridgewater Association the week before, was, by your correspondent, offered in the Abington Association for adoption, and discussion fairly opened. Elders Newel Callender, and S. E. Miller took part on the affirmative. At this point, with faces flushed with excitment, the children of the handmaid rose in protection of their mother, who was receiving some pretty telling blows from S. E. Miller. The time for preaching had now come. It was moved to extend the time five minutes which motion after some confusion and sparring was withdrawn. Preaching by Elder A. M. Calkin then followed, after which we expected the resolution, now squarely before the body, would be resumed and voted upon, as usual in all such cases. But the craft had locked that door of free discussion and thrown away the key. Now it came to pass that when we were at dinner, being ten or fifteen minutes behind time, our crafty brethren in our absence, had passed a decree that next in order after the sermon should be an address by Elder Bevan, then the minutes should be read and next to adjourn. Thus was the resolution opened by discussion and then ignominously snatched from the hands of the body without a chance to vote. This same resolusion should go into the minutes and be first in the order of business and session. But we suspect the resolution will be somehow engineered out of the minutes and discussion kept off if possible.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

"The Model Cynosure."

If reformers like The Cynosure possess the special prophetic and apostolic gift of the "discerning of spirits," then doubtless they may freely adopt or imitate the prophetic or apostolic language adapted to the case; and it will be both truthful and temperate. But in absence of such special gift, the application of such language is apt to be neither truthful nor temperate.

There are evils of enormous magnitude connected with all secret associations, especially with Freemasonry, evils, however, which are probably not manifest to very many, perhaps not to a majority of those who, for one reason or another, are members of such societies. In such cases nothing but prejudice and ill feeling is promoted by the use of harsh or censorious language, or by an statement not strictly and essentially true. The effort should be to let the light, clear and pure, shine directly upon these dens of darkness. Give us the facts, well authenticated, not overdrawn or misstated, and the just and fair inferences from them, and you do all the good that can be done in such a cause.

And that the Cynosure is not faultless in this respect may be shown by reference to another topic. In the issue of August 25th is an editorial on the late revered Bishop Whitehouse, a man who should command the profound respect of the Cynosure for his decided and pronounced opinions, to say nothing of his vast and masterly scholarship and his faithful and devoted Christian and ministerial life. Is it ignorance which imputes to Bishop Whitehouse the spending of his whole time and strength in building up a church which he knew to be substantially shaped by an act of Parliament? Nevertheless, such an imputation would be indignantly repelled by every member of the church as an unworthy slander, and the editor of the Cynosure, as a tolerably well read man, ought to be aware of it. Mr. Cheney's fault was simply a violation of the law, which the Bishop was bound to enforce. He may have erred in judgment, but his duty was done, and he did not shrink from it. Mr. Cheney was condemned not by the Bishop but by his peers. The Bishop has no such power.

No intelligent member of the Episcopal church, however strongly might be his hostility to secret societies, can recommend to others the reading of a paper so utterly untruthful and intemperate in its notices of the church and of its bishops and other ministers, and because of its lack of charity, so inconsistent with the Word of God.

S. DAVIS.

Ansonia, Conn.

From a Pennsylvania Worker.

PHOENIXVILLE, Pa., Sept. 7, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I am with Bro. Jones and a few others hard at work in the cause distributing tracts and papers; this is a dark place on this subject. I have not been able now for some time to send a subscriber to the paper. Some intimate that they will write for it themselves. I spread the tracts for miles around here and ask God's blessing upon them. They may appear in some eyes as contemptible an instrumentality as the cake of barley bread that tumbled into the camp of the Midianites and came unto a tent, and smote it that it fell. We are expecting that these deluded hosts of secret-society men will be overthrown in God's own way.

The Presbyterian preacher here, the Rev. Joseph Porter, is the same man who allowed Elder Baird to preach in his pulpit, but first cautioned him about what he should say. I think I heard Mr. Baird declare it was the last time he would listen to any compromise, but this same Mr. Porter, who is both a Mason and an Odd-fellow now, since he joined the Masons has fallen into the same kind of trouble as H. W. Beecher, and they have been having a great time in fixing the matter. It is about as near adjusted as Beecher's case. It so happened that the lady's husband was a Mason too, and the Masons tried their hands first, to patch the matter up.

We are terribly cursed with Masonry. It takes a better pen than mine to describe the evil resulting from ministers uniting with such orders. I was going to exclaim, May God in his mercy open their eyes to see the evil of such alliances! But he does open their eyes and they themselves close them. It is difficult to find an excuse for such men who join the Freemasons after what has been said about them at Phoenixville. W. M. Banks.

A Methodist Brother's Experience.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I have been a member of the M. E. church for fifteen years, and for some ten or twelve ye ars a steward. About seven years ago we had a minister named Owen, who pretended not to be a Mason. Before he left us a Mason died, and was buried in the Masonic rite. I attended the funeral, and as the procession marched by who should I see but Bro. Owen, with a something I called a horse collar around his neck. No one can tell how I felt, for from what my father (who was a Mason in Morgan's day) had said about Masonry, I believed it was a terrible institution. I made some remarks about the lodge that stirred him up terribly; as, that I believed the institution to be a trap-door to hell. He ridiculed my opinions in the pulpit and out of it, and at his last quarterly meeting took away from me my stewardship. The next minister was not a Mason he made me a steward again and so I remained until 1871, when I was thrown out again for the same cause. Our minister was a Mason and a chaplain of the lodge. In the meantime I had been solicited by Masons to join them and at times was almost persuaded. In the winter of 1871 a member of our church handed me a little book written by Peter and Lucia Cook at Elkhart, Ind., which contained much that I had heard my father say about Masonry. It stirred up my mind so that I thought a man could not be a Mason and a Christian. On the 26th of February, 1871, my mind was directed to an old basket that my father used to keep his papers in, which I had carefully laid away since his death thirteen years ago. It contained an old paper, the Anti-masonic Free Press, published in 1828 in Boston, which contained strong testimony against Masonry. I took it to our village, and showed it to several persons. One Mason was very much agitated at its appearance. I went to our minister; told him about it, and asked him to come and see it. Previous to this time he called upon us quite often, but never after. Opposition came in against me like a mighty torrent. I sent to J. G. Stearns for one of his books, "Inquiry into Freemasonry." It suited me so well that I sent and got one dozen, and scattered them about. I went to our recording steward, who was a Mason, and told him I would pay for preaching up to that date, but could not pay any more to a Mason. I then told the church in class meeting that I had taken a decided stand against Freemasonry, and as I then felt I should never pay one dollar to a Mason for preaching. I believed it to be a corrupt institution, and I was sorry our church was marred with it. This not only roused the displeasure of the fraternity, but some of the church members. One of our most influential members said to me after meeting, "Brother, I am sorry you have taken such a stand it will hurt your influence." I replied, "You pretend to be an Anti-mason. We believe the institution to be bad; and if we support a minister who supports Masonry, advocates its principles and is chaplain of a lodge, then we are doing so much for the support of the institution. I can't do it. The Bible says we shall have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them."

My business was deranged. I was assailed on every side. Efforts were made to destroy my reputation. One was to destroy my oath in court, which they could not do. On my way home in company with one of the most officious ones in carrying on the work, a Royal Arch Mason, in answer to the question, "Is there not a secret underhanded game going on against me?" he answered, "Yes, there is." He became very friendly and sociable; but I believe God had given me that spirit of discernment so I could see the mark of the "Beast" in his forehead so plainly that he could not deceive me. I had no fears. I read in God's Word that if God was for me, it was more than all that could be against me. I could safely trust him, and on being warned by a Mason (who was a friend) to stop my opposition to the lodge, for I could not stand it, I said to him, Fear not man who after he has killed the body there is nothing more he can do, but fear God who after he has killed the body hath power to cast both soul and body into hell. He answered, "Your appeal is too high. I can't talk with you."

O how often I would go into my closet and there offer up my petition and tell my trouble to him who has said, "Pray to thy Father who is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly!" How plainly this promise was verified to me and so I went on trusting in him who has said he would never leave me nor forsake me, but would be with me in the sixth trouble and would not leave me in the seventh; and oh! how true the promise is. Praise his holy name.

Then the enemy says to his servants, He sends his milk to the cheese-factory and you go and turn water into it. Now we will catch him. It was done, but Mr. R. A. over-reaches himself. Before the the notice came to me, he went to the factory and urged so hard to know how my milk tested and said so many things, that it created a suspicion in the minds of the factory men that he was trying to injure me. He knew my milk was watered long before I did. But. when I was notified it was like a shock to me. I gave all the explanation I could; told them it was all right so far as I knew. Masons got hold of it. They carried the story all about. These were days of great trial to me. It seemed as though everything was against me, and the only place I could take comfort was at the foot of the cross, and the nearest friend was Jesus. He held by me closer than a brother. How wonderfully he sustained me! Sometimes when I would feel almost overcome I would go to God for help. He would direct my mind to some passage of Scripture which would open up such a glow of light to my soul that all darkness would fly away. I never loved God and his word more in my life. Jesus all the day long was my joy and my song. Praise his holy name!

Then to make this more severe when I was called before the county court as a witness, after I gave in my testimony, the lawyer on the opposite side said to me, "Are you a farmer?" I answered, "I am." "You keep cows, don't you?" I answered, "I do." "You send your milk to the factory, don't you?" "Yes, sir." "Havn't you sent it there watered?" I answered, "Yes, sir, if they told me right at the factory and their detectors are correct, I have; but how it came watered I don't know. I did not water it, and I will give five hundred dollars to know who did. The judgments of God will rest on that man." I asked the judge the privilege of explaining. He granted my request, and told me to go back to the stand. I told them that formerly I had but little trouble; if I wanted any favors I could get them. If I wanted money at the bank I could get all I wanted. I had done it and they did not ask me any security. But of late things went differently with me. I told the court I had taken a decided stand against Masonry. I had distributed some Anti-masonic books. Since then strange things had happened. This was the severest trial of all my life. Through all of this persecution I could but rejoice; for best of all God was with me, and I had his Word to comfort me. In it I read, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my name's sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven."

And now Masons trouble no more. Now I say within my heart, for the sake of humanity, for the sake of my friends, for the sake of my own soul, and for the sake of Jesus Christ who shed his blood for me, I will have no more fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but will rather reprove them. E. S. Gratton.

Masonic Barbarity.

A farmer lived near her who had an orchard near the road-side, and boys, when passing, would frequently get over the fence for some apples. One day he discovered some boys in his orchard and immediately started for them, swearing vengeance on them, if he could catch them; but all succeeded in getting away except one little fellow about seven years old. He caught this child, the only son of a poor widow, and beat and kicked him, until he was nearly dead, and then left him to be carried home by a passer by, to his almost distracted mother, where he died in a few hours. This poor woman almost heart-broken at the cruel murder of her darling only child, with no one to help her, made complaint to the proper authorities and had the murderer arrested. This man was a worthy member of a Freemason lodge, and a brother Mason saw the deed committed; but when the trial came off, the witness was nowhere to be found and the physician who examined the child (being also a Freemason) said that he had the "life complaint," and could not have lived long any way; and there could not be a jury found to convict the murderer of an innocent, helpless little child. These are some of the workings of this so-called benevolent institution in which men are banded together, and have sworn by the most horrible oaths to protect each other, right or wrong. These are the simple, unvarnished facts as near as I can relate them. There may be good Christians belonging to this fraternity; but how they can continue to affiliate with such a dangerous institution is beyond my comprehension; and how so many ministers of the Gospel can consent to be complicated in such disgraceful proceedings, is a mystery yet to be solved. —Correspondence Am. Wesleyan.

OUR MAIL.

John Hiner, Waller, O., writes:

"I do all I can; that is only a little, but DROPS MAKE THE BUCKET FULL."

We capitalize the last words for the encouragement of workers who do not now realize large results for their labors. Mr. Hiner says that they need lecturers in his part of the country badly.

Mrs. M. A. Gamble, Wilford, Mich., writes:

"I rejoice in your progress in this reform, and will ever pray that the hands of your arms may be strengthened by the mighty God of Jacob."

She writes that Masonry is strong in Milford, and that the grange is growing.

J. C. Berryman, Houghton. Ill., writes:

"The bright pages of the Cynosure lie on the table beforc me. . . . Will the principles they advocate with such firmness be supported by the brave yeomanry of the land as they should be? . . . What the great future has in store for us we cannot say, or what course others may take on the Masonic question which is being so deliberately discussed by so many, I know not. But as for me, down with that Freemasonry."

Rev. L. A. Wickey, Mt. Top, Pa., writes:

"Other subscribers will come through H. T. Slaughenhaupt, who is at work. Wherc ever we go we have a word for the Cynosure. Are doing all we can in this anti-secrecy work, trusting in God for success. On my circuit, where we have had two powerful lectures delivered against secrecy, I have lately had the most successful missionary meetings it ever was my pleasure to hold since in the ministry."

Thos. Relyea, Watertown, N. Y., writes:

"I hand the papers to my friends and neighbors to read and try to convince them of the evil of those secret societies that are in our country. . . . I do not see how I can do without the Christian Cynosure; please to send it on as heretofore."

J. W. G. McCormick, Manhattan, Kan., writes:

"This country has been visited and laid waste by the grasshoppers. Corn and vegatables almost totally destroyed. The Kansas Valley presents the aspect of an inhabited desert. Drowth continued since June last, and every thing is parched and dry."

Wm. Whetham, Houghton, Ill., writes:

"I like the Cynosure because it is so fearless and out-spoken in the cause of truth, and my sympathies are with it in its efforts to destroy the hidden works of darkness."

John A. Allen, Bremen, O., writes:

"I am doing all I can for your paper."

A. Ramsey, Portland Mills, Ind., sends four subscriptions for a year, and writes:

"I would be pleased to have your excellent paper circulated in this vicinity as it might be instrumental in letting heaven's light shine into the dark localities around us where the baleful influences of Masonry and the grangers are operating to put religion and civilization back at least a thousand years."

J. W. Logue, Northfield, O., writes:

"I am in entire sympathy with your efforts in opposition to secret societies, and in my sphere am, and ever have been, opposing them for many years, not as a specialty, but unmistakably ever as far as I could in connection with the other interests demanding my attention."

John Torrens, Benzonia, Mich., writes:

"My rule of life is never engage in anything on which I cannot ask the blessing of God; and I feel as if I could on your enterprise with a good will go on and prosper."

D. Baker, Remington, Ind., writes:

"It would be my greatest pleasure to send you a hundred names. The paper is worthy of a large list of subscribers. I distributed those tracts. I think they did good. I keep my papers moving, and I keep Finney's book in play all the time. I see no reason for discouragement. Why? Because the Lord is on our side and truth will prevail. Our election soon comes off. Where are we to look for tickets? There is nothing done in this county (Jasper) on this question for want of money and lecturers. As to the question of making this a political issue I am ready any time. I began voting the anti-slavery ticket when there was only three votes cast for it in town. I have lived to see a glorious victory. May the Lord give us a victory in this cause, and Charles Francis Adams for the next President."

An agent at West Newton, Ind., writes:

"I attended a Quaker meeting one day and sold twenty books."

We hope all who have books will press their sale. Those who will improve opportunities will not lack opportunities to improve. We hope many will follow the example of M. Kelly, Bentonville, Ind. He has had four "good, reliable, earnest Anti-masons and patriots" canvass his county from north to south and from east to west and paste up and put into the hands of reading and thinking people nearly 3,000 tracts.

A friend at Constable, N. Y., writes:

"I long to see our Methodist Episcopal preachers where they ought to be, taking some action against Masonry. Our papers and tracts are doing good here. We have a goodly number that are strongly opposed to the lodge. Some have gone so far as to refuse to support a minister that is a Mason. But I can't get them to make a move, either for the paper, tracts, or membership. Perhaps one good lecture would rouse them and put them in working order."

LESSON XXXIX.—SEPT. 27, 1874.—THIRD QUARTERLY REVIEW.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Mark i. 1-45; Luke v. 27-32, vi. 1-11; Mark v. 1-34; Matt. xiv. 1-21; Mark vii. 14-30; Ps. cxix. 145-176; Ps. lxxii. 1-19.

Having studied the first and a portion of the second gospel, a review gives a good opportunity for the scholars to individualize the gospels of their writers.

Matthew writes for the Hebrews; connects the New Testament with the Old.

Mark writes for the Romans, intelligent, busy, practical people, thinking favorably of religion, judging it by its fruits, inquiring who Jesus was. Recall Mark's family, with whom he labored, his history, peculiarities of his style. See lesson xxvii.

This Gospel has been divided into five parts: (1) Jesus, co-worker with the Baptist—preparatory, Mark i. 1-13. (2) Jesus after the Baptist—warfare with the kingdom of evil begun—Mark i. 14 to end of last lesson. (3) The warfare in Perea, Mark x. 34. (4) The warfare continued in Judea, Mark x. 15-47. (5) The final triumph in his resurrection.

We have studied parts 1 and 2; the next twelve lessons carry us through the remainder.

Review (1)—Jesus with the Baptist. Recall account of the Baptist—whom he announces—place of the Baptist in prophesy—his special work—meaning of his baptism—his message—peculiarities of his preaching—his popularity—his success—his appearance—his food—his honor—where he baptized Jesus—the voice from heaven—descent of the Holy Spirit—how prove claim of Jesus as Messiah—His authority.

Review (2) Jesus beginning the warfare with evil. His teaching—call of his disciples—their obedience—become followers—how scholars—names of diseases healed—men in want (five thousand)—in storm (on the sea).

How these are signs of sin. Authority of Jesus overcomes all. Recall examples.

The unclean spirits, "Let us alone. We . . . know thee." The leper, "Lord if thou wilt." The publican—gives up his situation at Christ's word—the Pharisees are silenced—the rescued disciples are amazed—the demons cry out, "Thou Son of the most high God"—all recognized the power of Jesus.—American Sunday-School Union Lessons.

Reproving Scholars.

Reprove your scholars in private, if you must reprove them at all. Prejudice is easily awakened in a mature mind, much more easily than in an immature mind. Especially at the provoking age (that is, with boys about fourteen, with girls about sixteen) don't for the world let them provoke you. Take a big circuit and get around them with a little sarcasm, that does not appear personal, that applies itself, but don't publicly reprove; and the hardest things you say say good naturedly and with coolness. If you wish to reprove invite the troublesome one to your house and reprove with a good time. If you must say something hard "aim low," as old Iron sides always said, and hit the heart instead of the head. Lecturing a Sunday-school class is so very dangerous.—S. S. Times.

The most discouraging aspect of the present Sunday-school system is the too prevailing neglect on the part of classes to "get" the lessons, and the careless and unskillful way in which they are often slurred over. This is positively as well as negatively bad. Any work shammily done is bad, and inflicts harm upon the character of the person who does it. Faithfulness should be a prime article in one's practical creed. The habit of learning each week the lesson of the week would be a noble part of one's religious training. Training and learning must go together. Is it possible to bring about a reformation in our Sunday-schools in this respect? We firmly believe it is. Not of course at a leap, or by a spasm. But it can be done. The dawning hope that it can be, is itself a pledge of success. It will come to pass through the more faithful and more skillful work of the teachers. It is not a change of teachers that is needed. The finest culture and character in the churches is already in the Sunday-schools. But the simple and transcendently cheerful fact is this, that good teachers, under the influence of suitable training, can be made, or rather make themselves, into better teachers. And with better teaching there will be better learning. To be sure one cannot compel a horse to drink; but go out into any pasture and one will readily see how well-trodden are all the paths that lead to the spot where the freshest water is to be had. Normal classes, teachers' meetings, town institutes, county institutes, conventions, great and small, let them have free course, the result of them will yet be a vastly better trained corps of teachers, and millions of scholars actually learning the lessons.—Illustrated Bible Studies.

Forty Years Ago.

The Twenty-Fourth of June.

No fact is more insisted upon by Masons, than that St. John was a brother: So his day is kept by them. St. John was not a mason by trade, and was not a Freemason by profession; it is putting contempt on the forerunner of the great Messias, to pretend that he was a Freemason; it is a reproach upon the holy prophet of the Lord, and upon the austere preacher of repentance, to call him a Freemason, and keep a day to his honor, as the worthy brother of a secret society, whose revelries and banquetings are too often made public, to the shame of the members who are not shameless, and to the corruption of good manners and pure morals.

All lodges and halls of Masons, are said to be dedicated to St. John. Masonry by its own account in much older than he, but it does not appear to whom halls were previously dedicated. Nor can we think that Hindoo and Indian and Mahommedan Masons would dedicate their lodges to a Christian saint; therefore, brother Masons, the infallible tradition and the lectures of Freemasonry are wrong, which represent the order to be universal, and everywhere the same in Christian and heathen lands. Would a Mahommedan call the Christian Scriptures the first great light of Freemasonry? The Bible, square, and compass, lights in a lodge of Chinese or of Hottentots? Just as soon you might find the Koran in the Christian pulpit, or the African nose and black face upon the descendants of the Puritans.

The pretense to St. John's being a Freemason, is a cloak to cover up the excesses of the secret meeting, and a stumbling-block to throw before good wives who complain of their husbands for being out at a midnight hour, where refreshments are taken to excess. St. John's day is kept to impose upon honest men, and make them think Freemasonry is religious, if it be not religion itself. I do not mean that our Freemasons would thus impose upon us: I rather suppose they are imposed upon, and that they observe the day in full faith that St. John was a good brother.

Freemasonry originated among mechanics, and constituted its first Grand Lodge at London, A. D. 1717. In England Masons' holiday, or 24th of June, is mechanics' holiday, and had been more than 150 years before the word of Freemasonry, or speculative Masonry had existence. Masons kept it, and in England now keep it, only as one mechanic trade among a hundred others. And as the Hon. C. D. Colden says,—"the Masonic society has no more pretense to a divine origin, than the societies of stationers, butchers, bakers, carpenters, or any other trade;" so it is true that Masons have no more pretense to keep the 24th of June a holiday, than the societies of tailors, cordwainers, blacksmiths, or any other craft or trade.

The statute of 5th Elizabeth A. D. 1562, which repeals that of Ed. 3. that of Henry 6th, and all others relating to artificers' wages, ordains, that the wages of mechanics shall be determined annually by the justices of each shire and others; it punishes with imprisonment both him that gives, and him that receives, more that the statute wages; and it describes mechanics as those who exercise any "mystery, art, science, labor, or manual occupation." "Sciences, crafts, mysteries, or arts of" thirty-one named trades of mechanics, is a clause of section 3, and is referred to in section 4, by "the aforesaid arts and sciences," viz: The 31 enumerated mechanic arts. The words "feat, mystery, or art of a merchant, draper, goldsmith," &c. used in this statute, readily explain the origin of all Masonic pretensions to art, and mystery, and learning,—they sprung with the apron and trowel from the "feat, mystery, art, and science" of hammering stone, and laying wall.

In this statute, too, is the Masonic word tyler, "rough mason, brickmaker, bricklayer, tyler, slater, tylemaker," &c. The tyler covers the Masonic lodge, by keeping off cowans, as the slate, or brick tyler covers the house with a roof of impervious slate or brick.

Sec. 26, fixes the time from and after which, the various trades mysteries, crafts, and sciences, might, under limitations given, take apprentices to their several callings for seven years; and that time is "the feast of the nativity of St. John the Baptist." Thus that day probably became, and now is, English mechanics holiday; for as his seven years servitude on that day begins, so on that day his life of servitude ends, and freedom commences, which is a holiday.

This statute was passed before the Union of England and Scotland, and does not extend to Scotch mechanics. But the Masons of Scotland forming a Grand Lodge, A. D. 1736, as England had done A. D. 1717, it was proposed to make the 24th of June, or St. John's day, Scotch Masons' holiday: but national pride rallied around St. Andrew, the patron saint of Scotland, and the Scotch dedicated their services to him, and kept 30th of Nov. St. Andrew's day, in honor of their ancient brother, St. Andrew!—Anti-masonic Review, 1829.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, September 17, 1874.

Executive Committee Notice.—The Executive Committee of the National Christian Association will meet at the Cynosure office on Saturday, September 19th, at 11 o'clock A. M., for the transaction of business. A full attendance is requested. By order of the Chairman.

Read in this issue a communication headed, "The Model Cynosure." It is one of two articles censuring what the Cynosure said respecting the late Bishop Whitehouse. Neither of the writers suggests that there was any mistake about Bishop Whitehouse's kneeling before the Pope of Rome amid his worshipers, which, in fact, and in the eyes of the world was worshiping that pontiff. Both articles, too, (or we do) misapprehend the ground of our opposition to the lodge as a worship rivalling God's. They speak of "evils of enormous magnitude connected with all secret associations." But the writers are candid and deserve a respectful hearing.

WHEATON COLLEGE SUBSCRIPTION—A REPORT.

I have received in cash and cash-subscriptions between eight and nine hundred dollars in my visits to the churches this summer. My road expenses were provided for by special contract. The ladies of Sterling gave me fifteen dollars for a temperance speech, Judge Parks, of Wenona, gave me five dollars for my sermon, and Rev. A. Baker, of Tiskilwa, two dollars for my expenses; and Deacon R. E. Adams, of College Springs, Iowa, and G. W. Needles, of Albany, Mo., raised and paid me forty-two dollars, which were my expenses on that trip. The balance, money and subscriptions, to the uttermost farthing, goes into the treasury of Wheaton College, deducting nothing for my salary or support. The subscription at College Springs was in the hands of Dr. Morrison when I left for Missouri, the friends there intending to increase it. I will account for this in detail when it comes. Up to the Missouri trip the subscription stands as follows:

Princeton, Ill., and vicinity, cash and subscriptions, $203; Wyanet, $60; Malden, $75; Moline, $75; Cambridge, $75; Providence and Tiskilwa, $11.50; Wenona, $125; Farm Ridge, $5; Ottawa, $25; Streator, $25; Grand Ridge, $25. Total, $704 50.

I hereby certify that the subscription paper for the above amounts together with the cash proceeds have been received by me. H. A. FISCHER, Treasurer of Wheaton College.

NOTE.

Wherever I have been this summer I have spoken earnestly for the cause represented by the Cynosure; and have felt certain that, as of old, if the temples, altars and groves of Baal were destroyed, the money would be forthcoming for repairing the temple and worship of the true God. Thus far I have not been disappointed. I have been received with a cordiality and kindness above my deserts.

Our college debt is, of course, not yet cancelled, and I am still ready to go and lecture against the modern anti-Christ wherever the people will do something to help extinguish this debt on our beautiful college buildings. The term and year are opening full of hope and prosperity. Letters addressed to me at Wheaton, Illinois, always receive prompt attention.

In haste, yours in Christ, J. BLANCHARD.

THE WHITE LEAGUES.

The frequently recurring murders in the South of late point to another Ku-Klux war, in which the interference of the general government was necessary in the Carolinas. The same Klan yet continues to carry on its sworn business in Kentucky, Tennessee and other Southern States. Deputy United States Marshal Willis Russell has reported to the marshal for the district, Gen. E. H. Murray, murders and depredations, of which the following is a summary:

"More than one hundred men have been killed, wounded or driven away from that portion of Owen and Henry counties lying on the Kentucky river, by the Ku-Klux in the last three years. These have been mostly colored people, although some white men are included. The majority of the people are all good citizens, and are at heart violently opposed to these Ku-Klux, but they are under a reign of terror, and are really afraid to express their opinions, not knowing what moment they will have to pay the penalty. Whenever the country is ridden of these pests it will be as flourishing a community as it was before the Ku-Klux organization." Russell is an ex-Confederate soldier and supports his statements with affidavits.

But the most violent exhibition of the intolerant spirit, which slavery nourished and the blistering fires of war could not wholly kill out, shows itself in the extreme South, especially Alabama and Louisiana. The desperadoes of these regions call themselves "White Leagues." Their object is sufficiently plain. They do not hope to re-enslave the colored man, but by threats, intimidation and the bullet, they aim to drive him and his white friend from Southern fields. The constitutions of these lodges and their resolutions, interpreted by the recent outrages they have commited, are proof of this. Extracts from the constitution of the Crescent City White League of New Orleans, sent by a member to the Chicago Inter-Ocean, read thus:

"Were the negro willing to listen to the voice of reason, we could demonstrate even to his understanding that the predominance of our race in government is indispensable to his well being. . . . . They have become maddened by the hatred and conceit of race, and it has become our duty to save them and to save ourselves from the fatal probabilities of their stupid extravagance and reckless vanity, by arraying ourselves in the name of white civilization, presuming that just and legitimate superiority in the administration of our State affairs to which we are entitled by superior responsibility, superior numbers and superior intelligence."

And again:

"Indeed, it is with some hope that a timely and proclaimed union of the whites as a race, and their efficient preparation for any emergency, may arrest the threatened horrors of a social war, and teach the blacks to beware of further insolence and aggression, that we call upon the men of our race to leave in abeyance all lesser considerations; to forget all differences of opinions and all prejudices of the past, and with no object in view but the common good of both races, to unite with us in an earnest effort to re-establish a white man's government in the city and the State."

During July and August the New Orleans Republican published the following declarations:

From the Alto White League:

"That we regard it the sacred and political duty of every member of this club to discountenance and socially proscribe all white men who unite themselves with the Radical party; and to supplant every political opponent in all his vocations by the employment and support of those who ally themselves with the white man's party; and we pledge ourselves to exert our energies and use our means to the consummating of this end."

The St. Mary League:

"We enter into and form this league for the protection of our own race against the daily increasing encroachments of the negro, and are determined to use our best endeavors to purge our legislative, judicial and ministerial offices from such a horde of miscreants as now assume to lord it over us.

That to accomplish this end we solemnly pledge our honor to each other to give our hearty support to all that this league may determine by a majority of votes cast at any regular meeting, and to aid to the utmost of our ability in carrying out such measures as it may adopt."

The Franklin League:

"That it is the sense of this convention that every member of the White League organization is in honor and duty bound zealously to support and vote for each and every regular nominee of the organization, to the exclusion of all other candidates or persons whatever."

These extracts plainly show the Masonic nature of these sworn secret leagues. It is a purely political application of the lodge; and its great demonstration was made in the Red River parishes when six white men, four of them officers of the parish (or county), and a number of negroes were murdered in cold blood. There is no promise that this butchery will be alone, except the proclamations of a weak State government; and last week a lot of arms, said to be for the White Leagues of the city, were landed at New Orleans. The intention of the authorities to seize them being known, the lodges and their organs threatened and howled, but durst not prevent the seizure.

The efforts of the South to shake off a government of office plunderers who used the colored vote to secure plunder and power, were receiving much sympathy in all parts of the country. While carried on legally and with a view to the better condition of all classes, they were encouraged, but the introduction of this feature into a political war is everywhere deprecated, and must cause such a revulsion of feeling in the North as will greatly hinder the permanent re-establishment of peaceful authority in the South. The party journals are enlarging daily on the topic, and barricading the weak points of the dominant party with the bodies and goods of the White League victims.

The present outbreak may be suppressed by the respective State authorities, to whom properly belongs that work. At least an appeal to the general government would bring all needed assistance. So that a continuation of these massacres seems needless, only to aid the schemes of politicians. But to prevent their regular occurrence there must be more thorough work undertaken in Congress. Until these secret, sworn conspiracies against society are disarmed by law we may not hope for a truly prosperous people.

A RAMBLING STORY.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, September 5th, thus walks about the facts developed in the Anti-masonic reform of the present and past, and from a partial view presumes to gives impartial judgment:

THE WAR AGAINST SECRET SOCIETIES.

A revival of the spirit of Anti-masonry in this country seems to be the object of certain persons, who, in numbers, are few. This subject was fought out to an issue as a political one forty years ago, and with so little success that, upon the overthrow of the opponents of secret societies, all remark or cavil or discussion upon the subject ceased for a long time. The efforts against these associations may be considered moral and religious rather than political. The Roman Catholic church is opposed to secret societies, that is, to secular secret societies. Religious secret societies of the character of the Society of Jesus meet with no censure from that church. In this city the Reformed Presbyterian Synod of the United States had had before it resolutions against secret temperance societies, such as the Good Templars, Sons of Temperance, &c. The order of the Patrons of Husbandry, or the grangers, was especially reported against, as well as the Masonic and Odd-fellows orders. A petition presented to Congress at the last session asked that a charter granted by Congress to a Masonic Hall Association in the District of Columbia, should be repealed for no other reason than because the hall was to be used by the Masonic order. These persons go much further, and they ask that laws shall be enacted which will prevent a member of a secret society from holding public office, from being a juror or a judge. It only needs an amendment to the effect that no member of a secret society shall be allowed to be a plaintiff, defendant, witness or attorney, to make the thing complete.

The most noticeable point in all these matters is the lack of argument in favor of the objects proposed by these persons. The most they can say is that they are opposed to secret societies. At the time of the Anti-masonic excitement it might be said that there was one secret society in the United States. But since that time the number has immensely increased, and includes organizations of charity, friendship, sociability, amusement, temperance, business, and even of religion. Very large numbers of persons belong, or have belonged, to such societies, and of the former members it might be said that none who have been affiliated now disapprove of their former obligations. They have ceased to be actively interested, for personal reasons, and are not enemies of the societies to which they formerly belonged. On the other hand, the opponents of secret societies are almost entirely persons who know nothing about them by experience.

It would seem like giving an honorable character to folly to follow about such indefensible statements, nailing them on some convenient fence-post to sprivel to their proper proportions; but such work must be done so long as reputable avenues of imformation betray such ignorance, or openly prevaricate.

First, the past.—The political reformation attempted forty years ago against the lodge had "so little success," etc. The Anti-masonic party which elected Joseph Ritner Governor of Pennsylvania in 1834, led the politics of New York for several previous years, and sustained William Wirt for the Presidency in 1832, did not expire with a few spasmodic efforts. It formed the basis of the Republican party when the slavery question began to predominate in 1834–40. Senator Seward but represented thousands of Anti-masons in that party when in 1855 from his place in the Senate denounced secret orders.

The present.—If the reason given above for opposing the Masonic Hall Association were the only one petitioners could offer it would be a puerile question to drag into Congress; but the issue is this: the Congress of the United States, sworn in under a constitution whose provisions in spirit and letter forbid the practices of Masonry, chartered in a territory entirely under its jurisdiction a Masonic society with the above title. It may not have been a lodge, but it was the servant of the lodge, and is under the same condemnation. Against such an abuse every American should raise his voice.

The law properly places restrictions upon those who exercise its functions. It has some regard to the qualifications of public officers, judges and jurors; and we are experimenting as a nation, perhaps fatally, with the few restrictions which the law recognizes. When we come to ignore them entirely we may write "Troia-fuit." If a restriction on account of age, intelligence, or previous convictions is to be taken into the account so should an obligation to favoritism.

It is enough for us to say that we are opposed to secret societies when it is being daily demonstrated that there is no greater enemy to our civil and religious liberties.

But the standing of "former members"—this is Masonic enough; when the scores and hundreds of seceders are becoming daily the most active and useful element in the overthrow of the orders into which deception had led them, while false shame and false oaths bound them fast.

As for the last statement the Inquirer only has to become an opponent itself and it will very soon learn something "by experience;" and unless it has a craven heart it will remember and profit by the lesson.

NOTES.

—A topic for the lodges to discuss in the intervals of their work for the next half year—What made the Grand Master of the English lodge SECEDE?

—It is stated that the Austrian government has forbidden the establishment of any more Masonic lodges. The particulars of this injunction and the reasons urged for it we have not learned; but if the statement be a fact there are evidently some developments in the case which are worth studying.

—A New York despatch says that the ecclesiastical committee of his conference has turned Rev. Tunis Titus Kendrick out of the Methodist Episcopal church. Now that his spiritual fathers have deserted him the lodge may take him up. Rev. Kendrick has done a good thing for it by his lectures, let him have his due. His drunkenness and immorality which lost him a place in the church will not interfere with his good standing among Masons.

—In the last Cynosure we noticed that the Detroit Methodist Episcopal Conference, sitting at Romeo, Mich., had voted to return Rev. John Levington to active service, thus acknowledging the injustice of their action superannuating him two years ago. The day following this vote, the dispatches state that Mr. Levington asked for a location. His request was granted, and he thus is relieved from a charge under the conference, and can continue his labors as lecturer against the lodge as heretofore.

—The Marquis of Ripon, who held the office of Grand Master of Masons in England has resigned his collar and mallet and returned to privacy—not of a brother Master Mason, but—woe the day!—he has turned his back on the brethren, whose lives are made virtuous with a stone hammer and brought into a straight-forward position by a common square; has thrown his Masonic oath to the dogs, rent his immaculate lambskin and—become a Romanist! Now shall we hear some "comments" on this lordly apostate? Wherefore? Except in the matter of deserting the lodge and going over to its enemy how is his condition changed. Shall we hear him called a "perjured wretch," a betrayer of his brethren? Seldom. But if he had become a Free Methodist instead of a Catholic—!

—The explanation of the St. John's day bauble, kept so well inflated by the lodge, as given in our "Forty Years Ago" column, is both reasonable and reliable. It perfectly follows the analogy of false religions in their efforts to supplant the true, by christening a heathen or secular festival and throwing around its observance the assumed halo of religion; for Satan may transform himself into an angel of light in appearance. The beginning of the rivalry between English and Scotch Masonry is also suggested very plainly. The present relation of these factions, although an attempt is made to smother the differences with false oaths and dissembling fraternal embraces—the relation is far from harmonious. In some jurisdictions it is almost open hostility. Yet all it really amounts to is the difference between the names St. John and St. Andrew, and between two different days in the year. If there was anything but falsehood in the Masonic system their private quarrels might have some consideration other than to exemplify their hypocritical nature.

—Luther was fond of his beer and his pipe while a student, and even until later in life. Theological differences arose between him and Carlstadt, "the iconoclast," and the long-time friends drank a mug of beer together and separated. In after life Luther wrote the following which is recommended to those who love his name but fail to honor it by remembering his example: "The man who first brewed beer was a pest to Germany. Food must be dear in our land, for the horses eat up all the oats, and peasants and citizens drink up all the barley in the form of beer. I have survived the end of genuine beer, for it has now become small beer in every sense, and I have prayed to God that he might destroy the whole beer brewing business, and the first brewer I have often cursed. There is enough barley destroyed in the breweries to feed all Germany."

Author's Correction.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

On looking over an article in a late number of your excellent paper, headed, "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion," I observed one or two small mistakes that perhaps had better be corrected.

The quotation in the first degree of Masonry was from Matt. vii. 7, and not from Matt. xviii. 20.

The beginning of Masonry was dated June and not July 24, 1717.

The Royal Arch Mason says, "I promise and swear seventeen times and not fourteen as printed in the third paragraph.

In the fifth paragraph "Freemasons, on the contrary, fraternize, not patronize, all sorts of characters.

In the eleventh paragraph, it is said, "In the Royal Arch degree, the high priest, while reading a portion of Scripture (II. Thes. iii. 6–18) carefully omits the name of our blessed Saviour. ["Richardson's Monitor," page 67, does not omit the name of Christ in this passage.—Pub.]" By way of explanation, the writer would say that he did not take "Richardson" as a standard; but "The Mysteries of Freemasonry, revised and corrected to correspond with the most approved forms and ceremonies in the various lodges of Freemasons throughout the United States;" by George R. Crafts, formerly thrice Puissant Grand Master of Manitou Council, N. Y., Wilson & Co's edition, N. Y. On page 50 of this work, the high priest in the Royal Arch degree is represented as reading in the lodge, II Thes. iii. 6–18, which is given verbatim, omitting the two phrases, "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," and "By our Lord Jesus Christ." After which Mr. Craft makes the following observation: "The reader is requested to compare this with Scripture; he will observe that the name of the Saviour is intentionally left out."

Webb's Freemason's Monitor, pocket edition, page 180, quotes II Thes. iii. 6–18 word for word, carefully omiting the same phrases, viz., "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," and "By our Lord Jesus Christ." Here, then, are two standard authorities as witnesses against Richardson. If this is not sufficient to prove that the Masons have expunged the name of our blessed Saviour from the holy Scriptures, I refer you to "Richardson's Monitor," pages 42–43, where in the Mark Master's degree, the name of Christ is erased from 1 Peter ii. 1–5.

If anything more on this subject is required you can be furnished with satisfactory proof that the phrases— "For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah," and "Jesus is made a surety of a better testament," are sacriligiously erased from the seventh chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews in the Royal Arch degree. But this is not all. The name of Christ, that dear name which is above every name and at which every knee shall bow (Phil. ii. 9.), that only name by which any one of the human race can be saved, (Acts iv. 12.) is ignored in all the twenty-five prayers and the twenty-five hymns contained in the Manual of the lodge; nor is it to be found, so far as I can ascertain, in any standard Masonic book in any of the degrees of Masonry from that of the Entered Apprentice to that of the Royal Arch degree; and where any Scripture is quoted containing the Saviour's name it is sacriligiously and blasphemously expunged in every instance. If this is not secretly bringing in damnable heresies and denying the Lord that bought them, what is it? If this is not the work of anti-Christ there is no anti-Christ on the earth.

SPECTATOR.

Religious Intelligence.

—One hundred and four bishops of the Episcopal church of the United States have been consecrated since the Revolutionary war, fifty-three of whom are dead.

—The Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association will be held at Clinton, Iowa, October 28th, 1874. Rev. Dr. Magoun, President of Iowa College, will preach the sermon.

—A great sensation has been caused in Rome in Roman Catholic circles by the conversion to Protestantism of another distinguished clergyman of that church. The name of the convert is Alceste Lamna. He was a parish priest, a doctor of divinity, and has been professor of philosophy at the Vatican Seminary.

—This is a bad year for missionary societies. The American Board must get $100,000, we believe, this month, to finish the year free from debt. The Dutch Board is $20,000 in arrears, and the Baptist Missionary Society is as badly off, while the Episcopal Board complains of a falling off of $18,000.

—From the reports of the Congregational Union, the church building society of the denomination, it appears that while the real collection for church buildings was $24,205.85, the expenses of the society were $10,000. This is a strong argument for the union of the benevolent societies of the denomination now advocated by some of its organs.

—A public worship bill passed by the late British Parliament is arousing some commotion. One of its provisions provides that a layman may be appointed as judge to decide in cases of the violation of the rubric. The extreme ritualists regard this as an encroachment on the rights of bishops and talk of secession. The lap of Rome is ready to catch them.

—An English statician, Mr. Ravenstein, claims that the Catholics are numerically decreasing in England. He shows that in 1844 the Catholic population formed about one per cent. In 1865 they had increased to five per cent. chiefly through immigratiom from Ireland, whose people were driven out by famine. In 1871 they formed but little more than four per cent. of the whole population or 1,193,000 in all. The influence and power of the Romish church has, however, considerably increased. Its priests, nuns, churches, and monasteries have become more numerous, and its aggressive spirit is more marked.

—A camp-meeting was held during August in Mansfield, Ohio, by the State Association for the promotion of holiness. The attendance was large, some fifteen thousand being on the grounds at times, and preaching was conducted from four stands. A correapondent of the Free Methodist notices two features in which this holiness movement is powerfully affecting the M. E. church. A large portion of the denomination are opposed to the movement and some of its promoters have been expelled. But there is no doubt that the vital piety of the denomination supports it, and sooner or later the dead branches will be thrown off. Although little allusion is made in these holiness meetings to the lodge, the opinion is growing that this issue must be met ere long. None can fear the result of the decision, but those who have risked soul and body to the cruel mercies of the lodge.

TO ALL SECEDING MASONS.—The National Christian Association at its late meeting in Syracuse, N. Y., appointed to the Recording Secretary the duty of securing the names of all the seceding Masons of the country with their endorsement of Bernard's Revelation. In accordance with this vote all seceding Masons are requested to send their names and the endorsement as stated; and they are desired in order to make the statement more complete to send also their post-office address, the number of degrees taken, number of years connected with the lodge, the date of their leaving it, and where residing when they joined. These facts will be preserved with the records of the National Association, and their value in the future progress of the reform will be undoubtedly great.

Friends of the reform everywhere are earnestly desired to co-operate in extending this notice and securing the desired information, which should be sent to

H. L. KELLOGG,
Recording Secretary N. C. A.,
11 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Odd-fellowship Illustrated.—A complete illustrated exposition of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah or Ladies' degrees. This book is now issued and is the only complete Exposition of Odd-fellowship in the market. The price is but 25 cents each, $2.00 per dozen by mail, and $10.00 per 100 by express.

The Home Circle.

The Sabbath.

A bright spot, an oasis
Amid earth's desert drear,
The sweetest bud that blooms
Upon the rose tree of the year
A miniature of heaven hung
Upon a chain of days,
Worn on the breast of Father Time,
To cheer his weary ways.

A soothing poem written in
A volume of dull prose,
A waft of soft Spring melody
Heard at the Winter's close;
The golden clasp that binds the leaves
Of six days' episode,
That God's own fingers shall unloose
Across the Jordan's flood.

Servants and Sons.

In former ages men prayed to the Almighty God, Jehovah, the Lord of Hosts. In the present age, we are taught to pray to "Our Father." He is the same personage, but the relationship is changed. Under the old covenant people were servants; under the new covenant they are sons and daughters. Under Moses, the people were in bondage to duty. Under Jesus, men are free by the Spirit of adoption. The law was temporal and weak, because of sin. Grace is eternal and strong, because of righteousness. The servant abideth not forever. The son abideth ever. The servant gets pay, so much pay for so much work, and no more. The son is an heir, has his present wants supplied from the family funds, and waits for the inheritance. The servant is particular about his pay, and must have it regularly, and often strikes for higher wages; the son abides in the family, and shares the privations as well as the abundance. The servant keeps account with his master of debt and credit; the father and son do no such thing, but are one in their interests.

Under the law, men serve God. Under grace they are sons of God, and serve Jesus, the elder brother of the family. The servant finds the commands in a written code. The son has them engraven on his heart, in his very being. The servant addresses his Master as "Almighty God, Lord of heaven and earth." The son says, "Our Father, which art in heaven."

What is your calling, that of a servant, or a son? Is your covenant of works, or of grace? Are you trying to do duty so as to get a blessing? Then you are but a servant. Is it contrary to your nature to serve God, and are you striving to obey to please him? Then you need the Spirit of adoption, and to be made a partaker of the divine nature. Are you trying to serve God, and do you find it hard work? Come to Jesus who says—"I will give rest." You need a change of relationship from a servant to a son. Then obedience will be natural. You will then become interested in the work as the Father is interested, and will not think so much about the pay.

Many persons who are called backsliders are merely servants, who have quit work for some reason. Many who are yet zealous are but servants, who are still at work. When a man serves God, he goes at work just as he is, and does the best he can, and loves his Master, and recommends him to all as good pay, and thinks his engagement is for all eternity; but he is mistaken. His engagement may be for life, but he only possesses temporal life. He has no Spirit of eternal life. None but sons and daughters receive that; and he engaged as a servant, and did not seek the Spirit of adoption. He thought serving the devil was poor pay, and so he changed masters, and that was all. If he wants eternal life, he must have a new covenant; that is, the covenant of sonship. He must apply to God to receive the Spirit of adoption whereby he can say, "Abba, Father."

He wants eternal life, but he cannot have it as a servant. He must become a son, and a partaker of the divine nature. His nature is carnal and sinful. He needs the work of the Holy Spirit to go all through him and drive out sin, and take entire possession of his powers. He must become a "new creature" to be a son. And when this Holy Spirit dwells in him, he then possesses the "power of an endless life," and he is sure of eternal life. He then goes forth to work under the direction Jesus, and he may labor side by side with the servant, and men looking on might discover no difference in their labor; but when you converse with the two, then you will discover which is the servant and which is the son.

The church is filled with servants, and there are too few children. The cry is, believe and do, and live. It should be, believe, and live, and do. Regeneration is needed. The Holy Ghost power is needed. Men think they are all right because they are servants. Alas, the delusion! They need to become new creatures. They need the Holy Spirit to dwell in their bodies. 1 Cor. 6. 19. Men think because the mind is right, they are right. But what is their mind? To serve God, that is all. And though this is right as far as it goes, it is but a covenant of works, and is temporal. It does not go far enough. Their bodies need to become temples of the Holy Spirit. Then they will be sons, and will feel within them the quickening power, and it will be natural to them to do the works of God.—World's Crisis.

Stone-Cutting.

In a great house there are stones formed into different shapes, according to the design of the architect, by the skill of the artisan.

In the preparation of these stones, it sometimes happens that the strength, skill, and tools of the stone-cutter are sorely put to in order to get the stone into its required shape, and that by a peculiarity in the stone. This peculiarity is known by the masons as a "bone." The unpracticed eye would not see it, for apparently the stone is the same throughout. But with this apparent sameness there is—sometimes in the center, sometimes nearer the surface—a part of the stone much harder than the rest. If the mason has not detected it before he commenced operations on the stone, he is made aware of it as soon as the chisel comes in contact with the "bone" either by the tool breaking, or starting up from it. Well, what is to be done? If he takes his sharp tools, and prepares them as for the ordinary stone, they break, and so he will suffer loss in his tools. Shall he throw the stone away? Nay, his master can't afford to lose that stone, for it has cost him as much as those which had no "bone." He pauses and selects his tools. He takes those that have been well worn—his experienced tools (if it be lawful to apply the word to tools), and sharpens them by rubbing them on the stone. He begins work. His blows are harder now than formerly, and his progress is slower. But when the stone is finished and polished, the "bone" is the smoothest part of the stone, and that because of its hardness. Such are the materials out of which the living temple is built up, such the process of discipline by which the living stones are hewn and polished, and fitted in their places.—Christian Treasury.

Weeds in Society.

I don't know of any kind of labor which requires as much patience as weeding. Nor of any which so tempts one to moralize. I am weeding. Well, what is a weed? Here is a poppy from the hills. There are millions of them in some of the wheat fields, and the farmers try hard to exterminate them. They call them weeds out in the country and pull them up or plow them under. But this poppy I am cultivating with great care. Beside it is a bunch of alfalfa. The farmer who has a field full of such bunches rejoices greatly. Thousands are cultivating the alfalfa, and hoping that it will enrich them with five crops of hay in a year. But I pull it up as it grows beside and overshadows my wild poppy. I call the alfalfa a weed in my grounds. Why is it a weed to me and not to the farmer? and why is the poppy a weed to him and not to me? What is a weed? Webster says it is "any plant that is useless or troublesome;" but alfalfa is not useless, Many weeds are valuable as medicines. This is not a good difinition, and the lexicographer seems to suspect as much, for he adds this note: "The weed has no definite application to any particular plant or species of plants. Whatever plants grow among corn, or grass, or in hedges, or elsewhere, and which are of no use to man, injurious to crops, or unsightly or out of place, are denominated weeds." Well, we stumbled on a definition at last. A weed is not necessarily "unsightly;" it may be beautiful. It is not necessarily injurious; it may be useful. But it is everywhere and always a plant out of place—a plant, however ornamental or valuable in itself, that is where it is not wanted. Poppies are out of place in a wheat-field, and alfalfa is out of place in a garden. Hence we will pull up in one locality what we would cultivate in another.

There are weeds in society, weeds in our churches, weeds in congress, in all our legislatures and conventions. Men out of place—intelligent, amiable, conscientious, yet useless, because they are not in the sphere to which they are adapted. I knew a man years ago who was a very good shoemaker, but thought he ought to be a lawyer. So he changed his lap-stone for a Blackstone, and instead of an honest and useful mechanic he became a miserable pettifogger. Out of his place, he had just brains enough to stir up strife and become as great a nuisance as the Canada thistle. I have known other men who were highly gifted and cultured, but who would not use their talents for the good of society, who would not let their foliage shed and refresh the weary, or the blossoms of their genius ripen into the fruits of useful deeds. Such men in their selfish seclusion are weeds out of place. If any of our readers feel that they are useless, it may be that they are like the alfalfa in my garden; that they have drifted out of their true sphere and need only to get where they really belong and try to do their duty there in order to be both useful and happy. There are not a few Christians over here and elsewhere who are weeds because they neglect to occupy that position in the church and in the great benevolent movements of the day to which they are called by the providence and spirit of God. They grow, they prosper in material things, but they bear no fruit and choke the plants around them that try to be useful. Sad will be the reckoning hereafter with those who have luxuriated as weeds in the richest soils of this life.—Herald and Presbyter.

Passing Thoughts.

This religious fermentation of the present day is nothing else than the struggle of reason and thought to penetrate to God. When they have arrived there, they shall worship and sing praises to the Lord, and then the first commandment shall be fulfilled, that tells man: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind; that is, with all thy power. When a man dies, men inquire what he has sent before him; angels inquire what he has sent before him. The peace of God comes by nothing external, but by complete annihilation of self-will and self-interest. The strongest swimmers are often drowned, because they trust to their power and venture too far. God's aim in afflicting his children is either to keep them from sin, or, when they have sinned, to bring them to a repentance of it. Mercy among the virtues is like the moon among the stars—not so sparkling and vivid as many, but dispensing a calm radiance that hallows the whole. It is the bow that rests upon the bosom of the cloud when the storm has passed. It is the light that hovers about the Judgment-seat. In character, in manner, in style, in all things, the supreme excellence is simplicity.

When a man goes thirsty to the well, his thirst is not allayed merely by going there; on the contrary, it is increased by every step he goes. It is by what he draws out of the well, that his thirst is satisfied. And, just so, it is not by the mere bodily exercise of waiting upon ordinances, that you will ever come to peace, but by tastin- -f

Jesus in the ordinances, whose flesh is meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed. Do not form the habit of making excuses. If you have done wrong, be willing to confess it. Do not try to hide it, or to throw the blame on another. A person who is quick at making excuses is not likely to be good at anything else. Be honest, be frank, be truthful. Does God care for worship? If he cares for love, confidence, reverence, he does. Worship is simply the expression of these virtues. Philosophy always tends to represent God as indifferent, cold, impassable; but the Bible represents him as tender, deeply concerned for us, interested in our conduct, pleased when we are good, grieved when we are bad. The joy of the world is a troubled, shallow, noisy brook; the joy of religion is a deep stream,—deep, serene and clear; delightful to the taste, and sweet to the soul.—The Christian.

American Girls in Europe.

It pains me to say it, but perhaps we may be benefitted by seeing ourselves as others see us, the opinions that American girls in Europe have won are anything but creditable and desirable. While visiting a school at Frankfort-on-Maine, I asked if there were American pupils, and the preceptor replied: "No, we do not take them, they dress so extravagantly, they think and talk so much of their clothes, that they disturb the quiet, simple ways of our German girls; and we find their influence does us more hurt than their money does us good." In Dresden I knew an American lady who could not find a private school where they would take her daughter, for similar reasons. Who could have imagined for a moment that when the bondage of trailing street dresses was once removed, and short ones sanctioned, that you could ever find human beings in the shape of women yielding homage again to the most filthy and abominable of all fashions? But you see, even now, on the ruins of burned cities, trailed offerings of silks and Thibets.

So long as women were kept in idleness, or allowed to do only such work as confined them indoors, there was less need of practicality in dress. Now that she competes with men in most of the activities of life, shall the style of dress not be changed to meet this new dispensation? Or shall we still see her in this bondage of attire, that enslaves her at every step? You will find weeks of labor spent, with each change of season, in making or remodeling clothes that do not stand gauged by the latest ukase of fashion. You are invited to an evening entertainment in Germany, at the house of a professor, perhaps, where you meet with persons the most intellectual and cultivated—persons whose names are known and honored in all lands; the hostess appears in a quaint dress of drab silk, that served as her wedding one fourteen years before; the bodice is long, the sleeves are mutton-legged, but dear Mrs. Grundy's presence is not felt; no one seems to scan her from head to foot and exclaim, "How horribly she is dressed, how dowdy she looks!" Six months' time, at least, would have been expended on that dress had it kept pace all over those years with the ever recurring changes of fashion; and in that time, with the cares of a family—and they are not few that devolve upon the wife of a scantily paid German professor—she has learned, with her children, to speak English so well as to be able to entertain those of her guests speaking only that language. You will find, as a rule in all lands, that the most cultivated and best bred people are the most simple and unpretendingly dressed. You find in Europe women dressed suited to their occupation; the French shop girl in a neatly, plainly made black alpaca. The homespun and woven woollen gown of the German servant girl meets her necessities for years. The dress of the English and Irish servant girls is made of some substantial material. But let them emigrate to America, and what do you see? this epidemic rage for dress attacking them immediately. As soon as Bridget has gathered together a few spare dollars, she takes her mistress for a prototype, and goes forth, prayer-book in hand, to St. Xavier's as gorgeously arrayed as the mistress to St. Paul's.—Herald of Health.

CURIOSITIES OF LANGUAGE.—The Hindus are said to have no word for "friend." The Italians have no equivalent for our "humility." The Russian dictionary gives a word the definition of which is "not to have enough buttons on your footman's waistcoat;" a second means "to kill over again;" a third "to earn by dancing." The Germans call a thimble a "finger hat," which it certainly is, and a grasshopper a "hay horse." A glove with them is a "hand-shoe," showing that they wore shoes before gloves. The French, strange to say, have no verb "to stand," nor can a Frenchman speak of "kicking" any one. The nearest approach he, in his politeness, makes to it, is to threaten to "give a blow with his foot," the same thing, probably, to the recipient in either case, but it seems to want the directness, the energy, of our "kick." The terms "up-stairs" and "down-stairs" are also unknown in French.

An affectionate care of brutes for their dead has been considered either very rare or inexistent, though it would seem to have been shown by monkeys. . . Here is an extract from Forbe's 'Oriental Memoirs:' 'One of a shooting party, under a banian tree, killed a female monkey and carried it to his tent, which was soon surrounded by forty or fifty of the tribe, who made a great noise and seemed disposed to attack their aggressor. They retreated when he presented his fowling piece, the dreadful effect of which they had witnessed and appeared to understand. The head of the troop, however, stood his ground, chattering furiously; the sportsman, who perhaps felt some compunction for having killed one of the family, did not like to fire at the creature, and nothing short of firing would suffice to drive him off. At length he came to the door of the tent, and finding threats of no avail, began a lamentable moaning, and by the most expressive gesture seemed to beg for the dead body. It was given him; he took it sorrowfully in his arms, and bore it away to his companions. They who were witnesses of this extraordinary scene, resolved never again to fire at one of the monkey race.'"

In Iceland, if a boy is a criminal, they don't punish him, but the father, because the authorities think there must be some flaw in the home government, or he would not be a criminal.

Hard as it is to understand the difficult parts of the Bible, it is a great deal harder to practice the simple parts.

Children's Corner.

The Old Clock.

One Sabbath day Arthur was left at home alone, while all the rest of the family attended church. Instead of regarding the day as he should, in the quiet persual of the Bible and other good books, he made it a day of self-amusement. As soon as all were gone, Arthur began to search all the curious nooks and corners in the time-honored dwelling. The garret was explored, and many rare curiosities exhumed. Ancient desks and drawers were examined, revealing their curious contents to his impertinent and childish curiosity.

An old clock stood in one corner, with a tall, gaunt, brown case. Within this dark, hollow closet, Arthur had often peered, but he had not been allowed to examine very closely the mysteries of the clock case. Now was a fine opportunity. He opened the narrow door. The long pendulum was swinging back and forth at regular intervals with a loud tick, tick, tick, tick. Two large cylindrical tin weights, and two very little lead weights, were hanging by small cords.

Arthur had often seen his father "wind up the clock," and he knew it was done by pulling down the little weights. "It would be rare sport," he thought, "to wind up the old clock." He would make the attempt, at any rate. So, taking hold of the small weights, he tugged away right manfully. The wheels purred, and the great weight began to rise.

"Faster," said Arthur, "go up faster," and giving a sudden pull the cord broke, and down came the heavy weight with a loud noise. Then there was a terrible whirring among the clock wheels for a moment, and then it stopped. The ticking ceased, and the pendulum stood still.

"Oh, what have I done now?" cried Arthur, in distress. "Oh, what will father say to me when he sees what I have done?" Arthur closed the clock door, and for the remainder of the day, until his parents returned, was a very humble, quiet boy.

When his father returned, on looking at the old clock, he perceived that it had stopped. Opening the clock door, he saw that the cord of one of the weights had broken, and that the weight had fallen to the bottom of the case.

"How is this, Arthur; did you know that the clock is stopped?"

"Yes, sir," replied Arthur. "I heard a great noise in the clock case, and when I went and looked in, behold it was silent."

Mr. Milton made no more inquiries, supposing that it was an accidental occurrence. Night came, and little Arthur went to bed as usual. His father had tied the cord, and the clock was ticking as loudly as ever. To Arthur, it ticked louder than ever. It seemed to say, in the silence of the night:

"Boy! boy! boy!" "A lie! a lie! a lie!" "Own it! own it! own it!"

Arthur did not sleep much. Conscience whispered to him, and with the words of the old clock, said: "Arthur, you have told a lie."

Early in the morning he arose and gazed up into the face of the old clock. It looked very sternly at him. "Quick! quick! quick! quick!" said the clock. So the poor boy went to his father and told him all with a very sorrowful heart. His father freely forgave him. And he prayed that God would forgive him, and never suffer him to tell a lie again.

Dear children, never tell an untruth. Lying is a low, mean vice, and very wicked.—Chris. Press.

The Little Loaf.

In a time of famine a rich man sent for the poorest children in the town, and said to them:

"There is a basket of bread; you may each come every day and take a loaf until it pleases God to send better times."

The children attacked the basket and disputed as to which should have the largest loaf, and went away without once thanking their benefactor.

Only Frances, a very poor but cleanly girl, modestly remained behind, and had the smallest loaf which was left in the basket. She gratefully returned thanks, and went home quietly. One day the children behaved very badly indeed, and poor Frances received a loaf much smaller than the rest, but when she took it home and her mother cut it open, a number of pieces of silver fell on the floor.

"Go and return this money immediately; it must have been put in the bread by mistake."

Frances went directly with it to the gentleman, who said:

"My dear child it was no mistake. I had the money put into that loaf to reward you. Remain always as peaceable and contented. Those who are satisfied with a little always bring blessings upon themselves and their family, and will pass happily through the world. Do not thank me, but thank God, who put into your heart treasure of a contented and grateful spirit, and who has given me the will and opportunity to be useful to those who are in need of assistance.—Selected

News of the Week.

The City.

The Inter-State Exposition opened on Wednesday evening of last week with an attendance of several thousand. The details of the fair are in much better order than last year, and in some departments there is hardly a comparison. The collection of paintings has probably never been excelled in the West. The machinery and floral departments are also quite attractive.—The question of insurance is now becoming a very important one for this city. After the July fire the National Board of Underwriters in New York decided to withdraw their agencies by October 1st unless certain measures for the prevention of fire were adopted and carried out by the city authorities. Nothing has been done but to order that no more wooden buildings shall be built inside the city limits. The water pipes laid through the business portions of the city years ago are now altogether inadequate. The lack of water prevented an early victory over the last great fire. If the insurance companies withdraw, the business interests of Chicago will be very seriously injured.——Mrs. William A. Bartlett, wife of the pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church of this city, died recently of the heart disease in Berne, Switzerland, where she was traveling with her husband.

The South.

On Monday a mass meeting was held in the streets of New Orleans to prevent the farther seizure of arms sent to the White Leagues, by the State authorities. A committee was sent to order Gov. Kellogg to resign. He refused. The crowd then armed and attacked the police. Some 20 persons were killed and 50 wounded in the fight. The mob barricaded the streets and the city on Tuesday morning was in their power. At 9 o'clock the State militia, arsenals and the State house were surrendered and Gov. Kellogg took refuge in the Custom House which was held by U. S. troops.

The Beecher Affair.

This noisome and festering mass has broken out again. After a few day's quiet Moulton published last week another long statement replying to Beecher's testimony before the committee, and other allegations. He reaffirms the charge of adultery with Mrs. Tilton confessed to him by Beecher and states another confession of adultery with another woman. If ever the reputation a clergyman was dragged through the mire it is Beecher's, and perhaps none ever so exposed himself to such usage. Moulton's statement does not seem to produce great effect, as the public are tired of "statements" and criminations. All other documents in the case aside, Mr. Beecher's own statement to the committee shows him to be a most unreliable man, and his own theory of his innocence of the crime of adultery sinks him lower than the theory of his guilt. If Mr. Beecher is not the victim of violent animal passion and violent temptation, then what follows? Then he has chosen Moulton and Tilton, for whom piracy has no parallel as his boon companions for years, with no motive but elective affinity to make him do so. Moulton, a swearing non-professor, is his Sabbath-day confidant and bosom friend, to whom he sends money paid him by professed Christians for misleading them, by thousands on thousands; and even after Moulton extorts a paper from him by a pistol, which he extorted from a sick woman by her love of him; this same Moulton is the man whom he expects to spend his eternity with in heaven! Now on the theory of his adultery, all is plain. They had his secret. He dreaded exposure, and so was their slave. If he is not a penitent adulterer he is something worse.

Political.

Judge Poland, of Vermont, since the election, which in his district failed to sustain either of the candidates, has withdrawn from the contest. His constituents do not like his action in the Credit Mobilier case, press-gag law, etc., with which he was prominently connected.——The State Reform Convention of Michigan met last week. The platform advocates a reduction of the number and diminution of the power of officers under the National Government; reduction of salaries to the extent that no fund can be raised for political purposes from office-holders; that political opinion should not be a reason for appointment to office, nor ground for removal; prohibition of recommendation to office by any Senator or Representative in Congress, and the election of all Federal officers by the people; speedy return to hard money; all banking, State and National, should be free; a tariff for revenues; a just and equitable system of taxation.——The Minnesota Republican Convention met last Wednesday.——The Arkansas Democratic Convention on Thursday renominated Gov. Baxter of the late gubernatorial war in that State. The nomination was considered equivalent to an election but Baxter replied that he considered it for the best interests of the State that he should decline the nomination.——The election in Colorado has gone Democratic, it is said on account of the appointment of Gov. McCook who was unpopular.

General.

Gen. Miles has an engagement with 500 Cheyennes near the Red River in Texas, on the 30th ult. in which 25 or 30 Indians were killed and the rest driven far to the west.——Bands of Sioux have appeared in Nebraska near North Platte city and have committed depredations and it is believed killed some settlers.——A number of the Ku-Klux believed to have been engaged in the murder of negro prisoners at Gibson, Tenn., are under arrest.——The Grand Jury at Washington have concluded their examination in the celebrated safe burgalry case, and have found indictments against Harrington, Attorney for the District, Whitely, chief of the U. S. detective force and several other parties. During the District investigation last summer, Harrington's safe, which contained papers proving the frauds of the Shepherd ring, was mysteriously robbed. This was a bogus affair to get rid of testimony.

Foreign.

Seventy-four mills employing 13,000 hands have stopped. Subscriptions for the strikers have been opened by the trades unions throughout the manufacturing districts.——A terrible collision occurred last week on one of the best managed English railroads, the Great Eastern, near Norwich. Twenty persons were killed outright and fifty wounded.——An International Law Association was held at Geneva, Switzerland, last week. David D. Field, of New York, made a speech explaining that the objects of the society were to obviate the necessity of war.

Home and Health Hints.

So universal is the law that cruelty to the animal injures the meat, that an eminent English physician, Dr. Carpenter, in a recent letter to the London Times, assures us that the meats of animals which have been made fat by overfeeding will sometimes produce gastric diseases in those who eat them. In England it has been found that the flesh of hares chased and worried by dogs, becomes diseased, and soon putrefies. Old hunters tell us they do not like to eat the meat of deer which have been run and worried by dogs, and that they sometimes, when hunting, shoot dogs to prevent their worrying the deer, and so spoiling the meat. The same doctrine applies to game caught and tortured in steel traps. In an essay which took the prize at the New England Agricultural Fair of 1872, I find that the flesh of animals killed when in a state of great excitment, soon putrefies; and that the flesh of animals killed instantly without pain, is found to contain elements indispensable to the easy and complete digestion of the meat (among which is one named "glycogene"), and which elements are almost or entirely wanting in animals that have suffered before dying.—G. T. Angell, Sanitarian for Sept.

Preserving Potatoes.—A correspondent of the Scientific American says that he has tried the following method of keeping potatoes for years with complete success, though in some instances the tubers were diseased when taken out of the ground: "Dust over the floor of the bin with lime and put in about six or seven inches deep of potatoes, and dust with lime as before. Put in six or seven inches of potatoes again; repeat the operation until all are stored away. One bushel of lime will do for forty bushels of potatoes, though more will not hurt them—the lime rather improving the flavor than otherwise."

Husk Mats.

These very useful articles can be made by boys at their leisure. A writer in the Rural New-Yorker tells how to make them:—Separate the corn husks from the stem and sort them, throwing aside all that are brittle or decayed. Dampen them a little by dipping them into warm water, and wring them dry as possible if they are to be braided immediately. Select nine good sized husks, and tie a strong twine around them about one inch from the butt ends, which should be even. Separate them below the twine into three equal parts and proceed to braid, adding a husk or two as each strand is lapped over, leaving an inch or so projecting at the butt end of each husk for the brush. The braid should be about one inch in width. Sew the braids together on the smooth side, with strong twine and coarse needle, shaping them into oblong, round or square mats, as fancy dictates. Some prefer to dip the husks into a red, blue or brown dye before braiding, which makes them prettier of course. Every outside door should have one.

—When you make a mustard plaster use no water whatever, but mix the mustard with the white of an egg and the result will be a plaster that will "draw" perfectly, but will not produce a blister, even upon the skin of an infant, no matter how long it is allowed to remain upon the part.

Farm and Garden.

To Destroy Lice.

The best preparation for the removal of lice from cattle, young or old, is a salve of fresh lard ground up with fine sulphur (one ounce of sulphur to four ounces of lard) and raw linseed oil mixed with kerosene oil in the proportion of four parts of linseed to one part of kerosene. These should be rubbed from between the ears all along the backbone to the root of the tail, about twice a week. Two applications are generally sufficient. It is not in any degree hurtful if it is licked by the cattle. Lice which have been placed in contact with a small quantity of either of these mixtures were immediately killed, while mercurial ointment and carbolic acid failed to kill them in several hours.

To Shoe an Unruly Horse.

A gentleman long resident in Mexico, says that a good way to manage a horse that will not be shod, is to take a chord the size of a common bed-cord, put it in the mouth of the horse like a bit, and tie it tightly on the animal's head, passing his left ear under the string, not painfully tight, but tight enough to keep the ear down and the cord in its place. This done pat the horse gently on the side of the head, and command him to follow. It subdues any horse, and it becomes as gentle and obedient as a well-trained dog.

Keeping Accounts.

The great mass of the farmers of this country keep no accounts at all—not even a memorandum book in which they note down current expenses, etc. The idea of "keeping books" has a terror about it, which deters most people whose success in life does not absolutely hang upon their keeping accurate accounts to have much to do with them. The amount of money which passes through the hands of a small farmer in any part of the country is so small that his recollections about money transactions are usually pretty accurate, and the real necessity of spending the few minutes a day necessary to keep tolerably accurate accounts is not apparent to them, and will not be until proved.

It is not our object now to enter into an argument to convince any one of the desirableness of keeping accounts, but to show how it may be done conviently and easily. The writer has for some time used the following system for keeping his family and farm accounts, which are kept together, and it certainly is simple, convenient and appears to be all that is required.

The book is ruled with double dollar-and-cent columns. In one of these columns the expenses are set down, in the other, the receipts. The book need not be larger than a common school copy-book, and three minutes a day will serve to make all the entries. If the farmer is cold, and his fingers stiff, his wife or one of his daughters will gladly take the pen. Oftener than otherwise, we think the wife, if not overburdened with the cares of household and children, would be the best one to keep the accounts. In a great many cases, dimes and half-dimes slip away for personal indulgences (glasses of something warm, or tobacco), which, were it the good wife's daily duty to make the record, wou'd not be spent.

These accounts ought to be balanced as often as once a month. It will be observed that this book, if accurately kept, will only show the transactions in ready money, and hence should be called cash accounts. We almost all have, of necessity, another class of accounts to keep. It is not always possible or best to pay cash, and we may make little debts and give credits all the time. The settlements are often made in produce, labor, or something besides money, but these should be just as accurate a record of the transactions for all that. With those persons with whom a running account is kept, there should be an account opened in another book, and some pages devoted to it. In other cases, a simple memorandum of the transactions may be sufficient. It requires no knowledge of book-keeping, or skill as a mathematician. Any child of sixteen can do all the work, and the advantages are, it is safe to say, beyond computation.—American Agriculturist.

Stearns' Complete Works on Masonry.

This book contains the "INQUIRY," "LETTERS ON MASONRY" and "A NEW CHAPTER ON MASONRY," bound together—three books in one.
Price, $1.25.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in th judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Athoists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,
Price, $1.35.

It is computed that in the United States, there is enclosed with fences 250,505,474 acres of land. There are 1,619-199,628 rods of fence at a total cost of $1,747,549,931. New York has 168,539,749 rods of fencing, costing $228,874,911, Pennsylvania is next on the list, with 156,377,-821 rods, worth $179,834,464, Ohio is next with fencing, valued at $155,580,673. The fences of the United States are worth as much as all the farm animals in the country. For every dollar invested in live stock, another is required for fences. The facts set forth are important, and farmers should adopt some system to do away with the necessity of such enormous outlay for fences.

—There are now published in the United Kingdom 1,256 newspapers, distributed as follows: England, 1,111, of which 268 are published in London; Wales, 60; Scotland 134; Ireland, 134; British Isles, 17. Of these there are 82 daily papers published in England, 12 in Scotland, 19 in Ireland, and 2 in the British Isles. This does not embrace magazines, of which there 639.

ODD FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1874, by Ezra A. Cook & Co., with the Librarian of Congress Washington, D. C.

GOLDEN RULE DEGREE CONTINUED.

(Here the Patriarchs promptly join in singing the following:)

ODE.

No more shall nation against nation rise,
Nor ardent warriors meet with hateful eyes,
Nor fields with gleaming steel be covered o'er,
The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more;
But useless lances into scythes shall bend
And the broad falcon in a plowshare end.
No sigh nor murmur the wide world shall hear;
From every face be wiped off every tear;
All crimes shall cease and ancient fraud shall fail,
Returning Justice lift aloft her scale,
Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
And white-robed Innocence from heaven descend.

CONCLUDING CHARGE, GOLDEN RULE DEGREE.

Chief Patriarch: Such is the era for which Kings and Patriarchs waited and sought but never found. We trust the lesson of this night will be deeply engraven upon your heart. The ceremonies you have witnessed are especially designed to impress you with the great principle of toleration. In the present condition of mankind, owing to the prejudices of education or habit, it can not be expected that men should think alike. This is philosophically impossible. But, honest in our own opinions, we should accord the same honesty to others, and while we should in no instance tolerate licentiousness or vice, we should overlook all difference of a minor nature, which may divide us from our brethren, and cordially unite with the virtuous and good, irrespective of country, religion or politics, in the discharge of those duties which all agree to be paramount. As a brother of this sublime degree it is expected that you will always act upon the Golden Rule, doing unto others as you would have them, under similar circumstances, do unto you. Thus will you co-operate with the great mission of Odd-fellowship and hasten the period when man shall hail his brother man with fraternal greetings. When wickedness and falsehood shall be driven from the earth and the race of Adam form a universal family; acknowledging the God of the universe as their father and every child of man as a brother. When, in short, one law shall bind all nations, the continents and the islands of the earth, and that law be the law of love.

Brethren, this degree is closed with solemn ceremonies; be attentive while the High Priest repeats a prayer.

PRAYER, GOLDEN RULE DEGREE.

O Thou who art the Creator of all and before whom the nations of the earth are as a drop of a bucket and as the smallest dust of the balance, vouchsafe thine aid and grant that we may be solemn and thoughtful, and bear with us continually a remembrance of our obligations to thee and to one another. Let the light of Thy truth guide our brother who has at this time been instructed in the truths and duties of the Golden Rule. And do Thou enable him to treasure up those truths and practice those duties all the days of his life, and wilt thou receive him at last to thyself. Amen.

Chief Patriarch to Candidate: Brother, you are now entitled to be hailed as a Patriarch of the Golden Rule and to take rank as such in our Encampment. The Junior Warden will conduct you to a seat.

INITIATION, ROYAL PURPLE DEGREE.

The candidate being prepared and blindfolded by the Junior Warden in the ante-room, is led to the inside door.

Junior Warden (giving the Enter Sign of the degree—four raps on the door): A weary Patriarch seeks admission here.

Sentinel (opening the door): The appeal is not in vain; thou art welcome. They enter and the door closes: then as though he had just observed the candidate he rushes after him exclaiming: But hold! Who have we here?

Junior Warden: A friend whom I have brought by warrant of our Chief. Know ye not the sign?

Senior Warden (interposing as they approach near him): Rest! Knows he not there is no rest but one? That once launched on life's broad wilderness, thence forward all is turmoil even from the cradle to the grave? Rest can not be found on earth. Behold the joyous child basking in affection's sun, its careless hours are each beguiled with some new hope of beauty! See next the gladsome youth; his ardent heart, deep filled with young ambition's fires, is ever mounting to some new achievement! Then view manhood's loftier state and mark through what immensity of danger, toil and strife he struggles on to reach some wished-for, though imaginary goal! Thus it is ever. Proud aspirations and never ending hope lure on man's restless spirit, till exhausted nature sinks, and the weary body finds repose beneath its kindred earth.

Junior Warden: Nay but my friend is sound of body and of mind. The world is before him tempting his stern energy, and he has confidence to stem its wild and reckless torrent, shunning the rocks and whirlpools which have proved the wreck of other's hopes.

Senior Warden: Then let him onward! Go on! Be that the word, even the counter sign. Go on! But give him safe guidance and the best protection.

Junior Warden: A guide has already been provided.

Senior Warden: Place him in charge then and remember the word.

Junior Warden: Guide, here is a friend who is journeying through the desert, and would find favor with the Patriarchs.

Guide: If entrusted to me I will conduct him safely; but is he prepared for the hard, uncertain fare that awaits him by the way?

Junior Warden: No, except through mere intimation; but you can advise him as you proceed.

Guide: Well, be it so, and take your leave, for we have a long and toilsome travel to perform. Candidate bids adieu to Junior Warden. You are safe with me, my friend, though if you hear me spoken of no terms of flattery will be used, as you will find, for all who journey here abuse their destiny in the vain hope to thus evade a just accountantability. Be cautious now, we are near the First Watch, an unerring indication of our onward progress.

First Watch: Hold! How entered you the wilderness?

A. by Guide.—Lawfully.

First Watch: Have you the counter sign?

A.—Yes; or rather my Pilgrim has.

First Watch: Your Pilgrim! Who entrusted him to you?

A.—His friend, and he did well.

First Watch: I have seen such as you before, and know you think so; yet many have been misled upon this route. But now to talk is profitless. Stranger, give me the word.

Candidate: "Go on."

First Watch: Aye, go on, and beware how you tread. The way is encompassed with difficulties. On the one hand is a straight and narrow path, presenting a toilsome and laborious progress; while on the other your safety is hourly endangered in a broad and expansive plain, beautiful to the sight, but abounding with infections the most poisonous, and sinks of corruption the most destructive to human happiness. Death even in its most frightful shapes, lurks constantly by the wayside. May heaven grant you safe deliverance.

Guide: Come, my Pilgrim, we must not listen to that old man. Here the path is narrow [some of the brethren crowd the candidate along] and we meet impediments, such as too often discourage a timorous spirit. But press on, be not discouraged and now [entering the woods] we seem encircled by a wild and dismal thicket. The living here, I have been told, is very bad, for the traveler is often in want of water as well as bread. But here is the Second Watch, another index of the speed of our career.

Second Watch: Stand! What is your object in entering this desert?

Guide: It is decreed that we shall travel through it.

Second Watch: Have you passed the First Watch?

A.—Yes. He directed us to go on.

Second Watch: Then I will not detain you, except merely to admonish the pilgrim that as the road grows rougher he be not tempted to seek momentary ease at the expense of future pain and sorrow. A single abberation may tarnish and forever overcast a rash though well-meaning spirit; one false step may cost a limb or even life itself. Beware then that you plunge not down some dark and deep abyss, involving disaster the most sad and irreparable. Beware how you proceed.

Guide: Come, let us go; heed not that dotard moralizer We can make our way [starts on]; yet how strangely varied are the paths before us. Merriment in a distant part of the room. Hark! heard you the voice of mirth and revelry! How fascinating, how easy of access is the path which leads thaway! Yet it is beset with adders. Lust, intemperance, sensuality, vice in all its hideous forms and all its horrors, lies deep concealed beneath its tempting blandishments. We must not be deceived. Sound of clashing arms. There again from another direction comes the clang of arms and sounds of deadly strife, a sad display of worldly glory. When cruel war tramples meek humanity in the dust, it is the stern warrior's sport to gratify the statesman's proud ambition. Fame would tempt us on, but we must keep aloof lest we be slain, or, surviving, imbibe the same fell spirit of destruction. No, we will not turn aside, neither for fleeting pleasure nor the soldier's honors. They who till the soil or ply the loom and hammer are far more happy. There surely is some good in store for us. We will cross the rugged path passing a ruins or other rough place and see what lies beyond. Ah! what is this? Can we already have come so far? How quick time flies! How rapidly we travel! I see by the morning light that our course lies down a deep declivity which has to us no visible end, and yet must terminate our pilgrimage. Be careful! They stop.

Third Watch: Stand! Whence came you?

Guide: Through the desert.

Third Watch: And passed the watches?

Guide: Yes; informed of our purpose, they bade us go on.

Third Watch: You have done well in arriving at this Watch, for ere they get this far on their journey, many sink by the wayside, overeome with diffieulties which they can not surmouut. You are now far advaneed, though some troubles, such as you have passed, still appear iu the distanee. There is yet another Wateh whom many have tried in vain to reaeh. Go on! My best wishes attend you.

Guide: Yes, we will go from such a comforter as this; but so it is all along this road, and no one ean ever judge of his treatment till he reach its end, and then, alas! it is too late to cure it! Our progress, however, should be more calm, much less exciting, and, with our present experience, more free from danger. Your eyes are covered for your good. All who travel here are blinded. They neither see nor know what may befall them. A sudden change has come upon the air, indicative of an approaching storm. [Sound of thunder.*] It is near us, but we are under the protection of a covenant to dispel the utmost wretchedness of man. But here is the Fourth Watch.

Fourth Watch: How far have you come?

Guide: Through the wilderness, traveling by night as well as by day.

Fourth Watch: Pilgrim, I congratulate you on having journied so far with so bad a guide.

Guide: He that has experieneed my care is best qualified to judge of me, good or bad. Few would desire to try the journey over again, even could they endure its fatigue.

Fourth Watch: I merely apprized the Pilgrim of the company he is in. I am rejoiced at his arrival, and, i aduiitted to the society of the Patriarchs, he will find the way more pleasant and the paths more smooth.

Guide: Well, we will move on and endeavor to find so great a recompense for our toil. Whoever travels this road is sure to be ill treated· Yet it is better to endure this than incur the hazard of still more dangerous wilds which ravenous beasts of prey infest. Sounds of music. Ah! That sounds like the cheerful music of the Patriarchs. They come this way, let us stand and we can join them as they pass. The procession passes towards the tent aud is joined by the Guide and Candidate. Ho! Here is the High Priest's Tent, aud we are safe! Guards of the tent, I have a Pilgrim who desires to see the High Priest.

Guard of Tent: Your Pilgrim shall be gratified.

(To the High Priest.) Most Worthy Sir, a Pilgrim is in waiting who desires to be presented to you.

High Priest: Be his wish kindly indulged.

Guide: He is here. (Presents him and while doing so removes the bandage from his eyes.)

High Priest to Candidate: Brother, I affectionately welcome you to this innermost temple of our order. Your progress hither may have appeared tedious, but we trust that the lessons you have gathered by the way will prove profitable. All human excellence is the reward of perseverence, toil and danger, such as we have endeavored to picture to the imagination in the mimic journey of life through which you have been conducted; a scene that has not been rehearsed for idle amusement, but to awaken rational meditation in a mind as mature as yours should now be. The uncertainties of life are ever present to the understanding of considerate men. Literally blindfolded and beset on every side with danger and temptation we struggle through this earthly pilgrimage. With desires never gratified we are the subjects of endless toil and care; of never ceasing hope and never ending disappointment, The false and flattering charms, which in the distance so attract our admiration, all disappear the moment they are placed within our reach. Frail mortals that we are; we know not what a day or an hour may bring forth. Encompassed with peril on every side; with the seeds of disease implanted in our nature, and the very air we breathe impregnated with death,all the promises of life are but dust. They fade as a leaf and pass as the shadow that fleeth away. How essential then that we should understand our true position and keep constantly in view the realities that surround us. How essential that we should learn to practice those living and immortal virtues which, while they secure ultimate happiness, contribute so largely to smooth the troubles and soften the asperities of life,

Having now assumed the title of Patriarch, it becomes you to contemplate with reverence the character and the deeds of the Patriarchs of old. These were men of faith, who trusted God with the most unfaltering confidence, and who believed that all else should be sacrificed upon the altar of truth and duty. We will briefly enumerate some of their deeds. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain by which he obtained wituess that he was righteous. By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death. By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, prepared an ark to the saving of his house. By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should afterwards receive as inheritance, obeyed; and by faith he sojourned in a land of promise as in a strange country. By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come. By faith Jacob, when he was dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph. By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the Children of Israel, and gave commandment concerning his bones. By faith Moses, when an infant, was hid three months, of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child, and they feared for his safety. By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of the Egyptian King's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the children of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. By faith the Israelites passed through the Red Sea as by dry land; which the Egyptians essaying to do were drowned. By faith the walls of Jericho fell down after they were encompassed about for seven days. This is but a brief recital of some of the evidences of the power of faith. Time would fail to tell of other Patriarchs and Prophets who, through faith, subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiaut in fight and turned to flight armies of unbelievers, besides working other miracles, even to the restoring of the dead to life. Though the Patriarchs lived in dark ages of idolatry, yet they worshiped God. In the midst of general corruption, when all was strife and hypocrisy and deception, they battled for principle. They believed that righteousness and truth would ultimately prevail, and with high and holy faith they adhered to the path of duty, being persuaded that no temporary advantage could compensate for its sacrifice. These are the men whose integrity and faith and devotion to all that is good we would teach you to imitate. They were holy men who lived not for themselves but for their age and for their race in all future generations. They saw darkness around them, but their eyes rested in hopefulness on the future; and in that future they lived. The possession of virtues such as theirs is wealth far more substantial than glittering heaps of gold. The possession of faith so abiding is consolation far exceeding any that can be derived from mere worldly honors. We commend them, therefore, to you aud your imitation. (Leads him to the chair of the Chief Patriarch.)

Chief Patriarch to Candidate: Brother, in congratulating you on your elevation to the highest rank in this order, it would be useless for me to attempt to add a word to the moral instruction which has been already bestowed upon your mind with a train of moral thought, founded in principles the most pure and exalted, our labor will not have been in vain, your time will not have been wasted, and neither you nor your brethren will have cause to regret your connection with our association. We earnestly hope that may be the case; aud that, as your mind shall advance in the progress of calm investigation, it may be continually blessed with a brighter and yet stronger light, until it realize the fruition of all its earthly desires and the care-worn man shall have bowed him down before his God. The novitiate is again taken to the High Priest.

High Priest: Brother, before explaining to you the signs peculiar to this degree, it will be necessary for you to enter into a solemn promise with the Encampment and the Patriarchal Order at large never to communicate to any other person or in any manner divulge, contrary to the usage of the order, any of the signs or mysteries of this degree. Are you willing to make such promise?

A.—I am.

OBLIGATION, ROYAL PURPLE DEGREE.

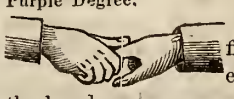
I, ————, do most solemnly promise, in the presence of the witnesses here assembled, that I will never disclose or make knowu to any person, by any meaus whatever, any of the signs, pass words or mysteries of the Royal Purple Degree, or those of any other of the Degrees of the Patriarchal Order of Independent Odd-fellows. I also promise to obey all legal summons that may be issued by authority of any Encampment to which I may belong; and that in all other respects I will endeavor to discharge my duty as a true and faithful member of this fraternity. For the conscientious performance of which promise I here most solemnly give my most sacred pledge of honor.

The candidate will then rise and be instructed in the Enter Sign, Pass Word, Explanation and Grip.

Sign Royal Purple Degree.

ENTER SIGN.—Four raps on inside door.

CHECK WORD.—Same as previous degrees.



PASS WORD.—M. K. K. S.

TOKEN OR EXPLANATION.—Melchizedek, King of Salem.

CHECK SIGN.—Same as previous degrees; used as a salute to the "chairs," followed by the degree sign given to Chief Patriarch only.

SIGN.—Extend thumb and two first fingers of right hand, closing the other fingers. Raise hand to left side of forehead and draw it to center of forehead and then let arm drop to side.

ANSWER.—Pass left hand from right side of face to center of forehead.

GRIP.—A closes all but thumb and index finger of right hand. B grasps the extended finger, placeing thumb on joint next the hand.

ANSWER.—Same: B taking the place of A.

Chief Patriarch: Brethren, you will rise and be attentive while our excellent High Priest appropriately concludes this solemn ceremony.

CLOSING PRAYER, ROYAL PURPLE DEGREE.

O Thou who dwellest in light unapproachable, the mighty Maker of the uuiverse, we render Thee humble and hearty thanks for all Thy mercies. We adore Thy name that amid all the deprivations of this present life Thou hast furnished us so many beautiful emblems of Thy goodness to cheer and sustain us in the discharge of our duties, and hast implanted in us a disposition of heart to regard all men as our brethren and Thou, the Lord, as the Maker of them all. Aid us in our passage through life. Along its devious ways may we be safely guided by Thy providence and at last be admitted to the society of the just made perfect, to the honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Emblems of the Roy al Purple Degree are the Pilgrim's Scrip, Sandals and Staff.

*The imitation thunder is made by shaking a large piece of sheet iron. The sound of falling rain is made by the use of a box with pegs or nails driven through the bottom and containing a few peas or beans which are rolled from one end to the other, by tipping the box, while some one sprinkles water on the candidate as he passes.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to he worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The anthor helonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to he. If Freemasonry is what it is snpposed hy many to be, in its obligations, the author of this hook must he a hold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighhor in Batavia, N. Y,, and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abdnction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actnally Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

TRACT NO. 21:

MASONIC CHASTITY.

BY EMMA A. WALLACE,

The author, by wonderfully clear illustration and argument, shows the terribly corrupt nature of Freemasonry. No true woman who reads this will ever speak with approbation of this institution A 4-page tract 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

GERMAN CYNOSURE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason

By REV. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church,

WORCESTER, MASS.

This is our first German tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT

TO THE YOUNG MEN OE AMERICA. Postage, 3 cents per 100 Tracts. Tracts Free.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES.

Are intended for those who wish to give their commission to subscribers.

Subscriptions may all be sent at one time, or at different times, and in all cases the sender should keep an account of the names and amounts sent.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Note if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

THE FALL CAMPAIGN.

More than one-third of all the subscriptions on our list expired during the summer. and many of these were three months subscriptions which are not so generally renewed as others. For these reasons together with the fact that the busy season is not the best time for renewing subscriptions, it is not strange that our mail list is smaller than it was at the beginning of the summer.

Now, as the fall has fairly opened and, as we hope, our readers are prepared for a long and vigorous canvass for subscriptions, as we promised last June, we will tell you how the mail list stands on the fourteenth of September.

The whole number of subscribers is 4,251. Illinois still holds the first place, with 769 subscribers. Ohio stands second, with 592. Indiana has the third place; she has 498. Is she to have 1,000 before the fourth of next November? If you all leave this work for some one else to do, will not be done. Will not every one of our Indiana subscribers take a personal responsibility in this matter and make the number 1,000?

New York has the fourth place. Iowa has the fifth. Last June Pennsylvania ought to have had the fifth place but through our oversight she was left out entirely, and she has felt the unintentional slight so keenly that she has gone below Iowa and holds the sixth place. We here ask forgiveness for treating her so coldly and ask her to return good for evil by sending in more new subscribers than any other State. She has good material to work on. The National Convention meets at Pittsburgh next year, and every patriotic, but especially every Christian citizen of that State should be posted on the work of the National Christian Association, before the Convention occurs; and consequently, should read the organ of this Association, the Christian Cynosure. We hope that our Pennsylvania subscribers will take advantage of every religious and political meeting to press the claims of the Cynosure upon thinking, reading men, and women.

Michigan holds the seventh place, and looks enterprisingly forward for a State agent and a State organization. The most direct way to accomplish this result. we think, is to get multitudes of subscribers for the Cynosure. Enlighten the people generally, rouse them, and they will realize that it is economy to employ a State agent. In the meantime the Cynosure will be a weekly lecturer and friend. Wisconsin occupies the eighth. Do not let Michigan go beyond you. Missouri has the ninth. We expect enlargement there this season. Vermont has the tenth place. Kansas the eleventh. Massachusetts the twelfth. She was below Minnesota, but seems to realize more fully the importance of this work. Let our sixty-five subscribers there rise together in an aggressive movement. Minnesota has the thirteenth place. Oregon the fourteenth. California and Washington Territory are together in the fifteenth place, with 34 subscribers each. Washington Territory has come up from the twentieth place this summer and means to do her duty. Do not let her find her competitors asleep. Nebraska and Ontario, (Canada) have the sixteenth place. Connecticut, the seventeenth. New Jersey, the eighteenth. Maine, the nineteenth, and Virginia, the twentieth. The other States and territories we do not report, but the good seed is sent to all but five States (viz: Delaware, Florida, Louisiana, Nevada and South Carolina) weekly, and also to all but five of the territories.

Now the fall is here, as a rule those who work most faithfully for the Cynosure will have the greatest success. Please read what is said about THE FALL CAMPAIGN in the last two numbers of the Cynosure.

We will be glad to send Cynosure subscription papers, circulars and extra copies of the paper when requested for canvassing purposes.

Let every one who reads this article say, "THIS PAPER MUST BE PUSHED. I am determined to work for it."

THE ONLY COMPLETE EXPOSITION OF ODD-FELLOWSHIP.—There has long been a demand for a cheap yet complete and accurate Illustrated Exposition of Odd-fellowship; but we have not been able to supply the demand until now. Topics of the Time.

RETURNING SENSE.—Two years ago party frenzy and Masonic practice procured an election in the Fourth Illinois Congressional District. S. A. Hurlbut, a defender of the privileges of Freemasonry against the rights of citizenship, and confederate of a Masonic murderre, replaced J. A. Farnsworth. The latter had been fourteen years in Congress, and had received in one election the almost unequalled majority of 14,000 votes. His record on the salary question was clear and he was almost the only man who could lay his hand on the mane of Ben. Butler. But he did not follow the Grant Republicans in their deviation from the once-honored policy of that party. Hence his retirement to private life, until renominated by independent voters last week. Hurlbut's Masonic lackeys serve him well, and he is also a nominee of the so-called Republican party, but out of respect to to the good sense of the people of his district, it is to be hoped that he will get no nearer the national capital. This is one of many cheering instances pointing to an end of ring rule in Congress and independence in the use of the ballot.

BLACK HILLS' GOLD.—Now that the battle clouds stirred up by the Indian-butcher, Custer, are blowing away, there beams an illuming ray on the object and result of his marauding ride to the Black Hills. The scientific reports by the chief engineer, by Mr. Grinnell on Fossils and Zoology, and by Prof. Winchell on the Mineral Products, are a sufficient reminder that "all is not gold that glitters." They report a fine, well-watered and timbered region, well suited for habitation, with abundant game, but Prof. Winchell's report reads on the gold story: "The miners that accompanied the expedition report the finding of gold and silver in some of the gulches in the southeastern portion of the Hills, though I saw none of the gold, nor did I see any auriferous quartz. I have taken the gold reports with a large grain of allowance." His report is confirmed by other officers of the expedition who credit the newspaper correspondents with large stories drawn from imagination; and by Prof. Donaldson of the Minnesota State University, who accompanied the expedition in a private capacity. Prof. Winchell also states, aside from his report, that the affair seemed to be in the interest of unscrupulous speculators who had little if any mining experience, but were the sole authority for the popular reports of gold. It is difficult to explain from any governmental point the reason for the expedition, and if it shall be established that the national authorities may violate treaties and provoke murder at the pleasure of a few mining speculators, and perchance to lift the Northern Pacific railroad bonds from the mud, justice, as well as national honor, demands their impeachment.

CARPET-BAGGED.—Louisiana is truly reaping bitter ruits from her government of adventurers. Since the adoption of a State constitution in 1864, its track has been marked with blood. Warmoth, the first carpet-bag governor, was elected in 1868, and a quarrel over the spoils of office divided the Republicans between the governor and the Custom-House. In the election of 1872 Kellogg and McEnery were candidates for governor. The former, years ago, represented his district in Congress, hailing from Canton, Illinois. He went south with the army, saw opportunities for ambitious place-seeking and remained to make a record that will sink him with curses. At this election the State Board of canvassers divided; Warmoth, at the head of one, kept all the returns, canvassed them, and declared McEnery elected. The other, with a colored man, Lynch, at its head, declared Kellogg elected without any returns. Kellogg obtained an injunction from the corrupt and drunken Durell, Judge of the Supreme Court, preventing McEnery from holding the office, and shutting the State House from his Legislature. Both appealed to Grant. He sustained Kellogg., shielding his decision with Durell's injunction. The matter came before the Senate, whose investigating committee was unanimous against Kellogg, but were divided as to how he should be disposed of. Congress dodged the decision and he was left in power, although the President and others have sought to secure a decision at different times. The people of Louisiana have borne the outrage for two years, seeing their property sold for taxes they refused to pay to a usurper, and their State debt increased to twenty millions without any, public improvements. They were justly indignant, and the country sympathized with them. They were bagged; and finally turned to the weapons whose use slavery had taught, and as they took them up the spirit of that accursed system returned.

WHITE LEAGUE VICTIMS.—"A hopeless revolt is a crime against humanity." In taking arms against a State government, for two years recognized at Washington and in every parish of Louisiana, the White Leagues of that State began an insurrection which their better judgment should have told them could not prevail. Its success would establish a precedent which other States would not have tardily used. The decision of President Grant in suppressing it is, therefore, commended on every hand. But what shall be done for the fifty dead and seventy-four wounded men who fell on Monday of last week? The White Leagues stand before the world as murderers. But that Odgen and Penn and their other leaders are ever brought to trial on this charge is more than doubtful. To the reinvested State government belongs the task, but to undertake would but expose its impotence. It will remain as another count in the fearful indictment of slavery, and those who still cherish the ghost of that system will in the retributions of heaven bear the penalty. No such government as Kellogg's would have been possible had the whites of the South submitted to the judgments of the war and united with their colored neighbors in the establishment of a peaceful society.

The White League's Message to the Union.

BY S. H. RANDALL.

You think, because you swept our lands,
You made our spirits kneel;
But when you broke our wasted bands
You left us torch and steel.

We think we hear our father's voice
Upbraid us with our chains,
And torch and steel shall now rejoice
Our butchered comrades' manes.

The Black to death we now consign;
His cabin we will storm;
His wife in tears again shall twine
The Southron's glowing form.

Her face with agony we'll seam;
Her flesh the lash shall groove;
Her shriek and groan shall be our dream;
And death her woe remove.

Soon Mississippi's rifle crack
Shall make our hearts rebound,
And Carolina's swamps give back
The baying of the hound.

O'er Alabama's hills and dales,
In Tennesseean grots,
Beneath our Georgia's forest vail,
The hated color rots.

Our Old Kentuck we'll rebaptize
"The dark and bloody ground;"
And venom start to Texan eyes,
The skull and cross-bones crowned.

Virginia's sons shall leap once more,
To join a human hunt:
While Louisiana's clotted gore
Arkansan bowies blunt.

We do not ask your steel to toss
Our pierced and bleeding wrath:
No more the Leaguer seeks to cross
The Northern saber's path.

The League from slaughters you abhor
Will Copperheads release,
Our rotten crutch in time of war,
Our arm in time of peace.

To Baptist Ministers on the Duty of Renunciation.

BY A. D. FREEMAN.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Allow me through your favor to ask my dear brethren in the ministry, who are members of the Masonic fraternity, or kindred institutions, a few questions, suggested by my own and the views of others who are honest inquirers after truth.

To premise, I would say, that we believe these institutions are essentially unchristian in character. But there are those who, because their friends who are professed Christians, and especially because ministers of the Gospel belong to these orders, either believe them right, or at least stand in doubt. These last, therefore, either incline toward these orders or are indifferent; which inures to their support. Now, my brethren, we think you know whether these orders are good or bad, right or wrong. For it is not to be supposed that you who are able to preach the Gospel intelligently are so obtuse mentally and stultified morally, as not to understand the character of the institutions to which you may belong. Nor would it be charitable to think you had been to careless to acquaint yourselves with their true nature, to some extent.

Now if you know or believe them to be right (and therefore of course useful) should you not, especially in these times of controversy on the subject, and when these orders are so persistently assailed, come fearlessly forward and with Christian courage, to thei defense? Are you not, as ministers of the Gospel of Jesus, bound to give to the world, and especially to the church, all the knowledge of moral good you may have in possession? If they are morally right, what right have you, who have been charged to "Let your light so shine before men, &c," to hide that light? Do you wish to deny your manhood, or contradict Jesus, who says, "No man lighteth a candle and putteth it under a bushel!" If you claim these institutions to be right, do you not hang on one or the other horn of this dilemma? And here I may also ask, if you are willing to fall under the flashing reproof of our Master, who says, "He that doeth truth cometh to the light," etc.; and also, "he that doeth evil hateth the light, etc?"

And again, if on the other hand you know, or believe them to be wrong, would it not be equally your duty to the church and your fellow-men to give to them the benefit of such knowledge? Have you any right to hide an evil that can endanger the peace of the church, or society, or of the domestic circle, or imperil the souls of men? If so, then you have a right to let that incendiary apply his torch to your neighbor's house unrestrained, and your neighbor unwarned, or that drunkard or other sinner go on unwarned to a drunkard's grave or a sinner's perdition.

What does God say about the unfaithful watchman? (Ez xxxiii.)

Do you say you are unaffiliated? But if these orders are wrong, have you a right to take that position? which is understood to mean that you may refrain from attending the lodge but must be silent as to what you cannot approve. Have you a right to silently withdraw and say nothing of what you may know of the evil workings of these orders? Do you not, by so doing, induce doubts in the minds of the uninitiated and uninformed as to the wrongs which you may know exist? And by so much also make these doubting ones liable to be caught in a snare that they will forever after regret.

Do you say that your exposure of these institutions would expose you to danger? Then they certainly are evil, and should most assuredly be exposed. And who should do this but those on whom these institutions depend for reputation, and whom, more than all others, the craft make a passport to the favor and good opinion of the people? And who, also, with Solomon and the St. Johns, are by the craft made to stand as god-fathers of Masonry. Who, I ask, but you, whose position and Christian reputation are used to commend oath bound secretism, should unveil these orders?

Are you fearful? you have the promise of Divine protection. Do you believe, or distrust God? Can you not trust Him who has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee?" who said, "Let there be light and there was light" and who "In the beginning created the heavens and the earth;" and with infinite mathematical accuracy runs nature's incomprehensibly complex machinery and works her vast chemical laboratory? Him who protected Daniel in the lion's den, and walked with the three in the fiery furnace, and opened the Red Sea and the Jordan and led Israel through dry-shod, and also saved righteous Lot when he burned the cities of the plain? and who also, in our day, has protected a Bernard, a Stearns, a Hart, a Baird, a Rathbun, a Greene, a Finney, and hundreds of others who might be named? Can you not demonstrate your discipleship by bearing the cross? If you cannot, then tell us no more of your trusting in God or of your discipleship. And take that Christian mantle off with which you have unwillingly, we charitably hope, been hiding the ugly features of these unholy orders. Have you the temerity to fear man more than God? To brave the displeasure of God against the fearful and unbelieving? Will you by your silence allow your name to be quoted as of the membership, and in support of the good character falsely claimed by the fraternity. Can it avail you anything against these institutions if you silently withdraw while their nature is being discussed before the public? If the question of right or wrong were not mooted, then the withdrawal of your personal attendance might be construed as unfavorable to them. But as it is, it goes for nothing; your position may be claimed as much for as against them. It is a practical averment of what a brother in the ministry said to me a few months since in answer to a question, "Is Masonry a wicked institution?" His prompt and unhesitating reply was, "I have never said so yet, nor do I say now;" and after a moment's pause, added, "Nor would I say it is not." That is, he would not say anything as to its merits or demerits. If it were right, he would not bear witness in its favor; and if wrong, he would not expose it. He never had said, and would not say, It is wrong. Suppose the watchman on the watch-tower, when asked, "Is the enemy approaching?" should answer," I have never said so yet, nor do I say so now; nor do I say there is none." Ought he to remain there. Would he be suffered to hold so important a position, while so faithless to the trust reposed in him. Of course not. No, not even though he be threatened with instant death by the approaching foe, would there be heard an apology for such perfidy. How much less then, for a watchman on Zion's walls, who has not the civil and property interests of a city or a country in charge, but something of as much more worth, as eternity is more than time.

My dear brethren, can you afford this? Can you afford such a hazard of your own and the interests of others? Can you hope to succeed in neutrality between right and wrong? between the kingdom of light and that of darkness? Can you be neither for nor against right? Does not our dear Lord say, "He that is not for me is against me?"

I believe it is a well established fact by Masonic writers that Masonry rejects Christ. Then it follows as a logical necessity that he who accepts Masonry intelligently consents to the rejection of Christ. But very few, if any, I think, do this. But if after becoming acquainted with its Christ-rejecting character, and in spite of this and other kindred reasons men adhere to it, they take the responsibility of being at war with God! O how painful it must be for a conscientious man to be held by fear and menaces in apparent fellowship with such men, when the soul loaths it and longs to be free! "Once a Mason always a Mason" is their motto, and they must be so held by all, until they abjure the craft with as much solemnity as they entered it and accepted it. I think they should not be willing to go out privately, any more than Paul was willing to be relieved from jail privately, where he had been wickedly incarcerated and his rights taken from him. To go out privately affords no opportunity to be bold as a real Christian loves to be in his adhesion to the right and his opposition to the wrong.

Then again, if he is out and the people do not know it, he is still held as a member by all, even in the pulpit, the prayer, conference and covenant meeting, and at the Lord's table. And though the brethren in the church take no ground in the premises, they have no confidence in him other than an equivocal or doubtful confidence, if such a thing can be.

Dear Cynosure, may I speak again? I feel in earnest, and I trust it is a Christian earnestness. For it seems to me that much of the waning of true piety in the churches, and much of the dishonesty practiced in all departments of human activity, and much of the crime perpetrated in our country are attributable to the principles involved in oath-bound secretism.

As soon as convenient I will give my views of the bearing of these orders on the piety of the church.

That we henceforth be no more children, tossed too and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the slight of men and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive.

Was the Early Christian Church a Secret Society? A Review.

BY REV. W. W. AMES.

The News says that we forget that the early Christian church was a secret society, and that this is plainly demonstrated in Mr. Arnold's book from which we quote. We were not aware that religion of Jesus was of this sort. The New Testament gives the history of the infancy and the very birth of the Christian church; and in this there was not the slightest intimation that it was an oath-bound secret society, but everything to the contrary. In no instance did he require before hand a promise of perpetual secrecy. After a cure in one or two instances he enjoined to tell no one. But they blazed the matter abroad, "insomuch that he could no more openly enter the city," and doubtless it was to prevent this rush that enjoined the silence. To one he said "go home to thy friend and kindred and tell them how great things God hath done for thee." Only three were permitted to behold the transfiguration, but one promise of secrecy was extracted. After the vision had passed he charged them to tell it to no one till after his resurrection. When arrested, and accused before Pilate of treason against Cæsar, and was asked by Pilate concerning his doctrine, he said, "Go ask them that heard me, behold they know what I said; I ever spake openly in the temple whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing." As much as to say that if he had been about the country lecturing as the Grand Master of a secret lodge, people would have just reason to suspect that he was stirring up treason against the Roman government. But now they could have no such ground of suspicion. We have a full and detailed account of the institution of the Lord's Supper, as well as his baptism, the latter being under the open sky. He commissioned his disciples to preach the Gospel to every creature, not to a small portion only, like Masonry, but to every creature in all the world. Jesus said as a proof of his messiahship, "The poor have the Gospel preached to them." Again, he said, "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in the light, and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops." The reader will search the Acts of the Apostles in vain to find the first trace of oath-bound secretism. Ecclesiastical history makes no mention of it in the churches during the first century of existence. It was during this time that the Gospel won its mightiest early triumphs, and as can easily be shown, it was not till after the dawn of another century that the churches resorted to the secret principle for aid, and that in this step they departed widely from the primitive simplicity of the Gospel.

We might feel compelled to regard Mr. Arnold as good authority in this matter "per force," were he an historian of anything but Freemasonry, and was not constructing a special plea to make out a case. But he exhibits both lameness, and either ignorance or dishonesty, in that while he refers to church history for his proofs, he fails to state how the historians themselves regarded the engrafting of secretism upon Christianity.

Mosheim, a standard writer of church history, in Vol. 1, page 66, says of the ceremonies used in the church during the second century:

"There is no institution so pure and excellent which the corruption and folly of man will not in time alter for the worse, and load with additions foreign to its nature and original design. Such, in a particular manner, was the fate of Christianity. In this country many unnecessary rites and ceremonies were added to the Christian worship, the introduction of which was extremely offensive to wise and good men."

Again on the next page:

"The profound respect that was paid to the Greek and Roman mysteries, and the extraordinary sanctity that was attributed to them, were additional circumstances that induced the Christians to give their religion at mystic air, in order to put it on an equal footing, in point of dignity, with that of the Pagans. For this purpose they gave the name of mysteries to the institutions of the Gospel, and decorated particularly the holy sacrament with this solemn title. They used in that sacred institution, as in that also of baptism, several of the terms employed in the heathen mysteries, and proceeded so far at length, as even to adopt some of the ceremonies of which these renowned mysteries consist."

Christianity, therefore, instead of enveloping itself in secrecy and mystery from its birth, as Mr Arnold claims, following the teachings of our great founder, shunned the cover of the "bed" and the "bushel" till she was more than a hundred years old, and had gained the most wonderful spiritual triumphs. It was not till her disciples began to lose faith in God's plan of saving "by the foolishness of preaching" them that believe, and to trust in the pomp and show of man-made ceremonies, that they enveloped her in the garb of secretism. And let it not be forgotten that Mosheim mentions this as one of these things that was "extremely offensive to wise and good men." And instead of extending the spiritual triumphs of the Gospel, it smothered its light, and encouraged the multiplication of rites and ceremonies which Mosheim declares all the records of the third century mention. Thus, instead of being a blessing to Christianity, secretism, though it seemed such to many, as Masons claim it to be at the present day in the way of protection and assistance among strangers, it was, nevertheless, a part and parcel of the great Romish apostasy which brought on the long and gloomy night of the dark ages.

Reformers.

Who are true reformers, and what are they? Are they not persons of decided minds, and of honest hearts? Do they not show themselves ever determined to understand and maintain original principles of eternal right and truth? And are they not ever prepared to stand by intelligent convictions of truth and duty to God and man at any cost? Have not true reformers been the characters, who, under God, in all ages, saved this world from corruption and ruin? Actuated by the noblest inspirations, have they not been willing to sacrifice everything for the grand enterprise of their lives? From a degenerating world, have such persons ever met with popular favor in the commencement of their great work? If the foregoing principles be admitted as consistent in the platform of the true reformer's character, doubtless they will appear worthy of a more extended consideration.

Decision of mind and purpose is unquestionably foundational to every virtue of a noble, Godlike person or character. But how important that we well understand what are the true materials of that decision and character, and the spirit by which they may become safely and securely cemented. Intelligent decision of character, arising from well understood and defined principles, is very different from personal, instinctive, or dogmatical peculiarities.

Have not reformers received some of their sorest wounds in the house of professed friends, who were actuated more by fanatical zeal or mere caprice, than by intelligently understood, or calmly defined principles.

If an honest man is the noblest workmanship of God, should he not become the model, incentive character of real life everywhere? As the heart becomes the common fountain of all life's issuing streams, how indispensable that honesty be a settled, generating product, giving direction and force to every desire and purpose of our being. While thousands actuated by petty personal interests and ambition behind the plausible guise of inviting exteriors are blighting everything in God's fair creation. Oh! how this world is sighing for honest men of honest hearts.

Eternal right and truth are inalienable principles by which God created our world, and still maintains his government in it. Every opposite principle must certainly lead to ultimate disorder, corruption and ruin. How important, then, that every man who loves his God, his race and himself, should seek to be an honored co-worker with God, in saving the world from ruin. In a world of sin and sinners, God has emphatically decided that we should "buy the truth and sell it not," and that our purchase should cost enough to make us regard it as truly valuable.

By hard, persevering ploddings of God's servants, which have earned their purchased possession of the truth, have ever, at the same time developed the stamina of character to stand by and defend it. Though their purchase appears of little worth in the market value of those whose ambition is only to seek for earthly fame; yet they are assured of an eternal worth and an emolumentry with the galaxy of glorified ones, emblazoned among "the stars for ever and ever."

The past and present ages have demanded, and God has developed men of true reformatory spirit and character. Men of undaunted spirits have arisen to dare and do for God and humanity; and having acted noble parts, they have left the impress of their holy fidelity in living characters upon the age as they have passed away. Others bearing their fallen mantles, have lived to see the triumph of their principles on a remodled age yielding in quiet submission to their sway.

The spirit and character of Bible and martyr times, gives us the impress of a stalwart energy no less than electric to the unhappy effeminacy of our times. The Godlike power and decision of the men of those times, is truly astonishing, especially as we see them leaving everything dear on earth, and leading the van in a life crusade through hardships, slaughter and death. And then, in the midst of the most painful and humiliating ordeals, exulting triumphantly "that they were counted worthy to suffer shame and reproach for the name of Christ."

Since men first departed from God, they have ever prided themselves in the ingeniously multiplied subterfuges for that departure continued, till now, they can hide in a thousand-fold darker dens than the bowers of Eden. Possibly, till the millennium comes, returning to "the old paths" will never be popular, unless when led by the triumphal march of God's mysterious providence.

As genuine reform has never been popular in the past, it is not folly to think it should be so now? Hence, should not every true reformer, assured of the righteousness of his cause, pledge all his interests for life and death, for the ultimate triumph of this, the grandest enterprise of his life. as viewed from the incentive stand-point of glorified reward. We have now considered the reformer barely in original character. We will further consider his life, developed principles, and their practical application.—A. F. Dempsey in Am. Wesleyan.

Get Rid of the Bible.

Three Roman Catholic bishops gave this advice to the Pope on the day when consulted as to the mode of strengthening the church of Rome:

"Lastly, of all the advice we can give your beatitude, we have reserved to the end the most important, viz: That as little as possible of the Gospel (especially in the vulgar tongue) be read in all countries subject to your jurisdiction. The little which is usually read at mass is sufficient, and beyond that no one whatever must be permitted to read. While men were contented with that little, your interests prospered; but when they read more, they began to decay. To sum all: that Book is the one, which, more than any other, has raised against us those whirlwinds and tempests, whereby we were almost swept away; and, in fact, if any one examines it diligently, and then confronts therewith the practice of our church, he will perceive the great discordance, and that our doctrine is utterly different from, and often contrary to it; which thing if the people understand they will not cease their clamor against us till all be divulged, and then we shall become an object of universal scorn and hatred. Wherefore even those few pages must be put away, but with considerable wariness and caution, lest so doing should raise greater uproars and tumults."—Imp. Library at Paris, fol. B, No. 1,038, vol. ii., pp. 641–640; also Brit. Mus. 7, c, 10, 11, Fasciculus Rerum, Lond. 1690 fol.

The War of Races.

That the Southern negroes would ever, except in solated spots where enormous superiority of numbers favored them, take any very lasting or important share in the actual government of the South—framing its laws, directing its investments of capital, and, in short, organizing society—was not to be expected. It was to the race which hitherto has been dominant on this continent that we looked to govern the South again, but under changed conditions, with just laws and equal protection of the law to white and black. The number of States which have now emancipated themselves from the rule established at the close of the war points to a solution of the Southern question by the operation of natural laws which govern the movements of society; and on the whole, taking everything into account—the exasperation of the native Southern white at the enormities of the carpet-bag governments, the disappointment of the negro in finding that even freedom was not synonymous with cessation from all labor, and the temptation of both races to excess, outrage, and violence of all kinds—it must be admitted that a good deal of praise is due both the whites and blacks for their mutual forbearance and consideration during the past six or seven years; and the inference we draw from it is, that in the absence of something very new and unexpected, the "war of races" so much talked about is not a thing of the future but of the past. This war has actually taken place; but instead of being a bloody conflict, such as was at one time expected, it has been mainly a silent struggle on the part of the most powerful and wisest and most trained race in the South to take the lead in public affairs, and this it seems to be gradually doing. —The Nation.

The Masonic Journal says:—"We beg to ask the editor a question. Why do you not pray that the Lord's avenging angel may destroy by wholesale all ungodly Freemasons? Why not call down fire from heaven to consume them, root and branch?"

Our answer is, we would not do this if we could. It would not be right to so pray or so wish. If we cannot with good sound reason based upon facts and indisputable testimonies, show that Freemasonry is, in its nature and tendency opposed to republican institutions, to civil justice and to the mission of the church of Jesus Christ, then we will stand defeated.

The Journal misinterprets if it does not misrepresent us. We have never expressed a wish or thought of it, that all Freemasons should be slaughtered either by men or by the judgments of God. We want them to be convinced of their errors, and they are becoming so by scores and hundreds. We would not if we could force them to believe and act on our side. We want them to look the matter over again, with as little prejudice as men can have who already have taken sides, and see if they are not wrong after all. We are anxious that some plan should be adopted to get the facts out, and we are then willing that the jury of the world should decide the case according to the law and the facts. Truth is more mighty than sword and cannon. These latter we do not need, since we have something more powerful. Give it a fair chance, and it will soon melt its way around the world, and every opposition will be swept before it; and then it will be a glad day for the travelers of earth and for heaven.—Wesleyan.

It is astonishing how anxious many people are to play with sin, while abhoring the thought of dishonoring God or injuring themselves. They would scorn to be drunkards, yet they will tipple in wine and brandy; they would shudder at the thought of gambling, yet delight in playing cards; they would pray against the folly and levity of flippancy and vanity. yet be eager to dance. Why not avoid the appearance of wrong? Why not be separate from the temptation to evil.—Ex.

Indiana State Convention.

After advising with many of the friends of our reform, we have concluded not to call the State Convention to meet before the 28th of October,—one day earlier than last year. This will give us none too much time to get ready. And now let me ask of will you not co-operate with us in trying to make this meeting a complete success? Dr. Charles Jewett, one of the most efficient temperance lecturers of this generation and the past, declares that the slow progress of that reform has been greatly owing to the neglect of proper and thorough organization. So it will be with every reform. If we would succeed we must have a thoroughly organized and paying membership. Without this our cause will languish, and our laborers will suffer. We may profit by studying the tactics of our enemy. His forces are all thoroughly organized; and there is no lack of friends to carry into effect his wily schemes.

EVERY ANTI-MASON IN INDIANA,

We must not so organize as to

BIND AND BURDEN

our membership. But some have already been burdened because we have not sufficient organization. Let us distribute the burden, and thus make each one's portion lighter. This can only be done by making a rule covering all auxiliary organizations, requiring the payment of a fixed amount by each member, to go into the State Treasury. Let me here say, that I cannot ask a competent man to take my place, unless some provision is made for his support. It is not right to starve men in the midst of plenty. Thorough organization with one well paid and efficient agent, will in a short time

REVOLUTIONIZE THE STATE.

"But," you ask, "what can I do? I answer:

1st, See that a delegate is sent from your neighborhood, church, or association.

2d, If you cannot secure the appointment of a delegate, come yourself, and prove your devotion to this good cause.

3d, Come prepared to assist us financially to the extent of your ability.

4th, Come with words of counsel and cheer, and God will bless you and give us a successful meeting.

JOHN T. KIGGINS.

Information and Action Wanted.

From every locality in the State of Pennsylvania where there is a bevy of men openly opposed to secret societies, and who will appoint a delegate to attend our convention at Wilkesbarree, Pa., on the 3d and 4th of November next, with the view of organizing a State Anti-Secret Society.

LET US HEAR by letter to the committee whose names are below or through the Cynosure. Also from every man who will become a volunteer delegate, self appointed, to said meeting.

LET US HEAR, as above stated, and let communities, churches, any organized body, opposed to secret societies, report and appoint immediately, good men, citizens, clergymen, any suitable person, to attend said meeting.

COMMITTEE:—NATHAN CALLENDER, Greene Grove, Luzerne Co. M. D. McDOUGAL, Wilkesbarre; A. L. POST, Montrose, Pa.

NOTICE.—All persons desiring to consult with the Corresponding Secretary of the N. C. A. concerning lectures or any other topic connected with the work of opposing secret societies, can see him or his assistant at the Christian Cynosure office, No. 13 Wabash Ave., from 9 to 11 o'clock, A. M. any day in the week except Sunday.

C. A. BLANCHARD,
Cor. Sec'y.

To all Kansas Anti-masons.

MARION, Ind., Sept. 14, 1874.

Brother H. T. Besse has requested that I communicate through the Cynosure relative to my future home in Kansas. My "homestead" lies in Grant township, Cloud Co., Kansas, and consequently on the Mitchel county line, one mile south of the "Concordia and Calker City Stage road," where it crosses the east line of Mitchel. God willing, I will be there by the middle of November ready to engage in preaching and lecturing for Anti-masonry. Now cut this out and paste it in your "memoranda," and then you will know just where to find me; I want every one of you to "come and see me." If you cannot come, then write. My post office address will be FANNY P. O., CLOUD CO., KANSAS. We shall be blessed with a daily mail. Any one desiring lectures early after I arrive, had better address me at Ligonier, Noble Co., Ind, at once. I shall be glad to find work enough to keep me busy in the lecture field till spring.

Sincerely, JOHN T. KIGGINS.

P. S. "One word more." Those of you who desire lectures this fall and winter, canvas the matter with your friends and see how much money you can get pledged for such an object,—remembering all the time that the more lectures you want the less it will cost per lecture. To illustrate: Suppose you want two or three lectures in a certain locality, for special reasons. To reach the place will require say two days travel. Now I can visit adjacent points, and lecture eight or a dozen times, in a week, at but a trifle more expense. The going and coming are often as much expense as the lectures.

In order that all may know what work is being done in the different parts of the country we ask to have brief notices of every meeting to discuss and oppose the system of Freemasonry forwarded to us at the Cynosure office. They will be inserted in the paper.

Try to arrange for meetings a month or two before hand so that they may be thoroughly advertised. If you meet regularly be sure to notify us of any change of time or place.

We will be glad to insert notices of sermons to be preached on the subject, also of monthly concerts of prayer for the overthrow of this anti-Christ.

Reform News.

From the General Agent—The Indiana Wesleyan Conference.

—The programme of the General Agent for the present month, in Indiana includes eight lectures in Grant county, twelve or more in Kosciusko county and locality, and a series in Hamilton county to continue into October. These labors will so occupy his time as to prevent frequent communications from him in person. We hope to hear frequently from these localities through other friends.

—A State Convention is in preparation in New York. It will probably be held in November. Another is talked of for Illinois. These with Missouri (already held), Indiana and Pennsylvania will make a fair showing for the work by States.

Association Organized.

In response to a call, signed by twenty-eight persons, a mass convention met in the Wesleyan Methodist church in the town of Groton, N. Y. on Wednesday morning, September 9th, 1874, for the purpose of organizing in opposition to the evils of secret societies. The number present was not large, but the manifest zeal and willingness and determination to work, even in an unpopular cause, was encouraging.

The State lecturer, Rev. J L. Barlow, was present, and aided in the work.

After a season of prayer a temporary organization was affected by electing J. B. Hart chairman, and Edwin Barnetson secretary. The call was then read and the object of the convention stated.

On motion to organize, the necessity and propriety of such a movement were discussed; after which the convention resolved to organize for future work, without a dissenting vote. A committee on organization was elected, and the convention adjourned to meet at two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

After devotional exercises the committee on organization presented a constitution which was adopted. The election of officers under the constitution then took place, and resulted as follows: President J. B. Hart; Vice-presidents, Rev. J. P. Pierce, Daniel Carpenter, Rev. C. P. Owen, Rev. W. P. Betts, and Rev. C. A. Smith; Secretary, Edwin Barnetson; Treasurer, David Whipple, Jr; Executive Committee, in addition to the president, secretary and treasurer, Shelden P. Moe and Daniel Carpenter.

The names of twenty-one persons were then secured as members of the association, and nine more in the evening, thus starting our organization with thirty members. Resolutions presented by brother Barlow were adopted after animated remarks. The vice-presidents were authorized to solicit members to the association.

The association voted to hold its first annual session at McLean, on the second Wednesday of October next, to commence at 10½ o'clock A. M. Friends of the cause please take note, for your presence is solicited.

The evening was occupied with a lecture by brother Barlow, which seemed to be well appreciated.

The convention brought together friends of reform from different parts of the town, and by a comparison of views and feelings developed sympathy in a common cause which gives a new impetus to the work, and judging from the stable character of the persons enlisted, the organization bids fair for accomplishing something in the future.

Lectures in Franklin County, Pa.

September 18, 1874.

In the early part of the season Rev. J. M. Bishop delivered two lectures at the Otterbein church near Franklin Furnace; in the early part of June he delivered two lectures in St. Thomas; and on the 10th and 11th inst,, he delivered two lectures at Crider's Church. All of the above lectures had their desired and designed effect, not only arousing the people from their lethargy on the subject of secret societies, but causing many of them to stand by their guns, throwing out their flags and showing their colors. At the last named place a minister who labors in an adjoining county said his eyes were now fully opened, and invited the lecturer to come to his field of labor.

The lecturer was careful to supply him with tracts, etc. Thus we see God is scattering the good seed on the wings of the wind. Heaven water it. Amen.

ANTI-MASON.

Anti-secrecy in North Carolina.

BRO. EDITORS:—We are making new and more determined efforts against the lodge-power here than formerly. I lectured on secretism not long since to a large audience, and the impression was good. Many are awaking to the importance of opposing this form of anti-Christ, and we hope great good may result from our efforts in this direction. I expect to lecture again soon. I am also making arrangements to issue The Independent Quarterly as a monthly, and I take this opportunity of saying to all your readers that one feature in the monthly magazine will be a series of articles entitled "Mystery, or the History of Secretism, Ancient and Modern." I have the materials and the first issue will contain the first number of the series. These articles will form a complete text-book on the subject, which no lecturer or layman opposed to secret societies can afford to be without. The American Independent Monthly, and Bible-Thinker (the name of the magazine) will be $1.00 only, payable always in advance, and the postage prepaid. I therefore make a loud and special call upon all the friends of our cause to come forward and aid us both in publishing and lecturing.

Report on Secret Societies.

The following resolutions were passed by the Susquehanna Conference of the Free Methodist church at its session lately held in Utica, N. Y.:

Secretism, like the shadow of death, has spread her mantle over our beloved country, threatening our institutions, if not endangering our very existence. The parent of secretism has been truthfully alleged to be Freemasonry. It has bedimmed the vision of the people, enslaved the intellect, muzzled the pulpit and the press, corrupted legislatures, bribed juries and justified crime, and boasts in its wicked deeds of darkness. It is a sworn enemy of all righteousness; has substituted a false religion for the true, and worships at the shrine of idolatry. It is a priesthood of unbelievers, as it rejects the atonement, ignores the doctrine of future punishment and dreams of heaven as a place of Masonic Bacchanalian festivities. It makes the compass and the square emblems of universal moral rectitude, and receives or rejects the Bible at pleasure. It claims to be Christian, but places Mohammedanism and heathenism on the same level with Christianity, under pretense of uniting under one head the common brotherhood of man. It embraces within its folds on Masonic principles the libertine, drunkard, sceptic, profane, the nominal Christian and even ministers of the Gospel. As it embraces such a variety of faiths and characters the lines of distinction between virtue and vice, good and evil, right and wrong, are defined according to Masonic standard of morality. It is an enemy to society because it infringes on the moral, social and civil relations of life by its limited laws of chastity, its exclusion of the better part of community and also in the aid and comfort it pretends to extend to those who are adhering members of its own communion.

Therefore, in the full belief that God has raised us up for an especial purpose, we have arrayed ourselves against this Satanic power, so ruinous to young and old, both men and women, who come under its influence. We believe it to be a curse to society, a blasting mildew on the church, and a combination of elements destructive to civilization and human and religious freedom.

Resolved, 1st, That we not only maintain our ground, but advance with more vigor than ever against this foe, and turn the field of conflict into one of victory, in the name of truth and humanity.

2nd, That, with a persistent and unfaltering purpose, we stand by our landmarks on this subject as a church, and as far as practicable co-operate with all earnest Christians in suppressing, and, if possible, destroying this evil.

3d, That, as a Conference, we will not vote for any man for office for State or general government whom we know to be an adhering member of any secret society, and also earnestly commend the same course to the members of our church.

4th, That we recommend to our people the Christian Cynosure as a strong and faithful advocate of the principles of anti-secretism, which deserves our patronage, and we also express our warmest sympathy for the success of the National Christian Association in its noble stand for the right.

5th, That this Conference make provision for sending a delegate to the National Convention to be held at Pittsburgh, Pa.

The National Reform in Southern Illinois.

OAKDALE, Washington Co., Ill., Sept. 7, 1874.

Some time since the Executive Committee of the Christian Amendment Association of this part of the State invited Prof. C. A. Blanchard to deliver a series of lectures in the interest of National Reformation in this region. In compliance with that request he has visited us and lectured to large and attentive audiences in Washington, Randolph and Perry counties. These audiences have manifested their appreciation of the speaker and their interest in the cause he advocated by that unmistakable evidence, their liberality to the pecuniary interests of the movement. By special request the Professor also delivered an Anti-masonic address at Coultersville. The friends of the Christian Amendment are very generally Anti-masons, and remembering, as the writer of this does, how the great Anti-masonic reformation of forty odd years ago was lost for the want of the principle they advocate, to secure it they feel that not only Anti-masonic but all other Scriptural reforms can be preserved to the nation only through the acknowledgment of the supremacy of Bible law in the Constitution of the United States. Correspondence.

A Voice from Central New England.

WORCESTER, Mass., Sept. 16, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I am a constant reader of your outspoken Christian paper. It is rare in these days to find one thoroughly and boldly "standing up for Jesus." I see you have many writers from various parts of our country, but not many from New England, which ought to be foremost in every good reform. The truth is, there is no general awakening here on the subject of secret societies except to get into them. The poor bird when fastened by the eyes of the charmer-serpent is doomed to the devourer. So is human society sometimes overcome by one vast, pervasive and all-blinding delusion operated by the invisible powers of darkness. Go on the streets and into the marts of business and talk against Freemasonry and kindred associations and men treat you either as a fanatic, are as deaf as were the sons-in-law of Lot, for it is said that "He seemed unto them as one that mocked." Ask a young man in trade to subscribe for the Cynosure. He feels very much as would a man in the South a few years ago when solicited to take the Liberator. If there is no danger to his life, there is to his business. He attaches a certain fatality to all worldly success if he is known to favor this reform. This is doubtless the result that Satan desires to bring about. When he gets a community or a church or an individual within the scope of his infernal mesmerism, then it is that Pandemonium hath a jubilee. So thought John Wesley, which I think will be good authority for such of his followers in the Methodist ministry as have found their way into the secret lodges. If there is any phase in our poor, fallen humanity that evinces more than any other of its weakness, folly and depravity it is man's willingness to be cheated by the devil. One might suppose from the elevated character which the sacred writers give of a true saint of God, or of an intelligent Christian, who has "tasted the powers of the world to come" and felt the joy of sins forgiven and received the earnest of a heavenly inheritance, that it would be morally impossible for such a person to be caught and bewildered by the foolish mummeries of Freemasonry. Either such persons are no Christians at all, and of course have assumed a name which does not belong to them any more than it does to monkeys; or they have such imperfect and infantile developments as Christians as to be wholly unfit to be examples to, and much less leaders of Christ's flock.

Freemasons and lodge men believe in one God. Very well, so does the devil, but he does not love God. The Israelites in the time of Moses believed in the God who spake in a voice of thunder from the top of Sinai; and at its base they paid equal honors to the golden calf. Here let me ask the question, was the true God pleased or displeased with such an associate to receive with himself the united homage of his people? It was a very easy thing to believe in the true God and at the same time to worship the golden calf. But the true God was highly displeased with this divided homage. In these last days, God hath spoken to us by his Son Jesus Christ. Freemasons and lodge men in our nominally Christian country, say in so far as they profess to be followers of Christ, that they believe in Jesus. Yes, but they also imitate their idolatrous Israelitish brethren by mixing heathenish rites in religious worship. Strange that they cannot see that the mummeries of the lodge-room are, in a modified form, of the same kith and kin with ancient heathenism, and of heathenism in all ages. Hence Jesus Christ is grieved and displeased when his professed followers unite themselves with infidels and all sorts of unbelievers in secret and midnight conclave, and for what? O, tell it not in Gath, nor publish it in the cities and villages where their orgies are held throughout our otherwise happy land. If heathenism is to be tolerated in free and Christian America let it be in secret, both in the marble temples of eastern cities and in the joss-houses of California. O, my professedly Christian brother of the lodge, you are a grief to all sincere and honest Christians and a snare and stumbling-block to the young men of our land. Many of you I fear will never enter heaven yourselves, but by your deceitful example you will decoy to their ruin many a precious youth who might otherwise have been saved. You have been commanded by the holy apostle to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather to reprove them, and yet by your secret oaths of one kind and another you willingly deprive yourselves of the power to reprove transgressors, for fear of wrath of men; and do not fear the wrath of God who will bring us all to judgment. W. J. WHITE.

A Lie Nailed.

DEER LICK, Ohio.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

The extent to which the Masonic fraternity carry prevarication and falsehood is really known to but few, even among those who are called its enemies. In the absence of arguments to support a wrong, the Knight of the cable-tow flees to his "refuge of lies" as naturally and apparently with as much confidence as the conies flee to the rocks on the approach of danger.

The object of this letter is to tell your readers how one Masonic falsehood was nailed to the wall. Father Curtis Cogswell is one of the foremost workers in the anti-secrecy reform here. When a young man he joined the Masons, took three degrees, thoroughly committed to memory all the lectures, ceremonies, etc., and then being convinced that the Masons actually did murder Morgan, and being disgusted because of the falsehood told him by leading Masons to induce him to join them, he denounced Masonry, as an institution eminating from the father of lies and has both opposed and exposed it ever since. To counteract his influence leading Masons of high standing in society here declared with great assurance that Father C. had never been a Mason.

In order to test the matter I sent a letter to the State of N. Y., inquiring of the post-master of the village in which Father C. lived, if there was yet a Masonic lodge in the place, and if so to enquire of the oldest settler in regard to Curtis Cogswell with a view to ascertain his standing in the lodge at the time he left; how many degrees he had taken, and whether that was a regular Masonic lodge at that time. The following letter which I received speaks for itself:

DUNDEE, June 10th, 1874.

Mr. H. S. Kirk,

DEAR SIR:—On inquiring of the old settlers at Harpindings Corners (now Dundee), I can answer a part of your questions. There is a Masonic lodge in the village called the Dundee Lodge. At the time of which you speak it was called the Reading Lodge. Hon. J. T. Andrews, late M. C., informs me that he knew Curtis Cogswell was a member of said lodge and that he took three degrees, and that he thinks he was in good standing when he left. It was a regular Masonic lodge at that time. Yours truly,

JAMES HOLMES.

The above letter acts as a powerful sedative here. It is hoped that much good will be the result, and we advise our friends everywhere to banish falsehood by establishing truth.

H. S. KIRK.

A Strange Sect.

SPRINGERTON, Ill., Sept. 9, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

There are no less than four Masonic preachers holding forth regularly in our village. One of them is self-styled a "true Latter-Day Saint of the reorganized church of Jesus Christ!

He is a fearful Mason and no doubt a member in good standing in the "Order of Enoch." He is "apt to teach" and just about as consistent as the devil was teaching in the garden and again tempting our blessed Saviour. The most prominent feature in his countenance is brass. He is well clad in sheep's clothing and has succeeded in devouring a few "straggling souls," and is fairly going into ecstasies over it. They assure us that there is no danger of them practicing polygamy, for some of them claim to have lost their propensities for the opposite sex! They further claim that since King James' translators were not inspired men they could not give us an inspired Bible. That Joseph was a divinely inspired prophet of God and hence his book of Mormon is of divine origin! They unchristianize everybody except themselves. Joe Smith with them is far superior to Christ, for, say they, "the church which Christ built slipped off" in a few years, and Joseph flew to the work and reorganized the church after Christ had made a signal failure! There are a few Masons here bitterly opposed to this Masonic Mormonic jumble of infidelity, but most of them go their length for this monster.

We are to have a public oral discussion with them commencing the third Monday in October at this place. About two months since I attended F. C. meeting. Was called on for a speech, and responding, followed a long, dry effort of a Master Mason. As the hour was late I only occupied a short time; in fact, it was not needful for me to say much, for that Mason had already told the story for me, that the grange was organized by Masons "for the purpose of wielding an influence." I challenged them for public discusssion, but they dare not except. They had their meetings every week before this, but have not had one since. I have talked with the members of the meeting, and their president, they all agree with me.

JAMES SPRINGER.

A Masonic Revelation.

PLATTEVILLE, Grant Co., Wis.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I have in my possession an old and much worn book, presented me by a Master Mason in good lodge standing in the State of Illinois, which was received by a pledge on my part never to use the name of the giver when making use of the gift; and on his part to establish the correctness of the revelations of the first three degrees of Masonry, as therein contained, if at any time they should be challenged, by affidavit sworn to before a justice of the peace.

The history of said book as given by him is as follows: Soon after he was "initiated, passed and raised," he removed his residence from the adjoining State, where he was made a Mason, to Illinois. On removing the Worthy Master presiding over the lodge of which he was a member gave him this as a text-book of the first three degrees, saying, "While your papers will admit you as a member of the lodge there you will find it to your interest to study over the degrees that you may become bright in them. He used the book to good purpose and became familiar with all the details of the work of "Blue Lodge Masonry."

Now a word of the book itself: The first part of it is "Illustrations of Masonry, by one of the fraternity who has devoted thirty years to the subject." This you will recognize at once as the "Old Morgan Book" of 1827. Herein the three first degrees are revealed correctly. The second part of the book is entitled, "A Key to the Higher Degrees of Freemasonry; giving a clear and correct view of the way and manner of conferring the degrees of Mark Master, Past Master, Most Excellent Master and Royal Arch Mason on a candidate, as practiced in all well-governed lodges and chapters throughout the globe; together with the means to be used by such as are not Masons to gain admission therein. The whole intended as a guide to the craft and a light to the unenlightened. By a member of the craft. 'Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.'" This last is a very "Masonic" production, written with the evident design of misleading the seeker after "light." The lectures of the various degrees, so far as given, are correct; but in the "grips, signs, tokens, etc.," there is "confusion worse confounded." The intent of the writer appears on every page, viz., the glorification of the order, or, in the words of the preface, "I here avow that my only object in offering this work to the public is to remove the prejudicial impressions likely to exist in the minds of the uninitiated from a perusal of Morgan's work."

Now one word as to why I obtrude reference to this old book upon the editors and readers of the Cynosure. I "here avow that my only object in" so doing is to bring more proof to the accumulated mass of testimony declaring the revelations of Masonry now before the world to be faithful and true. Let us sum up the truth contained herein.

First, we have the testimony of the Mason who gave me the book, which testimony may be confirmed by a judiciously administered oath.

Second, the testimony of the Mason who wrote the second part of the book. Notice, this last testimony is of weight and importance. The author, though falsifying and dealing in trickery and treachery, to present a "brighter side of the picture" than truth could endorse, that he might (to use his own words) "prevent this glorious institution from falling into disrepute among its enemies;" does not attempt a denial of "Morgan's Expose," but simply pronounces it "illy calculated to wrest the order from that stigma and reproach which its enemies are ever ready to heap upon it."

After a patient analysis of the whole preface I have reduced it substantially to the following: Moved with a desire to "wrest the order from stigma and reproach," Wm. Morgan revealed certain degrees of Masonry. The penalty for such revelation, even when made for such a purpose, was death. This penalty was inflicted, and Wm. Morgan became a martyr to his love for Masonry. Unfortunately his revelation was not confined to "the brighter side" of the institution, hence his martyrdom did not avail to appease the public sentiment against the lodge; so another champion steps forth with trembling. Hear his words: "If Morgan has been barbarously murdered for revealing the three lower degrees, what fate would be awarded to one who should withdraw the vail and lay open the four higher?" As another victim to lodge devotion, like a "bright" Mason, he wisely shows "the brighter side," and does not die a martyr after all. Anti-masons, you should allow the brotherhood to cherish the memory of their martyrs Akirop, Smith, Murdock, (a distant relative of the writer) the author of "Jachin and Boaz," Morgan, and the unnumbered others; without taunting them with the "taking off."

Query: If Rathbun, Baird, Levingston, or any of that stamp should disappear, would Mason's make martyrs of them in their records?

S. A. GILLEY.

OUR MAIL.

J. S. Hickman, Wellington, Ill., writes: "We are gaining ground, not only here but everywhere. I think I am posted. Let the friends take courage and press the battle to the gates."

This is the inspiring call of a tried worker. Shall we all heed it? We are doomed to work, if not in opposing Satan, for him. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

Elijah Gibbs, Amity, Iowa, writes:

"I am doing all I can for the cause and shall continue to while I live; which will not be long according to the course of nature, as I am seventy-three years old. Of course I have lived through the Morgan excitement and saw it convert some of our best men into demons; and if it does that to our best men what will it do with the bad? I I got three, three months subscribers last spring and yesterday got them to renew. I wish every subscriber was a new one until your subscription list was doubled ten times."

Rev. D. R. Baker, College Springs, Iowa, adds to the above good words:

"Father Gibbs has been at work for the Cynosure and the result is enclosed. We will try to keep this field cultivated."

Wesley Lamon, Princeton, Ind., writes:

"I had hoped to have secured some other names but haven't yet. Will still try for I know the more a man reads the Cynosure the more he will appreciate it."

D. D. Hart, Green Springs, O., writes:

"You are engaged in a work of God, as I verily believe, in which I am deeply interested, and for which, under God, I intend to work while I live."

E. D. J. Myers, Nesquehoning, Pa., writes:

"Put me down as a life subscriber for your paper, . . the best of all the papers I get."

James Robinson, Washburn, Ill., writes:

"I am doing what I can for the cause of freedom. I give my paper and Armstrong's thirteen reasons to my neighbor, and if they will not believe Armstrong they will not believe though Morgan rise from the dead."

Geo. Brokaw, Washington, Iowa, sends two renewals, and writes:

"I believe these run out in October; but I thought better to renew in time for I do not want to miss one paper."

We wish every subscriber would renew two or three weeks beforehand.

A lady writes:

"I like your paper very much, although it is not so I can do much good in the cause as they (most all) are against my taking it. Although my husband is not a Mason, he is one who says 'Mind your own business and let other people's alone.'"

We believe with this husband in "minding your own business;" but we should possibly differ from him on the question, What is your business? Christ says, "Let him that heareth, say come." Paul says, "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one." "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." As citizens of this country it is every man's business to see that office holders are honest in the discharge of their duties, and that young men and women understand the principles of justice and are prepared to maintain them. We are neglecting our business when we allow a party of men to get together in secret and take charge of all the public offices and most of the profitable business, shutting out honest and fair competition. It is the business of every American citizen to maintain the principle that all men are created free and equal. As Christians the case is still stronger. We wish some one would write an article for the Cynosure, entitled the "Business of a Christian."

J. W. Pierson, Hadley, Mich., writes:

"Please send the paper. . . I think it the best religious paper I ever saw. . . . The cause is a good one. It will triumph."

Henry Clark, Cedar Creek, Ind., writes:

"I have handed the paper to a number of young men in my neighborhood who were going to join the Masons. They told me that your paper would exclude them from joining any secret society. . . I think I can send a number of subscribers in the course of three months."

Rev. J. M. Smith, Willshire, O., writes:

"I intend to do more for your paper. I want to be placed on the front rank of Reform. Sickness has prevented me from doing more at present."

John Fetterhoff, Chambersburg, Pa., writes:

"I have been to a camp-meeting near Jackson, Pa., which met 27th of August. It continued ten days. There was much effort to raise an excitement, but to little purpose, the leading men, ministers, and nearly all were under the influence of secrecy, or in sympathy with it. I have never been at a place where secrecy was as bold and out-spoken as here. They have boys from eighteen to men up to fifty under their influence and have their lodge meetings more than half the week evenings. Nearly every order of secrecy is represented here in this valley. O! for a good lecturer to come to this place and work. I may say with Paul, my spirit was stirred within me when I saw the country wholly given to secrecy. In my life I have been invited to join secret orders, but always refused, remembering my religious training of Bishop Newcomer and others, to give to the world all the good I have learned, without keeping any of it secret, and expose and reject the evil. I did not think I was a fit subject for secrecy; nor do I believe that any true, honest miuister of the Gospel of Christ, that is a true friend of his fellow beings, who takes an interest in their welfare can with a clear conscience put himself into a positiou in which he is not free to make known all the good he knows and expose the evil. Having confidence in the Christian Cynosure I made a strong effort to get subscribers. It was hard work to meet all the excuses, but I got a few to give it a trial."

He sends five subscriptions. Will others follow his example?

H. M. Tower, Spencer, Mass., writes:

"A few days since I saw a copy of the Cynosure for the first time, and indeed I have never seen any Anti-masonic writings whatever; but as I read article after article in your paper, my heart responded amen and amen. These things are what the Spirit of the living God revealed to me long since. I found that the experience of conscious salvation could not continue in my heart and I still continue in fellowship with the works of darkness; and how clearly have I seen the damning influence of Masonry since I suffered myself to be led by the spirit of a verity. It will guide us into all truth."

Forty Years Ago.

[From the Anti-masonic Review, 1829.]

Memoir of the Jesuits.

Freemasonry is not the only secret and dangerous combination of men, which has threatened the nations of the earth. The members of the order have such confidence in it, and the community have so great respect for them, that Anti-masons can hardly bring their views home to the hearts of many citizens who love their country, and hate all iniquity. In this article we intend to hold up the society of Jesuits, as a mirror to reflect a faithful representation of some of the most odious and alarming features of Freemasonry.

The Jesuits were religionists of the 16th, 17th and 18th, centuries, who aimed at universal influence and power. From Canada in the North-west to China in the South-east, and from Patagonia to the Artic circle, their societies were once to be found. They were a secret order of high pretentions. Their name was one of pride and blasphemy, the society of Jesus. Their members were men of talents and learning, of prudent zeal and indefatigable industry, so much so, that no body of men of their time could in these points compare with them. "Not a Jesuit but can say, like the demon in Scripture: My name is legion; an offence to one of the mysterous order is resented by many thousands. Never did a republican love his country, as every Jesuit loves his society; the very lowest of its members interests himself in its glory, of which he thinks some rays reflect upon himself. There is not even to their brother the cook, or the apothecary, one among them who is not proud and jealous of it. They are all put in action at once by this single spring, which one man directs at his pleasure. This love for their society subsists even in those who have left it; whether it be a real attachment founded upon gratitude, or a policy founded on interest, or on fear, there is hardly an ex-Jesuit preserves not his connection with his old brethren; and who, even though he has reason to complain of them, does not show himself attached to their interests, and ready to defend them against their enemies.' D. Alembert, p. 42.

Professing to be a religious order, they made the vow of poverty and they attained great wealth; professing to be a religious order, they disclaimed meddling with politics, and they grew to enormous political power; professing to be a religious order, they abjured the world; and they exercised a spirit of intrigue and ambition, of insolence and oppression, that at length ruined them. Their society became nearly half what the eloquent Mr. Brainard in 1828 described his fraternity to be: "What is Masonry now? It is powerful. It comprises men of rank, wealth, office, and talent, in power and out of power, and that in almost every place where power is of any importance; and among the other class of community, to the lowest, large numbers, capable of being directed by the efforts of others, so as to have the force of concert throughout the civilized world. They are distributed too, with the means of knowing each other, and the means of keeping secret, and the means of cooperating in the desk, in the legislative hall, on the bench, in every gathering of men of business, in every party of pleasure, in every enterprise of the government, in every domestic circle, in peace and in war, among enemies and friends, and in one place as well as another. It is too late to talk of the propriety of continuing or suppressing Freemasonry, after the time to do so has gone by; good or bad, the world must take it as it is. Think of it, laugh at it, hate it, or despise it, still it is not only what I have told you, but it will continue to be; and a world in arms cannot stop it."

The Jesuits became formidable, factious, and turbulent; and for this cause every State in Europe sought to be purged of them.

Their political power was alone a crime. No society ought to be suffered under a wise government, which accumulates wealth and numbers sufficient to make the society formidable to the coustituted authorities and to the laws. And notwithstanding the Jesuits became formidable rather by the acquisition of power under the government, than by opposition to the rulers of the people, still the jealousy of the magistrates awakened, and Jesuitism deservedly became a proverb.

The controversy began upon the doctrines of the Jesuits, and it was vigorously pursued, as many now would have us pursue the Masonic question, independent of politics. The immortal Pascal in the provincial letters gathered up their absurdities of doctrine, and overwhelmed them with an irony equally chaste and irresistible. "This master piece of pleasantry and eloquence diverted and moved the indignation of all Europe at their expense. Their answers, ill written and full of gall, were not read, while everybody knew the provincial letters by heart." No triumph of a moral nature could be more complete, than that of Pascal over the Jesuits. By it he gained a name greatly to be desired, a name that has outlived his enemies, and that will live, when the society of Jesuits have passed entirely away; but the society itself long outlived him.

They were not built on moral principles, and therefore, they were not overthrown by exposing their false maxims. They stood upon the strength of their political power; and they were able to prostrate their foes in the dust, and to crush many under foot, a century after their entire moral discomfiture by Pascal.

Their doctrine of Probabilism, by which every doubter is permitted to take the more convenient side, and is safe if he take a probable side, though he may think the opposite side is the more probable, made sport for the inhabitants of Europe 100 years, without sensibly shaking the power of the Jesuits. They taught, (they—that is one of their moralists with the sanction of his book by the proper authorities of the order, taught), that "in case of a matter before a judge, where both sides are equally probable, the judge may lawfully decide in favor of his private friend;" and that he may, moreover, "decide first on one side, and then revoke his decision, with the object of serving his friend, provided it be done without incurring scandal;" which is the exact spirit of Freemasonry. They were known to be men of talent and of general integrity, men of learning and of piety, and above all, men of tremendous authority united in one body, able to point a thousand swords at any life, and a thousand tongues at any character, that might oppose them. One man with mental vigor enough literally to execute upon them Capt. Bobadil's plan of defeating an army, and, indeed ten thousand such men fell upon them singly with great courage and vigor. The Jesuits in unbroken phalanx, defended themselves "by exclaiming against the injustice of condemning the whole body for the extravagance of a few, of presuming the actual evil of their opinions from documents long passed away, never extensively circulated, and now buried in the dust of libraries," and the event showed how inefficient are individual attacks upon disciplined bodies of men, and how useless is a moral controversy, to settle a disputed point sustained by political power.

The arm of the law, however, was too strong for their system, and their discipline. They fled before it with the terror of guilt, when it had once broken their sword of political power, and burst their armor of mystery. Pope Clement 14th denounced and abolished the society, and we regret that another, in the chair of St. Peter has since seen fit to restore it.

The Jesuits might have continued their triumphant influence had they not used it in a way to call into their moral controversy the arm of the magistracy. In Portugal this was affected by their assassination of the reigning prince, and in France by their refusing to pay their just debts, and, also, refusing to administer the holy sacrament to their religious and prostrate enemies, the Jansenists. There were expelled without ceremony from Portugal, and in France, by an arret of Parliament, their lectures were stopped, 1st April, 1762, and in the following August, 6th day, their institute was unanimously condemned, their vows were declared not binding, and the order was dissolved, and its effects sold. The Parliament has previously drawn up and published a list of Jesuit opinions, extracted from their authentic publications, "a grand bill of indictment against the order, a national accuasion taken out of its own profane and profligate lips." This course might be adopted with the very best effect against Freemasonry. There are materials enough in the hands of a thousand enemies of the mystic order, to furnish such a bill of indictment, as the nation may receive, and the American people will try with the witness of truth, and with the jury of the ballot box, according to the best established precedents of republican jurisprudence.

Freemasonry has, also, many votaries. We do them no wrong by exposing the system; but we do them a service. This cunningly devised falsehood has blinded the eyes, perverted the understanding, and corrupted the heart of many intelligent citizens. A free and peaceable citizen of this republic, has been maliciously torn from his wife and children, and deliberately put to death, cooly butchered, after long cousultation, and repeated advisement, by highly respectable individuals; and many men in high standing were privy to the design, and assisted in the preliminary measures, although few were present at the fatal catastrophe.

Day by day new discoveries are made of the iniquity of an institution which has ever been equally studious to proclaim its charities, and to conceal its crimes. While each honest member may have individually known but a single instance of corruption, and hoped it was the only one, all the fraternity and the world have been stunned with its praiseworthy benevolence. Now when inquiry is awakened, and public scrunity runs through the land it is astonishing what a heap of crime is accumulated upon the head of this mystery. Bringing together in one mass, the crimes before isolated in every corner, they are a mountain of iniquity equally surprising and alarming. So it was in the breaking up of the military order of Knight Templars in the 14th century, and the order of Jesuits under notice.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, September 24, 1874.

The next Presidential election occurs, if we mistake not, on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1876, two years from the first of November next. Mr. Needles, of Missouri, writes us so sensibly and forcibly, as to what we need to do to prepare for and meet that national crisis, that we give his words instead of our own. He writes:

ALBANY, Gentry Co., Mo., Sept. 11, 1874.

"Wheaton will furnish but few C. A. B's, but cannot you furnish us a single man that would be an honor to our cause. I think there will be no trouble in raising six or eight hundred dollars if we can get a competent man at the helm. Much depends for success, in our Presidential campaign, on putting good lecturers into every State during the next year. If we can get a wide-awake man into every State we can make a big stir, and carry a large vote. For the leaven is working in all directions."

These words of Mr. Needles are gold. Let us heed them.

Theodore Tilton is out with another "statement" on Beecher which the Chicago Tribune deems so important that it issues it in an afternoon "extra." This "statement" consists largely of documents, diaries, letters, etc., confirming Mr. Beecher's guilt, of which we have no more doubt than of any fact which is proved by circumstantial evidence; and men do not call witnesses to notice their acts of adultery, or commit crime in presence of a committee.

Tilton and Moulton are doubtless vile men; viler than ordinary savages, because civilized men utterly destitute of the principles of Christian civilization. What then? One is the chosen bosom friend and the other the long-loved disciple of H. W. Beecher. But vile men are believed when ten thousand concurrent proofs confirm their statements; and there is but one man in the United States who could invent the terms "nest-hiding" and "paroxysmal kisses" to describe secret acts of adultery, and the ogling embraces which precede them. And if these terms are Mr. Beecher's, the facts connected with them are true. The "untarnished reputation" of Mr. Beecher, made so much of, has been, for years, "tarnished" by insinuated charges of adultery by Bowen, as the tripartite agreement proves. "The unclean spirits," now deceiving the "kings" of the moral world, are fearfully horrible. But the blindness which ignores their success is more so.

Leonard Bacon writes a letter in the Beecher case in which he takes credit for causing the discussion, and hopes Mr. Beecher may be cleared and vindicated. When he plays non-committal prospects are growing dark.

Our next annual meeting is to be at Pittsburgh. A proposition was laid before our Executive Committee at our late meeting that our anniversary should come next winter instead of being in May or June.

The arguments are: 1, That we need an early meeting to do something about funds to support lecturers. 2. That we need an early meeting to adopt a platform and make definite arrangements for the approaching Presidential election, that is, to see whether we will attempt to get up an electoral ticket in every State of the Union.

The arguments against it were: 1, That December is busy January cold, and February dreary: while May is the month of birds and June the month of roses. 2, That people hate to leave home in winter, ride in cold cars, and risk being snowed in. 3, That it will confuse our reckoning and subject us to the thousand inconveniences of all great changes. Laid over till next meeting.

THE CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL.

If God permit our readers shall yet see that Mr. Hinman, our Illinois lecturer, was right when he declared the formation of a National Congregational Council at Oberlin, whose only permanent officer, its Secretary, was a Freemason chaplain, was "the heaviest blow our cause has received yet."

The Congregational churches being, in the words of the Lutheran, Mosheim, "little independent republics," without a national assembly or conference to ward off reforms, were exposed to the assaults of Anti-masonic truth. Hence slavery dreaded them. Hence Jeff. Davis wished the country reconstructed for slavery "with New England left out." Hence the first strike of every anti-Christian power in America is to muzzle the Congregational allied press and put the everlasting irrepressible Yankee under leaders committed to indifference in moral reforms. This slavery did; and this Freemasonry is doing. God willing, our readers shall see how.

Meantime watch the coming meeting of this National Congregational Council, Sept. 30th, at New Haven, Conn. One of the speakers is a Royal Arch Mason, who, if God takes his fifth libation in earnest, must suffer the double damnation he has invoked. More anon.

THE DAY OF FASTING AND PRAYER.

The Executive Committee of the National Christian Association have recommended a day of prayer and fasting, and never was appointment more appropriate. Whether we consider the Scripture theory of fasting for casting out devils, breaking and expelling the force and power of evil spirits over men, or whether we consider the vast stake striven for by the demons of the lodge, which is no less than the religion and government of this country and the world; or if we look at the weak, helpless and distracted condition of our cause, which is that of Christ against the world and Satan, never was fasting humiliation and prayer more fitting or more called for.

True, our progress is wonderful, and, in the words of Bro. Needles, the leaven is working in all directions. But, like the early Christians and early Abolitionists, we are but a handful against the world: without a treasury, without officers who can supervise our national work, because no funds to support even a secretary. Our general agent all the time abroad in the field, our poor lecturers like an invading army with no commissariat at their backs and their families wanting bread like other families! We do not look much like overthrowing Satan's strongest holds in this land. But we have the weapon of prayer, and that can neither be conquered or put aside. It will yet subdue this world to Christ. Besides, you will see that the Executive Committee are slowly approaching our responsibilities, and the hosts of God are mustering for this fight. Important action has been taken at our last two meetings, and if God approves and seconds our endeavors something will yet be done. Read the action of the Executive Committee next week.

GENERALIZED HOLINESS.

Another instance is before us in which the peaceful harmony of a camp-meeting was disturbed by the mention of a great social and political evil as interfering with the practice and profession of holiness. At the meeting of the National Camp-meeting Association, lately held in Urbana, Ohio, Rev. Mr. Osborne, of Florida, a member of the Association, and the father of the movement, spoke on the subject of "Holiness," and brought in the dreaded word, "Masonry." Its effect is thus reported:

"He thought the people were tired of the common kind of religion, and it was time to seek the uncommon religion. He exhorted the people to seek a salvation that would save them from tobacco, from croquet, from Freemasonry—a salvation that would save preachers from follies of the day, and that would save the bishops of the Methodist church from traveling and riding on Sunday, and from going to wine dinners, even if given by men worth their millions, and who occasionally gave half a million to the church. At this point he was interrupted by Rev. Wm. Fitzgerald and Rev. J. T. Correy, who said these were serious charges. He replied that he could not help it; they were facts, and should be dealt with as such; but he declined to give particulars, saying to the gentlemen interrupting him that this was no time for details, but he would meet them in his conference and be ready to answer for what he now said."

The congregation it is reported dispersed with considerable excitement.

The Northern Christian Advocate makes this circumstance the occasion of repeating a warning on introducing specialties (particular sins) in teaching holiness. To do so is great indiscretion, and the brethren engaged in "this specialty" are likely to be "betrayed by their zeal."

That is, the Methodist brethren who are calling all men to a holy and blameless life through sanctification by the Holy Spirit will bring in dissention and promote divisions if they make any practical application of their doctrines. They should seek "peace" before "purity"; preach a holiness that is silent on the "follies of the day," tobacco, croquet, the lodge, and Sabbath-breaking and wine-bibbing by the Methodist bishops, lest some loved sin be pressed sore and cry out. Is holiness a whitewash to conceal the deformities, the hideousness of sin, a vail to hide its festering corruption?

The brother was right. We have enough of this "common kind of religion;" that can breathe the poisoned air of the lodge and the world's vices and festivities, and yet have a name to live; that feels no pang when the churches of Christ are made to serve his foes. And we have enough of that holiness which is afraid of the "plague of the heart;" lest the revolting leprosy be brought to the surface. If the National Holiness Association is honestly seeking to promote the object which gave it a name there are public evils and private vices which it must seek to remove. Before God it is in duty bound to "show the people their sin." It cannot draw a line between the popular and unpopular; between surface sins which point the standard puns of favorite orators, and the deep-rooted ones which crucify or stone those who dare thrust at them. If such a distinction is made and adhered to however there will be no more warnings about "specialties." The lodge in particular would be safe, its members crouching securely behind the wall of popular favor.

It is a satisfaction to know that the present managers of the holiness movement are willing to proclaim the whole truth, to point to that "way" in which prophets and apostles trod, the "highway of holiness," and whether they will hear or forbear, warn men to lay aside the besetting sin, the worldly encumbrance, before entering the lists. May the Lord bless their work.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL DISCIPLINE AND SECRET ORDERS.

Not long since reference was made in the columns of the Cynosure to the discipline of the Methodist Episcopal church, as not upholding connection with Freemasonry; the special application being to Mr. Tullis, of Tiskilwa, who claimed to be the only Mason in the Methodist church of which he was pastor. The following is from an able article on the proposition, "That the oath-bound adhering Mason, is the real church disloyalist," prepared for the Methodist Free Press some time since by Rev. O. E. Burch. Let every Christian reader and especially our Methodist brethren read it carefully; it clearly presents the requirments of their church discipline:

I shall allude first to the Christian man's oath.

It is put in these words: "As we confess that vain and oath swearing is forbidden Christian men by the Lord Jesus Christ and his apostle, James, so we judge that the Christian religion doth not prohibit, but that a man may swear when the magistrate requireth in a cause of faith and charity, so that it be done according to the prophet's teaching, in judgment, justice and truth." (See Dis. for 1872. p. 29.)

When the civil authority, as represented in the magistrate, requires the oath of a Christian man, this article doth not prohibit his taking it, if it be done in "charity, justice and truth." But all "vain and rash" swearing is positively forbidden hereby, and this prohibition rests on the highest authority, namely, that of the Apostle James and upon the express declaration of him who spake as never man spake, the Lord

Jesus Christ. (Read Matt. v, 34–37, and Jas. v. 12.)

"Vain" swearing, "rash" swearing; mild terms these, but they cover the ground. They prohibit common profanity and all that uncommon profanity found in the Masonic oath. Herein every professed Methodist Christian who assumes the Masonic oath, is quite guilty of violating this article, which he has promised to observe and keep. He is herein, whether aware of it or not, a traitor to this part of his covenant. For proof, I need hardly detain the reader to particularize. Let him take any Masonic oath from that of the Entered Apprentice all the way down the dark, intricate, slippery path, to the lowest round of the lodge ladder, and examine it carefully in the light of Scripture, and then see if he can speak of it as merely "rash and vain." The truth is, that for unblushing and heaven-daring profanity, these Masonic oaths and penalties are unparalled within the limits of civilization.

Once more, the Discipline forbids "Doing what we know is not for the glory of God," and specifies among other particulars, "The taking of such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." (See Dis. for 1872. p. 33.)

We ask here, is Freemasonry for the "glory of God?" Was it organized and has it been carried on for these hundred and thirty or more years, for the "glory of God?" Are its oaths and death penalties assumed, and its midnight murders committed in the name of the "glory of God?" Do men join the lodge and allow themselves to be divested of their clothes, and be roped, blindfolded, sworn, etc., and all for the "glory of God?" But if Masonry be not of God, then whence is it? Certainly not from angels, at least not from good angels. It is not the device of him whom Christ called "The father of liars?" But to the point of Masonic diversions. Call Masonry by what name you will; call it a pastime, a diversion, (and certainly it diverts in more ways than one;) call it "work and labor of the craft," or in the expssive language of Wesley, "an amazing banter on mankind." We are not sticking for a name. The point we raise on this rule of discipline is this: Can Freemasonry, or any part thereof be taken, assumed or participated in, in the "name of the Lord Jesus Christ?" If not, then he who participates in Freemasonry, violates the rule of Discipline which forbids doing what cannot be done in the "name of the Lord Jesus Christ." And what is the truth here? Simply that Christ and Freemasonry are as wide asunder as the poles. Put this question to any well informed Mason, "What (as Masons), do you do with Jesus, who is called Christ?" and he will reply, (if honest), "as Masons, we shut the door against him. We have no room for Christ in the lodge;" "to admit him would bring our ancient, honorable order down to the level of a 'sect.'" Such is the statement of Dr. Oliver, one of the highest and most learned of English Masons. Such indeed, is the doctrine of Masonry, the world over.

We have two more disciplinary obligations, but without extended argument. The first is assumed in the baptismal ordinance, and is ratified again when the candidate is received into the full fellowship of the church. The vows put in these words: "Dost thou renounce the devil and all his works, and vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh, so that thou will not follow or be led by them?" Answer. "I renounce them all." (See Dis. for 1872, p. 247-253.)

"The devil and his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world." Most expressive words, these; had they been penned with a special eye to Masonry they could not well have been more so. Is not Masonry one of the "works of the devil," and is it not of the "vain pomp and glory of the world?" If not, there never was an institution that bore such a character. Look at Masonry as it is. See it springing into life in a London grog-shop, a most fitting place for such a birthplace of truth. See it spreading and then corrupting the religion of the Lord Jesus. See it entering our courts with the sworn intent to defeat the cause of civil justice. Behold its grand parades; and its most marvelously bombastic titles of Worshipfuls and most grand, great grands and grandees, and all Puissants, and so on to the end of the Masonic chapter. Scan its oaths and death penalties, and also its pride, deception and murder. Look at the characters who compose the institution of Masonry.

Did the Onniscient eye ever look on such a strange medley? And is this institution, with such an origin, trained by such oaths and death penalties, composed of such a motley crew, doing work of Divine origin? If so, it is, and I say it with reverence, a Divine monstrosity. In the face of the facts, let Masons sing if they will "Hail Masonry Divine," but I assure them the judgment of every unbiased mind will be that the inspiration of their order comes from the dark side of the universe. It is of the devil. And every Methodist solemnly promises to renounce all these "works of the devil," all this "pomp and glory of the world;" not to be led by them. But how—O how, have they kept that church covenant? Let conscience answer.

Once more, and I am done with citations from the Discipline. When the minister is ordained elder in the M. E. church, this question with others is put to him: "Will you be ready with all diligence to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's word." He answers, "I will, the Lord being my helper." Does he do this? Let us see. Masonry builds its temples, erects its altars and establishes it worship to the "unknown god." Here it receives its "blind candidates," passes and raises them, and claims that through this process it "regenerates their natures" and fits them for the Masonic heaven, the "Grand Lodge above." And yet this institution, setting up another religion, which in the expressive language of Chase (Masonic), "has nothing whatever to do with the Bible," has not been rebuked and "banished" by these ministers, according to their pledge; far from it. On the other hand, the door of the church has been opened and these Masonic idolaters have been taken to its bosom, and though "viper" it be, it has been warmed into life by the fostering hand of the church, instead of rebuking and "banishing this strange doctrine," these very elders have joined themselves to this Bail worship, and have bound themselves under a most horrid "curse" to defend and perpetrate this damnable and murderous institution, and to take "vengeance" insome form on all the enemies of Masonry. And this they do, driving them from the ministery and church, because they try to be faithful to their ordination vows, their conscience, and their God. This alliance is very close with these strange gods, so that he who opposes Masonry, is set down as an opponent of the church. But in view of the above facts, the reader can decide readily whether Ahab or Elijah troubles Israel.

NOTES.

—The Sisters of Loretto, a Catholic order of this city, have entered suit against their Bishop, both in his private capacity and as Bishop of Chicago. Ahab coveted the vineyard of Naboth and got it by a base maneuver and murder; Bishop Foley put his eye on a nice city lot owned by the Sisters and got it by forging the name of their president; so says the charge before the court.

—The secret temperance organizations are not so closely connected with the reform from which they plunder reputation as many people suppose. The New York Grand Lodge of Good Templars met last week and 34,672 members reported against 36,934 last year. There were 15,326 initiations. The suspensions, which are the alleged cause of the deficit, must therefore number some 17,000, for the other causes of diminution and increase generally counterbalance each other.

—Have they overlooked the oldest Mason? Where are the wise men and scribes of the order that they neglect so useful an advertisement? A correspondent of the Christian Family Companion (German Baptist, or "Dunkard") says that there came recently to Salem, Ill., a man calling himself James Rutledge who is a Mason and a "Dunkard," and is 109 years old. How he can maintain membership in the two organizations is not explained.

—I. R. B. Arnold of the Reformer and Free Press is developing an original plan for illustrating lodge work to the eye and impressing its enormous evils on the understanding. By means of a magic lantern and views representing a candidate going through the process of initiation in the various degrees he will accomplish the first. For the small entrance fee he gives a copy of the Reformer for two or three months, thus securing the introduction of the paper, and information and argument to strengthen the impressions of the initiation scenes and the explanation accompanying them. This work is now in preparation and we hope soon to learn that its success is assured.

—Victor Emanuel has had the satisfaction of signing the order expelling the Pope from the Freemasons. What can he do but go on purifying the order? But he finds stern measures necessary. A letter from Rome says: "The revolution now desires to set up the Red Republican and the Commune, and to play in Rome the pranks it played in Paris, and to become bold enough to summon a congress to be held at Ferrara. On the 2d of August there was a sort of congress held at a villa near Rimini, and at this were assembled twenty-eight leaders of the revolution from all parts of the peninsula. The government marched a body of troops to the villa, surrounded it, and arrested twenty-eight Reds. They are searched, and, from papers found upon them and from other information, the government obtained a list of over 200 clubs of Reds and Internationalists in the provinces of Revenna, Acona, Bologna, and Ferrara. These clubs were all closed within the next few days, their papers were seized, and some of their members arrested."

—The New York Witness has the following instance and deduction on the matter of independence party politics: "This morning, on a ferry-boat crossing from Brooklyn to the city, two young men were pretty warmly discussing political prospects in their ward, and one of them, in tones that could not but be heard by the passengers sitting near, said, 'I don't care, Frank; whoever my party puts up, I mean to vote for, I don't care who he is.' Such a declaration indicates the policy adopted in political matters by many intelligent citizens from whom better things might be expected. The party leaders too frequently lend all their influence in support of candidates who are either themselves corrupt and unreliable, or else are pliable, easy-going men, such as can readily be used as tools for the furtherance of any scheme for robbery, or for the promotion of designs hurtful to the interests of public morality and good government. This being so —and every one knows it is just what is being planned in half the wards in New York and Brooklyn—why should respectable citizens stick by their party. As long as the politicians know that the large class of voters who never interfere with politics and do not attend the primaries and caucuses and conventions, may be relied upon to support 'whoever the party may put up,' they will continue to select candidates who will prove a disgrace and shame; but if this state of things is to be remedied, there must be less of attachment to party and more firm adherence to principle. Let voters feel the importance of the duty resting upon them and they will not then support any man simply because he is the party nominee."

—The secret orders hate discussions above all things. A school house debate on this character will arouse the whole neighborhood, and any one can find enough arguments against secret societies in the Anti-mason's Scrap Book for a dozen such debates. Try it.

It is said that during the last twenty-five years eighty-three Baptist churches have been formed among the Germans of this country, some of which disfellowship those who will not give of their means for the support of the Gospel.

The Home Circle.

The Kingdom of God.

I say to thee, do thou repeat
To the first man thou mayest meet,
In lane, highway, or open street—

That he, and we, and all men move
Under a canopy of love,
As broad as the blue sky above:

That doubt and trouble, fear and pain
And anguish, all are shadows vain;
That death itself shall not remain;

That weary deserts we may tread,
A dreary labyrinth may thread,
Through dark ways underground be led;

Yet, if we will one Guide obey,
The dreariest path, the darkest way,
Shall issue out in heavenly day.

And we, on divers shores now cast,
Shall meet, our perilous voyage past,
All in our Father's house at last.

And ere thou leave him, say thou this,
Yet one word more: they only miss
The winning of that final bliss,

Who will not count it true that Love,
Blessing, not cursing, rules above,
And that in it we live and move.

And one thing further make him know—
That to believe these things are so,
This firm faith never to forego—

Despite of all that seems at strife
With blessing, all with curses rife—
That this is blessing, this is life.

—Archbishop Trench.

Does a Man's Belief Affect his Salvation?

There was once a sea-captain who refused to believe in the existence of a reef of rocks somewhere in the Mediterranean, which was plainly laid down in the charts. In essaying to pass the place, his vessel was wrecked and all perished. Had his want of faith anything to do in the matter?

The history of the Hebrews, and especially their journey from Egypt to the land of promise, has ever been accepted as typical of the journey of the Christian through this world, and nothing can be more apparent to the careful reader of that history, than that nearly all the troubles and afflictions that befell them by the way, their forty years' wanderings in the Arabian desert, and their failure at last to take possession of the land, were the legitimate result of their want of faith in God, their leader. Indeed we are plainly told (Heb. iii. 19), "they could not enter in because of unbelief." But for this, and no other cause, their march would have occupied but a few months at farthest, their enemies would everywhere have fled before them, and the race who went out of Egypt would have taken undisputed possession of the land "flowing with milk and honey."

There were, doubtless, in that vast roving multitude hundreds, perhaps thousands, who were honest and faithful in all that pertained to their fellows, self-sacrificing to the sick and suffering, with characters beyond reproach; sympathetic, benevolent, loving and loved; yet not having a right faith in God, they could not "please" him (Heb. xi. 6), and even these were excluded from the land.

What was the great sin of the Jews? Unquestionably unbelief. They refused to accept Christ as their Saviour; would not have him to rule over them. To those who asked, "What shall we do that we might work the works of God?" he answered: "This is the work of God, That ye believe on him whom he hath sent." (John vi. 29.) To believe on him was to have everlasting life, while on the other hand he plainly told them: "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." (John viii. 24.)

The same kind of teaching is found throughout the New Testament. To the Philippian jailor who cried out in agony, "Sirs, what shall I do to be saved?" the quiet answer of Paul was: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." He might have said to himself, "And is that all?"

The treasurer to the queen of the Ethiopians was allowed to become a member of the church, only after Philip had drawn from him the confession that he "believed with all his heart that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." And we think it would be difficult to find where any of the early teachers of Christianity addressed themselves to unbelievers in terms that did not, at least, include this as the one great question for their consideration.

It seems, therefore, that the first and all-important duty of life is simply to believe; indeed, it is a commandment. Some read in Eph. ii. 5, that faith is the gift of God; grace is the gift. Faith is the result of the evidence God has placed within our reach. It is sufficient. If we neglect to examine it, the fault is our own.

But while justification and salvation through faith is clearly a Bible doctrine, it is quite as clearly taught that "faith, without works, is dead." A faith that saves, fills the heart with love to the Saviour, "because he hath first loved us;" hath so loved us—it cannot do otherwise; and the result is he is made "a new man in Christ Jesus," having new affections and desires. He seeks to leave off his old sins and evil habits, and to so live that he may never again grieve the Holy Spirit—in a word, to become Christlike. And this not for the love of so doing, not for the honor it brings, not to win the affection and esteem of others, but "as unto him whose servant he now is and whose name he desires to honor." It matters not that there ever have been, and now are, counterfeits. The history of two thousand years ago compared, as to morals and general tendencies, with to-day, proclaim the genuine.

With the free-thinking moralist the case is far otherwise. He is not the servant of Christ but of the world, and of the world expects and receives his reward—a good name and the esteem and confidence of his fellow-men. Or he finds, which is much the same thing, that it is far better to his well-being here thus to live. But can he tell us how it happens that such a vast proportion of those who go about doing good, delving into the depths of pollution and crime to carry help and sympathy to the unfortunate and suffering, as well as of those who lead in the warfare against every kind of evil, believe "with all their hearts" in the way of salvation by Jesus Christ?

In the light, then, of such evidence as the Bible affords, what shall be said of an opinion so largely prevalent, that a man's belief or disbelief in no way affects his salvation? that in the light of his daily life he is to be judged, and rewarded according to his works? He may "count the blood of the covenant an unholy thing," and Him who died to save him an imposter and a deceiver; yet if his "good deeds outweigh his evil ones," he may, nevertheless, sit down with Abraham in the kingdom of God, whose faith was counted to him for righteousness. With ten thousand martyrs who suffered every conceivable torment, ending at last in death, rather than deny the faith, he may spend an eternity of blessedness, and indeed be vastly happier than they, for having most of them just emerged from heathenism, with all its crimes and vices, their good deeds could not have largely abounded.

It may seem unjust to him whose life has been full of good deeds, that he should be shut out of the kingdom with "drunkards and whoremongers and idolaters," and all that is wicked and vile; but if it is God's way it is the right way, and there is an end to all reasoning.—Christian Worker.

Closer to Christ.

The sole remedy for all our woes, all our apprehensions, for all our sorrow, is just to come closer to Christ—closer to Christ in personal experience, closer to Christ in daily communion, closer to Christ in perpetual reliance, closer to Christ in importunate prayer, closer to Christ in honest and hearty work! When the good Dr. Alexander, of Princeton, in New Jersey, lay a-dying, some one came to him and quoted a passage for his comfort as he lay half unconscious—"I know in whom I have believed!" A fire lit up his glazing eye, and the old Christian warrior roused himself as for an utterance of latest testimony, and he said to his startled listeners—"No, I cannot allow even a preposition between me and my Saviour; "I know whom I have believed!" Let us get up to that level; let the great baptized heart of the church get up to the level of intimate, close, faithful union with Christ, and we and our cause are safe! No fear of the confessional then. Assuredly those who will not bear an intervening preposition will never brook an intervening priest. No fear of over-weening sorrow then, for we shall remember that, although God buries his workmen, he carries on his work. No fear of relaxed efforts then, for idleness will be seen in its hatefulness as a sin against boundless love. No fear of straitened means and empty exchequers, and niggard doles, and small-hearted liberalities then, for the frost of every heart must melt that is so near the Saviour; and men putting away the large greeds and little givings of their childish days will, like Araunah, "as a king give unto the king," pouring out their treasures as brave warriors their blood, and giving, or striving to give, in some far-off and reverent manner, after the measure of him who, that we and the world might live, spared not his only begotten Son. —Punshon.

Character.

From the cradle to the grave the character of an individual, like his body, in undergoing constant changes. It grows, it develops, it matures, it ripens, until the frost of death gives it the fixedness of marble; then as the tree falls so it shall lie.

Character, like stature, temperament, tendency, is to a great extent inherited. Parents outline their children before their birth, and herein is a thought that should give many a parent food for reflection.

Great as the influence of various circumstances in molding character, the influence of one's own will may be equally potent. "Thought and affliction, passion, hell itself, she turns to favor and to prettiness," said Laertes of Ophelia when her reason was "like sweet bells jangled, and out of tune." Even thus may the strong will compel poverty, disaster, bereavement, no less than prosperity and happiness, to become the ministers of grace and perfectness to the aspiring, resolute, patient soul.

The corner-stone of all noble character is truth, and as the virtues ever go hand in hand, with this will naturally be associated purity, justice, integrity, reverence. Therefore the first endeavor of the parent should be to quicken in his child's heart the love of truth, the hatred of falsehood. The first effort of him who would turn away from evil and love good is to cultivate in himself perfect sincerity and utter truthfulness. With this as a foundation there is no limit to the possible growth of the human soul toward absolute virtue and perfectness.

Just as the tendencies in the body to disease and deformity may be modified and sometimes eradicated by a severe and skillful regimen, so may faults in character be purged and smoothed away; flaws may be polished out and virtues incorporated, if, while it is supliant, the right steps are taken to make it symmetrical and well rounded.

A single element of weakness or vice may taint the entire character. For awhile it may seem firm and sound, but as a little leaven leavened the whole lump, so the outgrowth of one vicious thought may gradually undermine the strongest principles and blast the labors of a lifetime. It is not safe to have one inch of wormy timber in the stoutest ship; it is not safe to harbor in the heart the smallest element that is not wholly virtuous, for when the fiery blasts of temptation try the soul, if stubble is found there, it will surely be consumed and leave behind it a blackened, gaping chasm.

Down deep in the inner man, where no eye but God can see, and only the consciousness of the individual can penetrate, should be laid away against the day of trial solid bars of bullion of gold, so that the "promise to pay" can all be made good dollar for dollar. We want no inflation here; here even "the best currency in the world" will answer the purpose. The image of our virtue must be stamped current gold.

Not by accident or chance does the choicest fruit mature on our trees.

How carefully we prune them; how closely we watch to destroy their enemies; how skillfully we cultivate them, and how we rejoice when success crowns our labors! Not by accident or chance did Charles Sumner become the noble man he was. How diligently did he cultivate art, literature, and the virtues that made for him the spotless character he wears so proudly and will wear forever.

Our labors of aspiration and conquest must last till the breath leaves the body. It is never safe to rest upon our oars until we are anchored in the harbor. Life is full of adverse currents that even when we are almost asshore may drift us away from the desired haven.—N. Y. Tribune.

A Desolate Land.

Greenland is almost continental in its dimentions, containing not less than 750,000 square miles, and is all a bleak wilderness of ice and snow, save a little strip extending to 74 deg. north latitude, along the western shore. The coasts are deeply indented with bays and fiords, which invaribly terminate in glaciers. The whole interior seems to be buried beneath a great depth of snow and ice, which loads up the valleys and wraps over the hills. Nothing can be more desolate than the interior. It is one dead, dreary expanse of white so far as the eye can reach—no living creature frequents this wilderness—neither beast, bird nor insect. The silence, deep as death, is broken only when the whirring storm arises to sweep before it the pitiless, blinding snow. This represents the state of the northern part of our continent in the ice age. Some of the Greenland glaciers attain a vast size. Dr. Kane reports the great Humboldt glacier as sixty miles wide at its termination. Its seaward face rises abruptly from the level of the water to the height of 300 feet.

Since ice is lighter than water, whenever a glacier enters the sea the dense salt water tends to buoy it up. The great tenacity of the frozen mass enables it to resist the pressure for a time. By-and-by, however, as the ice reaches deeper water, its cohesion is overcome, and large segments are forced from its terminal part, and floated up from the bed of the sea, to sail away as icebergs. The glacier evidently crops under the water to considerable depths, or so long as the force of cohesion is able to resist the tendency of the salt water to press upward.

Though Greenland is said to be inhabited only upon the south and west coast, there is a record of an early settlement upon the side toward Iceland, with which there has been no communication for 400 years. The colony was planted about 1,000 A. D., which flourished, and maintained intercourse with its mother country till the beginning of the fifteenth century. Since that time, owing to the setting in of the arctic current, and the consequent gradual increase of ice upon the coast, the colony became inaccessible and the records of it disappear from history. At various intervals between 1579, 1751, etc., down to our own time, the intrepid Danes have striven in vain to reopen communication with their lost colony. This emerald coast, with valleys well stocked with reindeer and verdant glades, is now shut in by the pitiless ice-pack, and the fate of its inhabitants ought to excite the interest of the world. It would be very interesting to be informed of the condition of this colony; whether the increasing cold has enlarged the glaciers so as to push the dwellings out to sea, or whether the habitations are still standing, and a population has sprung up who know of the outside world only by tradition.—Popular Science Monthly.

Bramwell was a plain preacher, and to some extent an uncultivated preacher; but he was full of faith and zeal, and his ministry was attended with marvelous power. He was preaching in a little village, on one occasion, and the German minister, Trubner, was induced to go and hear him. Trubner was a very cultivated scholar, and a profound critic, and when some of Bramwell's friends saw him there they said, "Alas! alas! for poor Bramwell; how Trubner will criticise him!" Precious little did Bramwell care for him, or for all the philosphers under the sun. He preached, and set before his audience the everlasting Gospel of Jesus Christ; and when Trubner went out of the church, one of his friends said to him, "How do you like him? Don't you think he wanders a good deal in his preaching?" "Oh, yes," said the old Lutheran, "he do wander most delightfully from de subject to de heart."

As a ship held by an anchor looks as though it were going out with the tide, yet never goes, so some souls that seem constantly to be getting nearer to Christ never come, because they are anchored and held by some secret sin.

Children's Corner.

Broken Things.

Harry Vince sat at the table with his face in his hands, looking very miserable and gloomy. Uncle Fred came in at that moment, and looked quietly at him.

"Well, Harry, what is the matter?" he said presently.

"I think you can see what is the matter, uncle," said Harry pointing to some fragments of porcelain that lay on the table.

"You have had an accident, I suppose?"

"Yes; a very bad one, too."

"What is broken?"

"A very beautiful inkstand which the boys in our class gave me."

"How did it happen?"

"I was busy making this ship for Charley, and got so interested in it that I forgot the inkstand which stood on the table. I do not quite know how the accident occurred, but somehow I pushed the inkstand off the table and it fell on the floor. Even that would not have broken it, I think, but there happened to be a large pebble which I had brought in, and placed just where the inkstand fell; and of course this trouble followed."

"The inkstand certainly seems much shattered."

"It is broken into more than half-a dozen pieces."

"Have you tried to make the fragments fit together? Some wonderful things are accomplished in the way of mending with cement."

"But this inkstand cannot be mended. The pieces will not fit in closely enough."

"What a pity!"

"It is, indeed, a pity! I would not have had it happen for any money. You see, it is not only the value of the thing itself, but, of course, I should like to have kept it forever in memory of the kindness of my school-fellows."

"Of course you would. Why did they make you the present."

Oh! It was a simple thing that caused it. You know that I am a good swimmer, and some of the boys cannot swim at all. Well, one day a little lad fell into the pond. I do not suppose he would have been drowned even if I had not been there; but I happened to see the accident, and sprang in after him."

"Very good; and I suppose the boys thought it a brave action which deserved to be rewarded?"

"Yes, they said so; and a few days afterward they came in a body and presented me with the inkstand."

"It seems to have been very handsome."

"It was, very. And when I think that by my own carelessness the thing is spoiled, it makes me feel quite furious with myself."

"I do not wonder at that, Harry!"

"I would not mind so much if it could anyhow be stuck together.

"All the king's horses and all the king's men Cannot put Humpty-Dumpty together again.'

"That is it, you see; and it is very trying. I feel as if I shall never forgive myself for my folly."

"I suppose a little thought might have prevented the accident?"

"Certainly. If the inkstand had been in its place in my room, instead of standing on the table, it would not have happened. If I had not been making the ship in this room, where I certainly ought not to have been making it, the inkstand would be whole at this moment. Or if I had not foolishly brought that big stone here the consequence would have been less distressing."

"Then there were three ways of preventing the occurrence, if you had only thought of either one of them?"

"Yes."

"Well, Harry, my boy, I am truly sorry for you. But I think that, after all, the accident, though it has pained you so much, may possibly do you good in the end."

"That is so like you, Uncle Fred! But I do not want to be done good to, if the process must be unpleasant."

"Very likely not, Harry; but the Great Teacher does not want to ask us whether we want his lessons or not. He simply sees our need, and gives us what is necessary."

"But you do not suppose, Uncle, that God sent this trouble for my good?"

"I am sure he permitted it to come."

"But it was my own fault."

"Yes; and he often makes use of troubles that are of our own bringing, in order that we may be profited."

"Can any good possibly come out of our sin and humiliation?"

"Oh! yes, I think so. A boy does wrong, and the consequences are very painful both to himself and to all who care for him. But his own sufferings make him thoughtful, and he feels ashamed of his weakness and folly, and resolves to be better. Having discovered the fact that he is much worse than he thought himself to be, he asks God's grace for the future. The result is, that he is thenceforth a better and stronger lad."

"Yes, I see. But what of my broken inkstand?"

"Well, it may at least remind you of many other things that are broken through carelessness and forgetfulness. Did you ever break a promise, Harry?"

Harry's face became more red as his uncle's eyes were fixed on it.

"Yes, Uncle. I am afraid I have broken my promise sometimes."

"You once promised an old man that you would go into his house for a few minutes every day, and read a chapter from the Bible to him. When did you last go?"

"I am ashamed to say that I have not been there for a fortnight."

"The last time you went you began to read the seventeenth of John, and the old man enjoyed the words, for they seemed like life to him. But a playmate called you, and you went away hastily, promising that you would return in the afternoon and finish. The man waited, listening and longing for the sound of your footstep, all the rest of that day. He quite expected you, and every person who came near his door caused him to look up with eager hopefulness. But you did not go either on that day or on the next, and the slow hours passed away and left the man without the comfort of the soothing words of Jesus."

Harry started up and put on his hat.

"O, Uncle! I am very sorry and ashamed of myself. I will go at once to the man and beg him to forgive me."

Uncle Fred laid his hand on Harry's arm.

"It is too late, my boy. Your promise is like your inkstand—it is broken past repair."

"What do you mean, Uncle?"

"The old man died yesterday. Almost his last words were those of regret at your long absence."

Poor Harry! He was utterly cast down by the news; but I think he will try not to break things in the future. —London Christian World.

Religious Intelligence.

—It is reported that the Ku-Klux have hung Rev. Jeremiah Webster of the West Texas conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, and one of the best men in the State.

—Rev. A. Crooks, agent of the Wesleyan Methodist connection, reports nine additions to the preaching force and $500 raised for the new publishing house at Syracuse, N. Y., at the late Indiana State conference.

—The Twenty-second General Conference of the Free Will Baptists in North America will be held at Providence, R. I., beginning at the Roger Williams Church, October 7.

—There are more than 100,000,000 women in India, and until very recently, not one of all this vast multitude could read. At the present time 30,000 girls and women are being taught in the mission-schools. When these become teachers of others, the light will spread very rapidly.

—The Presbyterian church gathered to its fold last year 36,971 converts—the largest ever gathered in one year since Presbyterianism was established on this continent.

—The Presbyterian Board sustains the only existing mission in Brazil. In a territory nearly as large as Europe, and a population of 10,000,000, there are only thirteen Protestant ministers preaching in the language of the people.

—From 1804 to 1873 the Bible has been circulated in 271 languages—over 131,000,000 copies. Last year every hour of each working day 1,300 Bibles were printed, over 16,000 every day, and in languages spoken by 700,000,000 of people.

—The Lutheran church in America numbers 2,309 pastors, 4,115 congregations, 485,000 communicants. There has been an increase during the year of 134 pastors, 286 congregations, 27,000 communicants.

—The American Bible Society has published the Gospel of John in the New York system of point reading for the use of blind persons. This is thought a decided improvement upon the method of raised letters. It is claimed that by the system of points an adult who has lost his sight by disease or accident can learn to read in a few days, whereas it requires months to learn to read by raised letters.

—An extended revival prevails among the various regiments of the British army stationed in India. The awakening began at Calcutta and spread from thence to other stations, reaching in its quickening progress Durapore, Lucknow, Cawnpore, Meerut, Chickreta, Sabotha, Allahabad, and other military stations. Many officers are taking an active part in the movement, and already some of the regiments count scores of earnest converts.

—A large and very successful camp-meeting was held during the last week in August by the Free Methodists near Gowanda, N. Y. Rev. B. T. Roberts, President of the National Christian Association, was one of the speakers. An interesting feature of the meeting was an afternoon meeting held by the Seneca Indians. Through an interpreter they listened to preaching, and also participated themselves in the exercises. Their singing is described as unsurpassed.

—The Diocesan Convention of Illinois, Protestant Episcopal church, met in this city last week. Its principal business was the election of a successor to the late Bishop Whitehouse, deceased. The choice fell upon Prof. Geo. F. Seymour of the General Theological Seminary in New York. Prof. Seymour is a young man, and is reported to be a very high churchman. His administration will not therefore in this respect fall athwart the arrangements of his predecessor.

—A young Japanese student, who was received into the Congregational church in Fair Haven, last week, wrote a letter to his pastor stating the course of his religious experience. It was the words of Christ upon the cross—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!"—that arrested his thought and toutched his heart- "I was perfectly astonished," says he, "to hear this, and wondered what kind of a man could say so."

—The following satistics of religion in Scotland are accepted as substantially correct: Population of Scotland in 1872, 3,394,000; members of the established church, 1,063,000; other Presbyterian bodies, 1,299,000; other denominations, 202,000; total Evangelical population, 2,564,000; Roman Catholics, 290,000; Socinian and other sects, 10,000; neglecting ordinances, 530,000

—A remarkable religious awakening is reported in North China. Two years ago Cheefoo, a Buddhist, happening to enter a Christian church, became a convert to Christianity, and immediately went to labor among the people of his native town to induce them to embrace the same religion. Thus far there have been 160 converts. The place of the revival is 200 miles distant from the residence of any missionary, and outside of the ordinary line of travel.

—Our Banner publishes an interesting report of the contributions of the Reformed Presbyterian church for the past year. The total amount contributed is $200,606, an increase over last year but less than the year before; the average for the whole membership of the church is $20.62 each. The different benevolent objects supported by the congregations of this church are Home, Foreign and Southern Missions; National Reform, Theological Seminary, Education, Church Erection and Pastors' Salary funds, beside miscellaneous objects.

—Rev. J. Martin, missionary in Turkey, has written a letter to Earl Derby, England, remonstrating with the British government for the misrepresentations and tardy measures of the British embassador, Sir Henry Clinton, in the matter of religious persecution by the Turkish government, which is in violation of treaties. The remonstrance was favorably received. In spite of government intolerance during January of this year 2,276 copies of the Scriptures were sold in Constantinople. Over 1,000 of these were single Gospels in the Turkish language, and they were purchased by Moslems.

—A missionary in China took pains to collect statistics as to the cost of idolatrous worship in that country. He reported that in one district of Shanghai at least 3,600 pounds sterling are expended annually to appease the souls of the dead. As there are 1,620 districts in the empire, some spending more, some less, the average would give nearly 6,000,000 pounds sterling spent for the Hien gods. In the same manner it is eatimated that 6,350,400 pounds sterling are expended annually for the Foo gods. Add to this the amounts spent in each family for the worship of its ancestors, equal to abort a dollar and a half to each family. With 80,000,000 families of five persons each, the aggregate is 40,000,000 pounds sterling. Is there anything like such a sum contributed to all the Christian objects of this country?

News of the Week.

The City.

The Common Council was visited by a delegation from the Citizens Association, an organization of the "heavy men" of Chicago, who were in earnest about the fire and insurance question. Before they appeared the Council passed an ordinance readopting a former action, making the fire limits co-extensive with the boundaries of the city and applying its provisions so as to be effectual. The agencies here raised their rates of insurance lately on all buildings not properly protected by fire wall and iron shutters.——Measures for self-protection against fire have been eagerly sought and some plans had a recent demonstration. A plaining mill took fire but was saved with small damage, chiefly by its own apparatus, which was a system of perforated iron pipes extending through the building supplied with water from a large tank.

Political.

Samuel D. Tilden was nominated for Governor of New York by the Democratic Convention on the 17th. He is a candidate not altogether satisfactory to the Liberals and there is some speculation whether their convention on the 29th will ratify the nomination. Tilden bore a leading part in the overthrow of the Tweed dynasty and his uncompromising attitude as a reformer will alienate many votes in New York city. It is a question whether he does not stand better than Dix in the election.——Gen. Butler addressed his constituents in Gloucester, Mass., on Saturday night. The Southern outrages and the financial question, were the chief themes of his discourse. He also brought forward arguments why he should be re-elected to Congress. His reception was with marked cool ness, and his popularity seems waning in his district. ——The election in Maine has gone uniformly Republican.

The Railroad War.

The decision of the Supreme court at Madison, Wis. on the cases brought up under the potter law has been against the railroad companies to their surprise, as they were confident of a decision in their favor. The Chicago and Northwestern and Milwaukee and St. Paul roads are most interested. Mr. Mitchell, president of the latter says that his company will at once take measures to comply with the laws, although it will have a disastrous effect on the business of the road. A large number of locomotives and cars will of necessity be immediately withdrawn from the road in order to curtail expenses. He hopes that that the legislature will act fairly, and protects the company's rights equally with those of the public.

There is said to be a strong feeling in Milwaukee in favor of the repeal of the Potter law, now that the railroads have been taught that the people are sover eign.

President Keep, of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, says that his company will conform with the requirements of the law, but every means of reducing expenses will be adopted at once, In anticipation of the decision the service of the road has been greatly reduced, and the number uf trains would also be reduced as well as the rate of speed. The company could not consent to do business under the law if it still furnished the same accommodations, and consequently fewer trains would be run, and second class cars run in place of first-class. All work, except necessary repairs, would be stopped in the machine-shops, and no improvements of any kind made until the position of railroads is better defined by the United States Supreme court. In the opinion of President Keep the business men of Wisconsin generally are in favor of repealing the law, since, by its operation, railroad building is effectually prevented.

The Country.

By the burning of the Granite Mills at Fall River, Mass., on Saturday forty young girls lost their lives, and many more were injured by jumping from windows. The fire caught in some machinery on the fourth floor and quickly spread, by means of oil on the floor and about the machinery, to the center of the building where were situated the stairways in a tower extending to the lower floor. There were 100 girls at work on this floor and thirty more, mere children, in the attic above. A few escaped down the accustomed stairway; but flight was quickly cut off and a majority the terrified girls could not be induced to escape by the fire ladders on the exterior of the building, and so miserably perished. The means of escape it is said were sufficient, but the suddenness of the fire seem to deprive the girls of their wits and even force was not enough in some cases to prevent their perishing.——A dispatch from Dodge City, Kan., Sept. 19th, states that Col. Miles who has been fighting the Indians has been obliged to fall back, no reinforcements being available. A supply train was captured and one man killed and twenty-seven wounded. The Indians are bold and numerous around Ft. Dodge, and an attack is daily expected. ——A Unitarian National conference was held last week at Saratoga, N. Y. Among the members reported present were Judge E. R. Hoar, of Massachusetts and ex-Gov. Padelford, of Rhode Island. A Universalist General Convention was held at the same time in New York city.——The barge James Davidson which cleared from Chicago with the largest cargo of wheat ever loaded on the lakes got aground in St. Clair river, and had to be lightened before she could be got into Lake Erie.——The best authority at Agusta says that the cotton crop of Georgia will be 100,000 bales short of that of last year. The whole crop is estimated at 3,500,000 to 3,700,000 bales.——The monument to be erected in honor of General Nathaniel Lyon, who was killed at the battle of Wilson Creek in August, 1861, was dedicated in Lyon Park, St. Louis. Between 3,000 and 4,000 old soldiers and citizens were present and eloquent orations were delivered in English and German. The monument is a red Missouri granite obelisk, 15 feet high, standing upon a granite pedestal 20 feet high.——The water of Lake Mahopac has been found to be poisonous. During the summer a large number of persons staying at the Gregory House, on its shores, have suffered, and it is even alleged that some of the servants have died from its effects.

To All Seceding Masons.—The National Christian Association at its late meeting in Syracuse, N. Y., appointed to the Recording Secretary the duty of securing the names of all the seceding Masons of the country with their endorsement of Bernard's Revelation. In accordance with this vote all seceding Masons are requested to send their names and the endorsement as stated; and they are desired in order to make the statement more complete to send also their post-office address, the number of degrees taken, number of years connected with the lodge, the date of their leaving it, and where residing when they joined. These facts will be preserved with the records of the National Association, and their value in the future progress of the reform will be undoubtedly great.

Friends of the reform everywhere are earnestly desired to co-operate in extending this notice and securing the desired information, which should be sent to

LESSON XL.—OCT. 4, 1874.—THE DEAF MUTE.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK vii. 31-37. Commit 31-37; Primary verse, 37.

31 And again, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, he came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis.

32 And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech; and they beseech him to put his hand upon him.

33 And they took him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue;

34 And looking up to heaven, he sighed, and saith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened;

35 And straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain.

36 And he charged them that they should tell no man: but the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it;

37 And were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well: he maketh both the deaf to hear and the dumb to speak.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"O Lord, open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise."—Ps. li, 15.

TOPIC.—"He hath done all things well."

TOPICAL ANALYSIS.

Phenicia to Decapolis,	verse	31.
Asking for Others,	verses	32, 33.
Looking up to Heaven,	verse	34.
The Cure and the Charge,	verses	34, 36.
The Only Perfect One,	verse	37.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

What is the first topic? Where did we leave Jesus in our last lesson? If you draw a line describing a curve to the north, and then eastward across the Jordan, and south of Mt. Hermon; then to the south a little east of the lake, to a point opposite the middle of the sea, it will show the route traveled as nearly as it can be given. Many miracles were performed here (Matt. xv. 30); two are recorded by Mark (vii. 32; viii. 6).

What is the second topic? Who did they bring to Jesus? (verse 32.) What did they ask Jesus to do? (verse 32.) What seven things did Jesus do? (33, 34.) What kind of language do you think this man used? Did not Jesus use the same language in talking to him?

What is the third topic? Who was it that looked up to heaven? (verse 34.) At what times did he do the same thing? (ch. viii. 11; John xi. 38, 41; see also ch. vi. 41; John xvii. 1.) Why do you think he did this? Ask your teacher why. Why did Stephen look? (Acts vii. 55.) What does Paul say? (2 Cor. iv. 18; Heb. xii. 2.) We may look as often as we will.

What is the fourth topic? What did Jesus say to the man? (verse 34-) What was the first result? What the second and third? It was as if his tongue had been bound; now it was free. What did Jesus say to them? (verse 36.) We hardly know why he did this, but he knew. Did they obey him? (verse 36,) They were as astonished they could hardly keep from telling it. What does Matthew say was the result? (ch. xv. 31.)

What is the fifth topic? What did the people say? (verse 37. Why did they say this? (verse 37.) What more can we say? We can add, he died, he rose, he ascended, he intercedes. Many men have done some things well, Do you know any one besides Jesus who never failed? He is God, he is man. What is he in Prov. viii. 24? What is Mark ii. 17? What in John xix. 6? What in 1 Peter i. 18, 19? What in Matt. i 21? Luke xix. 10? Eph. ii. 14?

LESSONS. The journies of Jesus. His many wonderful works. Many who have ears do not hear; many who have tongues do not speak; we must take such to the Lord. We may look up to heaven for help, for comfort, for blessing. Jesus can open our ears to his word, and loose our tongues to speak his praise. He is the only perfect one. He hath done all things well.

Speaking of the "poor trash" in our Sunday-school libraries, Mr. F. G. Ensign thinks that the fault does not lie wholly with those who make and sell the worthless books—reprehensible as that is; for so long as Sunday-schools demand a cheap literature, he says, they will get it. And as he truthfully adds, "it is the business of every Sunday-school, of every church, and of every parent to know what their children read, and they ought to be willing to pay the honest value for the books they read." His rule-of-three for keeping clear of what is trashy is, (1.) Let Sunday schools quit begging of every one of whom they wish to buy. (2.) Pay for what they want and accept only that which is good. Buy by quality, not quantity. (3.) Examine the books carefully before putting them into the library, and do not "jew" the book-seller, nor trade with those who have two or three prices.—Bible Studies.

Let the teacher each Sabbath day give every pupil something special to do—some specific point or points in the next lesson to investigate. Besides giving him something special to do, this will also cause him to feel special obligations to make preparation on these points. But these points are so related to the remainder of the lesson that he cannot make satisfactory preparation on them without a more or less thorough investigation of the whole. The same points may be given to two or more at the same time, which will add the advantage of a little wholesome emulation. The expedient has been known to work charmingly, and it is worth trying by the teacher who finds his class indisposed to study the lesson.—Bible Teacher.

Home and Health Hints.

AN ERECT GAIT.—To bend forward while walking, indicates debility, depression, or mental trouble, and always aggravates itself and promotes disease. Pads and supporters are all pernicious, and worse than useless, because they teach the system to rely on them, and cannot support one part of the body without causing an unnatural strain on some other part, and, to that extent, tend to disease that part. There is always one easily available and successful method of acquiring an erect, manly gait, without any material effort, or feeling of awkwardness. Let the chin be a little above a horrizontal line, which is easily done by keeping the eye fixed on the top of some person's hat or bonnet in front of you. The habit of this erect carriage may be faciliated by accustoming yourself, when at home, in the garden, or other places, to walk with your hands behind, held in one another, and the head thrown up, as is done in smoking a cigar or singing a tune.—Hall's Journal of Health.

TO CLEAN PAINT.—A correspondent says: Use but little water at once; keep it warm and clean by changing it often. A flannel cloth takes off fly specks better than cotton. Soap will remove the paint; so use but little of it. Cold tea is the best liquid for cleaning varnished paint, window panes and mirrors. A sharp piece of wood is indispensable for cleaning corners. A saucer of sifted ashes should always be at hand to clean unvarnished paint that has become badly smoked; it is better than soap. Never put soap upon glass unless it can be thoroughly rinsed off. Wash off the specks with warm tea, and rub the panes dry; then make a paste of whiting and water, and put a little in the center of each pane. Take a dry cloth and rub it off with a chamois skin or flannel, and your windows will shine like crystals.

MEANS OF CHECKING COUGHING, SNEEZING.—There are many facts which show that morbid phenomena of respiration can be also stopped by the influence of arrest. Coughing, for instance, can be stopped by pressing on the nerves on the lip in the neighborhood of the nose. A pressure there may prevent a cough when it is beginning. Sneezing may be stopped by the same mechanism. Pressing also in the neighborhood of the ear, right in front of the ear, may stop coughing. It is so also of the hiccough, but much less so than for sneezing or coughing. Pressing very hard on the top of the mouth inside is also a means of stopping coughing. And I may say the will has immense power there.—Brown Sequard.

It is known to many, yet not to all, that a handful of flour bound on to a wound will prevent the blood from flowing. Thousands of men who have bled to death on the battle field would have been saved if they had had a handful of flour in their sacks, and bound it on their wound with their handkerchief.

Few people know, but everybody ought to know, that by placing a glass fruit-jar on a folded towel, thoroughly soaked in cold water, the fruit can be poured in boiling hot, with no more danger of breaking than with a tin can.

Josh Billings says: "Don't toil before breakfast. If it is necessary to toil before breakfast, eat your breakfast first."

Farm and Garden.

Milking in silence.

The London Milk Journal thus comments upon a discussion at a Farmer's Club at West Cornwall, Conn., where a member said he discharged one of his milkers who persisted in talking during milking time, and that, in three days, the increase of milk was equal to the man's weekly wages.

We fear an increase to such an extent must have been due to other causes besides the one assigned. If the enlarged yield followed solely from the dismissal of the man, we suspect his presence affected the supply of milk in some way apart from his loquacity. We have frequently found a change of servants to prove beneficial.

It may be that talking prevents hens from laying also. We know we have often experienced a vast increase in the number of eggs brought into the house after the removal of a too officious individual from our employ. Besides, our cows have sometimes improved in produce by the same means, but we generally attribute it to cleaner milking by fresh and more industrious hands. It is, however, well known that cows are particularly sensitive to sights and sounds during the time they are milked. Unless they are at perfect ease they will not give their milk freely. They should be daily milked under the same conditions.

Cows that are fed at milking time require their usual meal, or they may become restless or dissatisfied, and put a stop to their bounty. Many of them will only allow some special favorite to milk them. In some parts of the country where women are solely employed to milk, we frequently find one or two tuneful lasses singing at their work, and many cows become so pleased with the rustic harmony as to show evident signs of their approval of the loud, sweet voice by giving their milk only by being sung to. Everything that distracts the attention of the cow and ruffles her placidity should be avoided when called upon to yield her milk. Her nervous system should not be excited by strange noises, unwelcome objects or rough treatment, or the effect will be apparent in a diminished supply in the milk pail. It would no doubt be good advice, on the whole, to tell those who milk that they should keep their tongues and keep their tempers. The Connecticut farmer appears to have sufficient reasons, indeed, to say that "speech is silver, but silence is golden."

ASHES AS FOOD FOR CATTLE.—The Live Stock Journal has a correspondent who found his cattle given to the habit of eating wood, chewing bones, etc., They became thin in flesh, refused to eat hay, and presented a sickly appearance. He had no impression that their food lacked the constituents for making bone; and his neighbors used bone meal, without noticing any good results whatever. At last he put about four bushels of leached ashes in his barn-yard and threw out to them about a shovelful each day. They all ate with evident relish. After turning them out to pasture, he put one peck of dry ashes per week on the ground in the pasture. They ate it all and gnawed off the grass where it had been lying. The cattle began to improve, gaining flesh and looking better than they had done for several years. He says this morbid appearance was unnoticed years ago, from the fact that the ground was new and ashy from the burning of the woods and land clearings. Since this discovery he gives one quart of ashes mixed with one quart of salt to twelve head of cattle bout once a week.

Facts and Figures.

—Prof. E. E. White, ex-superintendent of the Ohio schools, holds that no man is fit for the position of teacher "unless his knowledge of what he teaches is so fresh and thorough that he would be able to teach if all the text-books in the world were burned up."

—All the Christian sects together comprise a membership of about 330,000,000, while heathen worshipers count over 1,000,000,000. The Buddhists alone have 340,000,000. The Roman Catholic church embraces 195,000,000 followers, while all the Protestant denominations combined number only 68,139,000.

—An item marking the progress of trade is the purchase in Chicago and shipment hence, via Montreal to Liverpool of 300 head of cattle. A steamer has been fitted up at Montreal with stalls and other conveniences, and it is proposed to make the trade in beeves between Chicago and Liverpool a permanent one. This is a new outlet to the already enormous cattle trade of Chicago.

—Until this summer the greatest telegraphic feat was, if we do not mistake, the transmission of Charles Francis Adams' speech at Albany, comprising about 14,000 words. Perhaps the report of the Boston fire occupied a little larger space, but there was a longer time in which to send the news. Beecher's statement—the second one—contained 19,000 words, and Moulton's 22,000. These achievements are altogether without precedent in the history of telegraphing.

—M. Flaminio Servi, grand rabbi of Casale, has prepared satistics of the Israelites in different parts of Europe. He reckons 5,000 in France, 494,000 in Germany, 1,220,000 in Austria and Hungary, 52,000 in Great Britain, 2,600,000 in Russia and Poland, 43,000 in Italy, 3,000 in Belgium, 68,000 in Holland, 5,300 in Switzerland, 5,600 in Greece, 250,000 in Roumania, 3,000 in Spain, 3,500 in Portugal, 10,000 in Scandanavia, and 350,000 in European Turkey, making in all 5,157,400E uropean Jews.

—A census of Japan has at length been taken, this, so far as is known, being the first enumeration of that people. It is announced as the census for "the fifth year of Meiji, the 2,532d year from the accession of Jimmu Tenno, which corresponds to the year 1872 of our calendar. By this census the population of Japan is given at 33,110,825, there being about 480,000 more males than females. There are in that country 7,107,841 houses, 89,914 Buddhist temples and 128,123 "shinto shrines." One-half of the people are classed as agriculturists, 701,000 as artisans, and 1,309,000 as merchants.

—From returns issued by the House of Commons relating to Irish land owners, resident and non-resident, we find that less than 20,000 persons own the soil of Ireland, of whom 5,982 own less than 100 acres. These, of course, are resident; and so are 5,589 more, owning an average of 1,600 acres apiece; while only 1,443, owning altogether 3,145,214 acres, or a seventh of the soil, are usually resident outside the island. A considerable number—4,465—reside away from their properties, but still in Ireland, and the remaining few are occasional visitors. Absenteeism can hardly be counted, therefore, among the grand grievances of Ireland, more especially as many of the richest absentees are among the more spirited and lenient landlords.

—The recent German census shows that the non-German inhabitants of the Empire number 3,240,000. They consist of 220.000 French-speaking people in Alsace-Lorraine, and 10,000 French and Walloons in the Rhine Provinces, 2,450,000 Poles, 150.000 Lithuanians, 150,000 Danes in North Schleswig, 88,000 Wends in Brandenburg and Silesia, and 52,000 in Saxony, 50.000 Moravians and Czechs in Silesia, and 80,000 foreigners. The Protestant clergy number 16,000, while the Roman Catholics have 20,000 priests, 800 monasteries and convents, twenty bishopricks, and three vicars apostolic. Of the twenty-one universities, Berlin heads the list with 3,573 students, Leipsic standing next, with 2,032, Rostock, with 135, being the smallest.

—The legislation in Northern India for the suppression of female infanticide has had a salutary effect. The birth of a girl being considered among the Hindoos a calamity, it has been usual to make away with a large proportion of female infants. The Calcutta correspondent of the Times states of the effect in less than two years: "The result of the special police agency has been this—that in a population of nearly half a million, no fewer than 12,854 lives have been saved. You may imagine the frightful disproportion of the sexes when I say that even after this gain there are still in that guilty population only 54,712 girls to 101,092 boys."

—At the International Grain and Seed Market held in Vienna, Austria, last month, some valuable statistics were obtained concerning the harvests of the German Empire, Austria and Hungary. In the Austrian Empire the total supply of wheat, rye and Indian corn is expected to amount to about 346,000,000 bushels, a large excess over the average product. In Prussia the yield of wheat is estimated at 54,000,000 American cwt., rye, 93,700,000. In the smaller German States there is a general surplus of wheat, with a falling off of barley and rye in some of them. The Austrian empire has a deficiency of about 3,500,000 bushels of oats, which offer a market to other countries. The same country will be able to supply foreign market with over 5,000,000 hundred weight of barley, 12,000,000 of flour, 5,000,000 of rye, and a moderate amount of corn. These estimates were made at a season of the year when the harvests were well advanced, and they are supposed to be very accurate.

—Although constant experiments have been made to find inorganic materials for the road-bed of railways, nothing has yet been found that will supply the place of wood; nor have we reason to hope that the demand for ties will ever be less per mile than at present.

At the end of 1873 there were reported 71,564,9 miles of main lines, and 13,512 miles of sidings and double tracts, making 85,077,9 miles of railroad within the United States. Of the main lines, 5,462,3 miles were in the New England States, 14,209 in the Middle States, and 23,905,9 in the Western States. 15,316,4 in the Southern States and 2,681,3 in the Pacific States. Upon these roads locomotives were running, and a large proportion of them used wood for their fuel. The number of ties used varies from 2,200 to 2,800 per mile. If we take 2,500 as a mean, we find that 212,692,500 pieces of timber, eight feet long, and from six to eight inches between upper and lower surfaces, are required to supply this single item.

The durability of ties vary with the kinds of timber, soil, climate and use, ranging from four to ten years. Taking six as an average, the amount required for the annual supply must be 35,448,750 pieces, or 94,530,000 cubic feet. In considering this, we must remember that a large amount of waste occurs from hewing and from leaving the upper part of the trees, some of which are used as firewood, and the remainder being a total loss.—Northwestern Lumberman.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The nse that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samnel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hnndred pages jnst issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate acconnt, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Mnrder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curions and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is snpposed hy many to he, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his acconnt is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y,., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficlently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

MINUTES OF THE SYRACUSE CONVENTION.

This is a pamphlet of 150 pages and besides a full report of the proceedings, resolutions and Committee Reports and the Constitution of the National Christian Association it contains the addresses of Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Earnest Christian; of Charles D. Greene, Esq., on the "The Grange in its relation to American principles;" of Prof. C. A. Blanchard on "The Weapons of our Warfare;" of Rev. D. S. Caldwell, State Agent of Ohio; Elder Baird; Rev. D. P. Rathbun; Mrs. Gage and others; and a remarkable paper from elder David Bernard, giving thrillingly interesting reminiscences of Morgan times and a detailed history of the revelation of Freemasonry by himself and others. Also very interesting papers from Victory Birdseye, Esq., on "The Morgan trials," and Enoch Honewell, Esq., on the Tract Work. Price, post paid. 25 cents each, $2,00 per doz., by express $12,00 per 100.

ABOUT COMMISSIONS.

We receive letters occasionally containing two, three, or more subscriptions in which nothing is said about commissions. Some friends write "we take no commissions." Others say send the amount of commission in tracts and books. Others say, consider it a donation to the tract fund. We are glad to get workers for the circulation of the Cynosure and pay nothing more cheerfully than commissions. However, our paper is cheap at $2,00 a year and requires a great addition to our present list in order to enable us to issue it in this attractive form, so that when money is received and nothing said about commission we do not as a rule, allow any.

The point of these observations is, tell us what you wish to have done with your commission unless you take it out before forwarding the subscription money.

FRANK MILLER AND SON'S LEATHER PRESERVATIVE, HARNESS OIL, BLACKING ETC.,—These goods are so well known as standard articles that no one who has used them need a word in their favor. But some of our readers may not have trid them and to such we say, When you want anything in this line you will find the preparations of Frank Miller & Son's the best in the market. Their Leather Preservative not only preserves, the leather, as its name indicates, but it keeps the leather soft and impervious to rain and snow. A single box of this preservative may save you much sickness and a heavy doctor's bill; as wet feet are the cause of a great amount of sickness. A good harness kept soft with Frank Miller & Son's Harness Oil will last three times as long as it will if allowed to become dry and hard. Mr. Frank Miller is a Cynosure subscriber and our readers may be assured, makes and sells articles of merit only. If you are not able to get these goods in your place, get your harness maker, or shoe-maker to send, or send yourself to FRANK MILLER & SON'S 18 & 20 CEDAR ST., NEW YORK CITY.

Topics of the Time.

THE LODGE TRAINING of Gen. S. A. Hurlbut, Republican candidate for Congress from the Fourth Congressional district, has furnished a serious obstacle in the way of his election. While Major General of volunteers in 1865, and in temporary command of the city of New Orleans, his management was so notoriously corrupt that President Lincoln appointed a commission, composed of Maj. Gen. W. T. Smith and Jas. T. Brady, a well known jurist of New York, to investigate affairs on the ground. In their report are nine several indictments: two for official falsehood, two for perjury, and three for conniving to prevent detection of offenses. This report is being circulated throughout the country to the evident demolition of Hurlbut's political hopes. All these offenses are directly allied with lodge practice—form the greater part of its real "work," and Mr. Hurlbut in losing the election, as he undoubtedly will, may be inclined to curse the day he became a neophyte and experienced the throes of the (Masonic) "new birth." His alma-mater has had at least one dutiful son who will reap the benefits of obedience.

INSURANCE.—The action of the National Board of Underwriters in New York in withdrawing from Chicago presents serious questions to business men. This Board is a kind of central committee for a large number of the leading home and foreign insurance companies, and its recommendations are generally considered final. In the complexity and extension of the insurance business this Board possesses great power. Insurance in cities has become fundamental to business prosperity. Where confidence in the companies is shaken, as in the great fire of 1871, the whole country is affected, and in self-defense they are wary of great risks. Manufactures, trade and produce forsake the spot where reliable insurance cannot be had. And when such security withdraws, as it were in bulk, even a great fire cannot give a greater blow to commercial prosperity. A conflagration comes by act of God; the other calamity by men, who, it may be, have riva interests, and do not scruple to use their power. It is a question of importance whether the present cumbrous system of insurance is the best. It has sucked in millions on millions of capital. Vast sums have gone to enrich individuals, to erect business palaces; and a great army of able-bodied men are withdrawn from other and more useful callings to carry it on. The general use of such means of preventing fire as we have would make it almost necessary. Or the theory of insurance might be brought into a greatly simplified practice by putting it under control of communities or the government. The manifest existing evils call for a remedy, and financial disaster will hasten its discovery.

THE COST OF REPUBLICANISM.—A comparison of the revenues and expenditures of Great Britain and America should make a pause for reflection. Leaving out the interest on the public debt on both sides, it is said the current expenditure of the United States is $202,000,000 against $235,000,000 for Britain. Thus Britain, with its large army and navy and heavy cost of royalty, requires only $33,000,000 more than the United States general government for current expenses. If to this we add the cost of the several State governments we have an aggregate which must be beyond that of the government which has been considered one of the most expensive in the world. Old Ben. Franklin and the political economists of his day made wise provisions for the peaceful maintenance of a large and prosperous people, but those virtuous statesmen could not understand the temptations of vast and suddenly acquired wealth, and so build a constitutional fortification against them, and so we have a standing army of government thieves, who have even improved on the Spartan code. They not only regard it no dishonor to steal, but, so that they escape the penitentiary, their social standing is not impaired even if their crime is detected. It is the support of the volunteers who have enlisted under Butler, Logan, Shepherd, Sanborn, Jayne, Tweed and Casey that has changed the United States government from the most economical to the most expensive in the world. Following their government our people are every where marked for outlandish expenditure. It is not reasonable that such extravagance and public dishonesty long consist with the application of free principles to government. Jehovah himself will work the humiliating but necessary change, if his people repent not of this their folly.

SUNDAY AND ART.—The Chicago Tribune calls on the managers of the Inter-State Exposition to open its art gallery on Lord's day to the classes whose time and means do not admit of their attendance during the week. Its arguments apply as well to opening the whole building. The arguments are: the plan has been tried at Cincinnati and no disorder ensued, therefore it was a success; the public mind and heart would be educated; and it is no sin to look at a picture on the Sabbath. It would be expected that a city journal, whose Sunday issues and Sunday trains run plainly counter to public conscience, should be anxious to increase Sabbath-breaking to hide its own sins in a multitude of others. Hence the suggestion. For every one knows that there are scarce a hundred well persons in the city who care for paintings and statuary, who cannot honestly find the means and time to visit the Exposition on an ordinary day. The example of Cincinnati is nothing. If art galleries invited rows, they would be fewer than they are. But how would the people be made better by the cultivation of esthetical qualities. It brings no grace to the heart or peace to the conscience. There is but one right use of the Sabbath—to hallow it. There can be no better than a wrong use. To introduce any end other than the highest answers no useful purpose. It serves only to break down public conscience, which, of all nations, we are not able to afford.

Satan's Sacrifice.

BY A. THOMSON.

The river murmured hoarsely by,
The heavy clouds hung dark and low,
The moon withdrew her silver eye,
And shuddered all the land with woe.

A power that God had never blessed,
Whose inmost heart was treason's seat,
Like savage beast for blood athirst
Sprang sudden from its black retreat.

A loyal subject of our laws,
To freedom's holy rights an heir,
Was dragged from home and friends, because
He show'd the monster's bloody lair.

Now see him standing fetter bound
Beside the river's troubled brink,
Whose chilling waves shall soon surround
The man that dared for freedom think.

The trees hang down their leafy hands
And moan, as if in deep despair,
And evil spirits come in bands
From all the outer fields of air.

On harpy wing they cleave the sky,
Through forests deep and dark they flew,
From midnight revels wild and high,
And midnight seance came the crew.

From Afric's Purrah jungles dark,
From heathen temples smeared with blood,
From rebel Judah's Godless ark,
They gathered swiftly to the flood.

The hour had come; upon the wave
A shallop moved with muffled oar,—
Hell shouted in its blackest cave
And demons danced upon the shore.

For, dropped into the gurgling deep,
The martyred Morgan prays and dies;
While Freedom's holy angel's weep,
And hell accepts the sacrifice.

But hell could not the deed conceal,
The river tells it to the sea,
And all the winds of heaven reveal
The hateful secret to the free.

But think not ye who stand to-day
To bar the laws of God and man,
Who lift your guilty hands to pray
And take that holy name in vain,—

Think not to stamp with cloven foot
From human bosoms love and faith,
Nor deem that truth's eternal root
Shall wither at your blast of death.

Though priests of Baal may throng the land
To gag the church and throttle law,
There lives and acts a fearless band
Untamed by ruffian threat or awe:

To struggle bravely for the right,
For all that Christians hold as dear;
And God himself shall guide the fight
And couch the truth's unerring spear.

Wheaton, Ill.

I believe the first test of a truly great man is his humility. I do not mean, by humility, doubt of his own power, or hesitation in speaking of his opinions; but a right understanding of the relation between what we can do and say, and the rest of the world's sayings and doings. All great men not only know their business, but usually know that they know it; and are not only right in their opinions, but they are right in them; only they do not think much of themselves on that account.—Ruskin.

An Honest Confession.

[The following is an extract from a little work "Behind the Bars," written by Seth W. Payne, a journalist who was arrested for an exposure of the New York courts. He was tried and sentenced by the vindicative judge, and spent a short time in Albany penitentiary, where he wrote the above work. His opinion of Freemasonry under the circumstances is very interesting. Mr. Payne reported Prof. C. A. Blanchard's lectures in Brooklyn last year for one of the city journals.]

From the number of Masonic signs I have received I should judge that full three-fourths of the male members of this institution are also members of the Masonic fraternity. I can scarcely catch the eye of a fellow convict without his giving me a Masonic sign. This, when I was less experienced than now, would have surprised me, but since meeting with Masons in the hovels of the Irish in Ireland, the street corners of London, the Five Points and other places where the honest poor are compelled to congregate in New York, in the wigwams of the savages on the plains, the temples of the Latter-Day Saints in Salt Lake, and among the Celestials of the Pacific coast, it is not at all strange that I should find Masons among the inmates of our jails and State prisons. Masonry, I believe, is as universal as the world. A Mason may go where he will and he will find many calling themselves such.

And now, having said this much, I am going to tell what I think of both Masonry and Masons. In telling what I thought about a judge I got jugged in this jail. For aught I know it may be treason for a man to tell what he thinks about Masonry. I do not want to say things that I ought not to say. I do not want to be locked up in prison any more, and wish to have it understood that I pretend to write no one's thoughts but my own. I see out of my own eyes and hear through my own ears, and those having eyes and ears of their own should not be led astray by mine. Three times already have they led me to jail.

In Masonic language, I hail from Bergen Lodge, No. 49, Jersey City, where I believe I am in good standing, as every Mason is who pays his dues and bows submissive to the high priests of the order, there being from one to ten priestly idols to be worshiped in every lodge. I am, therefore, a Mason, and, after making myself known as such, am entitled to visit any lodge in any part of the world.

The theory of Masonry is most excellent. The practice of Masons, as a class, is a disgrace to the name they bear. The teaching of Masonry is charity and brotherly love; the practice is selfishness and love of self-interest. Men become Masons that they may, by Masonry, be advanced in wealth and positions of power. Thus you will find all the corrupt, wire-pulling politicians to be Masons. They want office, and through the influence of Masonry they expect to obtain it, no matter how obnoxious their actions may have been to the masses of the people. It is a lamentable fact, yet nevertheless true, that about all the mean men of a city or town can be found by reading the names in a Masonic directory of the place. There was a time in the history of this country when an honest man considered it an honor to be known as a Mason, but now honesty blushes to own the name. This does not argue a word against the institution, but it shows the facility with which bad men gain admission to the order. There is but little honor among Masons as a class. They sometimes turn out with great pomp and display to bury a rich brother. They do this to be seen of men, but to scare the wolf from the door of a dead honest brother's family brings them neither honor nor votes. I would advise all poor and honest disposed men to keep clear of Masonry. It will do you no good, and the money you will have to spend can be used to a far better advantage. Besides, the leading lights in every lodge are bad men. They are bruitish, licentious, unprincipled men. To be made a Mason is to be made their tool. They want you for your money and the good you can do them. Oft times these leading lights are the most dangerous members of society. To carry out their selfish purposes they will break every law known to man or Maker, and they want you to protect them in their villainy. Woe be to that Mason who refuses to bow to the high priests of his lodge. I have known poor men in the order persecuted, driven from their situations, their families brought to the very verge of starvation and they themselves treated in the most barbarous and hellish manner by these high-handed "brothers" because they refused to second their villainy. But if a mean, sneaking, policy man has money, and, without fairly earning it, desires more, then he should join the Masons by all means. If a mean man wants to sneak into office he should lose no time in taking upon himself the secrets of Masonry; but a man with nobility of nature and manhood enough to stand or fall by his own merits, a man who looks to God for help and in all things and at all times is determined to obey God's will through the conscience God has given him, and to act manly towards all mankind, can not be made one whit more manly by belonging to all the secret societies in Christendom. It is far better to be a man than to be a Mason or anything else. Those friends whose friendship must be secured through secret oaths and serious obligations are not the friends for me. I want no purchased or compulsatory friendship. It is a happy thought that in this life at least one can stand alone. He may suffer persecutions and privations, but even these, if met in a right spirit, are a pleasure. It is really happiness to be shut up in a dungeon for trying to maintain principle. A pure heart and a clear conscience are better friends than either money, Masonry or power can bring. With these a man can snap his fingers in the face of fate, laugh at the power of the law and grow fat on mush and water in the pen of a prison.

Masonic Prayers.

[From the Report on Foreign Correspondence to the Grand Lodge of New York, 1874.]

It is universally claimed, in behalf of Freemasonry, that the institution is Catholic and cosmopolitan in its character, and it studiously excludes from its lodges all systems of faith, or sect, and all mere dogmas of religion, and only requires from its initiates a belief in Deity, and conformity, in life and practice, to the moral law. And yet we find intolerant Masons who insist that the prayers shall be so worded, at our lodge devotions, that their particular creed, or form of belief, as to the nature, power, substance, individuality, unity or trinity of God, shall be acknowledged and worshiped, and addressed in prayer, and none other.

To all such we would say, there are Masons all over the civilized world, and lodges are organized among all nations, tongues, and kindred of people. What, then, shall the brethren do, when required to meet with those of several different creeds, at one and the same time and place, or in one lodge? Shall the Parsee brother demand that the ritual of Zoroaster shall be followed, and God worshiped only in or through fire? The Persian—insist that all join with him in the salutation: La Mah e il Allah! The brethren of Islam, that all cry Allah l Ackbar! Mahomet is his prophet! The descendants of Israel: that power and glory and dominion be ascribed to God! One Only! Eternal and Immutable! Or, shall a Christian Trinitarian insist, that the only ascription made, or worship had, shall be to God, in unity of substance and trinity of individuality? When all of these different brethren, on this question, agree in the one great and sublime belief and faith that God is the Supreme Being; Creator and Governor of all things; Infinite, Eternal and great Jehovah! Why then cannot all meet as brethren, in a truly fraternal and tolerant spirit, one with another? And if the lodge where the "gathering together" occurs, be in the land of the Parsee, let the brother of that faith offer his prayers; if in the home of the Hindu, or the Persian, or Islamite, let one of them conduct the devotions; if among the Sons of Israel, one of them, and if among Christians, then one of that faith; or better still, if the great majority in each one of these would let the one who visits them, offer prayer in his own way! This generosity of action, this noble exercise of true Masonic toleration, would disarm that offensive spirit which seeks the propagation of a creed with the bayonet, joins the missive to be hurled, with the missionary sent; and is ever furnishing materials for mere sectarian strife. Such tolerant conduct as we have suggested, would be like that dictated by the Giver of Light, in the ancient oriental allegory, to the Father of the Faithful.

It reads thus:

"And it came to pass after these things, that Abraham sat in the door of his tent, about the going down of the sun. And behold a man bent with age, coming from the way of the wilderness, leaning on a staff. And Abraham rose up and met him, and said unto him: 'Turn in I pray thee, and wash thy feet, and tarry all night; and thou shalt rise up early in the morning and go on thy way.' And the man said, 'Nay, for I will abide under this tree.' But Abraham pressed him greatly, so he turned, and they went into the tent; and Abraham baked unleavened bread, and they d d eat. And when Abraham saw that the man blessed not God, he said unto him, 'Wherefore dost thou not worship the Most High God, Creator of Heaven and earth?' And the man answered and said, 'I do not worship thy God, neither do I call upon his name; for I have made to myself a god, which abideth always in my house, and provideth me with all things." And Abraham's zeal was kindled against the man, and he rose up, and fell upon him, and drove him forth with blows into the wilderness.

"And God called unto Abraham, saying, 'Abraham!' And he said, 'Behold me, oh Lord! And God said, where is the stranger?' And Abraham answered and said, 'Lord, he would not worship thee, neither would he call upon thy Name, therefore have I driven him out from before my face into the wilderness.' And God said, 'Have I borne with him these hundred and ninety and eight years, and fed and nourished him, notwithstanding his bitterness against me, and toul'st not then, who art thyself a sinner, bear with him for one night?' Then Abraham fell down upon the ground, with his face in the earth, and worshipped the Lord, and said, 'Let not the anger of my Lord be kindled, and wax hot against his servant! Lo! I have sinned in thy sight, and lie in dust and ashes before thee! Oh my Lord, hearken unto me and forgive the trespass of thy servant I pray thee!' And God said, 'For this thy sin, thy seed shall be servants four hundred years in the land of the stranger whom thou hast driven out. But for thy repentance will I deliver them; and they shall go forth from thence with power, and with gladness of heart, and with much substance.

"And Abraham arose and went forth into the wilderness, and sought diligently after the man, and found him, and returned with him to the tent, and when he had entreated him kindly, he sent him away on the morrow with gifts."

In the ancient Grecian mythology, prayers were considered as the gift or teaching of God, and deemed of celestial birth. Thus Homer, writing nearly thirty centuries ago(Illiad, ix. 623), as rendered by Pope says:

> "Prayers are Jove's daughters, of celestial face,
> Lame are their feet, and wrinkled is their face;
> With humble mien and with dejected eyes,
> Constant they follow where injustice flies,
> Injustice swift, erect and unconfined,
> Sweeps the wide earth and tramples o'er mankind.
> While prayers, to heal her wrongs, move slow behind."

And in ancient times, among people we are accustomed to consider as heathen, no great or important undertaking was entered upon, without invoking the favor of Deity. And the worshipers in the temples, were summoned to join with the officiating priest, in the very words we use now, Let us pray! (Aristophanes, Page 662, Ams. Ed). And in the same manner, "with the hands uplifted." (Tacitus, Ann. l. iii, c. 5.) And no one could come to the worship, or join in the prayers, who was in any defiled. For this purpose 'water for cleansiug" was furnished, which had, in some form, been duly consecrated. The coming defiled waa deemed so impious, that it is related in story, that a thunderblot struck dead one so approaching the altar of Jupiter. Timarchides Lib. de Caronis.

But time and space forbid further discussion, and we will only add, that if those who are so critical as to the forms of prayer and the modes of devotion would consider that all such things are the mere husk which holds the wheat, the setting which clasps the clear and sparkling diamond; for to these we would compare the offerings of a pure and contrite heart to the "Great I Am," we think they would cease the critical and try to obtain more of the devotional spirit. Indeed, if all the fraternity would only reflect and consider what prayer is, what it symbolizes, why it is offered, and above all, to whom it is addressed, and in whose awful presence, we, poor worms of the dust, are especially thrusting ourselves, we believe there would be less strife and contention, and more of that lowly and contrite spirit for which the King, Poet, and Psalmist of Israel so earnestly besought.

The Brooklyn Dispensation.

One of the most remarkable chapters in church history has been gradually unfolding at Brooklyn. We should be blind to the signs of the times, and to the plainest lessons of Divine Providence, if we failed in reading it to recognize the hand of God. . . . .

Thus far we have watched and waited for some revelation that would clear up the dark enigma, but in vain. While darkness still shrouds the main issue, there are some collateral points which are clear enough, as viewed in the light of Divine Providence toward the church. And with the Bible in our hands, how are we to interpret them? It is not a lesson for Brooklyn alone, but for the whole American church and people; nay, for all the churches in Christendom, to give heed to and profit by its solemn warning.

1. The first thing which has impressed itself profoundly upon our own thoughts in connection with the whole case is, that the true policy of God's church and God's ministers is to stand by the old landmarks. We look upon this great and terrible calamity, which has come upon the church, with all its wide-spread injury to Christianity, as the legitimate and inevitable result of the innovating and destructive gospel which has been preached for more than a quarter of a century in this great metropolitan pulpit of the nation. No preacher of our day, at least in our country, has had such a hearing and wielded such an influence over the popular mind. But the gospel thus proclaimed to thousands has not been the old gospel of the apostles and martyrs, nor the gospel of the continental reformers and the English Puritans, nor the gospel of the New England fathers, nor even the gospel of Jonathan Edwards and Lyman Beecher; but a new, progressive and humanitarian gospel, appealing to the predjudices of the age, and boasting that its mission was to reform the world by pulling down and destroying the old theology.

Well did this great, popular preacher describe the character of his own ministry when he said, according to a testimony lately published, that "his work was about done in that line (preaching), that it had principally been a destructive work, pulling to pieces the old theology, and that some one else must now arise with constructive ability to make a new scheme." And well did an apt disciple of his own training, who is now his chief accuser, portray the effect of that sort of preaching on the heart and character, when he said: "The old religious teachings, the orthodox view, the dread of punishment, the atonement, have less and less power over my mind. I do not believe in orthodoxy. Thank God I do not belong to the priesthood or the church. I am a man of religious sympathies, who thoroughly hate and despise religious creeds. I don't believe in one of the Thirty-nine Articles nor in either one of the catechisms, nor in the Divinity of the inspiration of the Scriptures, nor in the Divinity of Christ in the sense in which it is held."

Now as Christ Jesus is on the throne of universal dominion, still loving and defending his truth as when he ascended, these things cannot be done in his name and within the bosom of his church without sooner or later bringing down his rebuke. His professed ministers may not pour contempt upon the great doctrines of his gospel and wage war upon that theology which teaches sin and depravity, redemption by the blood of Christ, salvation by grace alone, and an eternal hell for the wicked, and the wrath of God against all iniquity, without being brought to see ere long that they are fighting against God.

The thoughtless multitudes may be carried away for a time with admiration for this new gospel, and scores and hundreds of young ministers may even catch the infection, and imitate the popular idol; but the reaction of truth, as in this case, is bound to come, even though it come in the form of judgment and disaster.

During all these years of rising popularity, of widening influence, and of progressive latitudinarianism, in the great metropolitan orator, there have not been wanting many thoughtful men in all parts of the land, who, while they appreciated the genius of the man, saw the departure of the preacher from the truth of God with pain and apprehension. And some had even predicted that the career would at last end, either in a total abnegation of faith, or in some other great disaster.

2. The next important point which the providence of God seems to be making plain by all these manifestations is that this boasted humanitarian and progressive gospel, which has been so long preached in the Brooklyn and other pulpits, is, after all, no improvement on the old orthodox Gospel of the fathers and the church creeds.

"God and humanity" has been the cry and the watchword from the beginning. But far more of humanity than of God. Humanity has been the climax of this creed: manhood, the perpetual theme of its preaching. Not all for God's glory, but all for man's enjoyment. To build up a true manhood has been its great endeavor. Not to reveal to the world a more spiritual type of Christianity, more holy, more self-denying. more consecrated to God, but a more robust and athletic Christianity, a more muscular and enjoyable Christianity,—a live Christianity, as it is called, suited to the times, and thus commending itself to the world.

It is a Christianity that knows how to make the most out of the good things of this world without losing its hope of heaven—a Christianity that praises men and pleases men by ignoring the doctrines of sin and apostasy,—by lowering the claims of God's violated law, and keeping out of view the penalties of God's coming wrath, and thus adjusting itself to the tastes of the unconverted heart, and to the caprice of this enlightened age.

Such, in brief, is the new evangel of humanity and worldliness, of which this great popular preacher has been the pioneer and the chief apostle in our country for a quarter of a century—as different from the old gospel of the New England Congregational fathers and the New England Presbyterians, as light is from darkness—as different even from that stern and solid gospel of God, which Lyman Beecher in his earlier ministry preached with saving power, and with great revivals of religion at the other end of the island, in Easthampton, as the east is from the west.

And now behold the result in the light of all these recent revelations! What becomes of this great reformation by which Christianity, clad in the beautiful garments of worldly conformity, and preaching the dignity of human nature, and the beatitudes of virtue, was to reconcile sinners to God by praising them, and build up a nobler type of manhood than the church of the old creeds has ever seen? Where is its supesior saving power as exhibited either in the individual man, or in the collective body of the people? What have been the fruits of this public inauguration in the pulpit, of a style of preaching which almost destroyed the solemnity of the Sabbath and the house of God? It has been the reign of levity, and fun, and frolic, and a virtual breaking down of all lines of distinction between the serious and the frivolous, the sacred and the secular, the church and the world. If these things are done in the green tree, what may we not expect in the dry? Is it not time for buffoonery to cease from the pulpit.

3. It is now manifest that this whole Brooklyn dispensation of Broad Churchism and of universal love and brotherhood will not answer. It is no improvement after all. It baptizes itself with a blessed name. It boasts of progress and liberality. It claims emancipation from all the iron shackles of the past. It sings of freedom and of love, the march of mind, and the mighty march of humanity. But it has been weighed in the balances of the sanctuary, and found wanting.

Its confident claim to be the gospel for the times, an advance over all that went before, is found to be without foundation. Its great fundamental dogma about the dignity and beauty and perfectibility of human nature, is, after all, an empty boast, unsustained by facts, and which leaves this poor manhood in the dust and mire. It has no power to regenerate society. It has no power to eradicate the dread malady of sin, for it denies all true knowledge as to the nature of sin, all real experience of the only method of deliverance from sin. It ignores all those motives drawn from the impotence of man, the terrors of God's wrath, and the sovereignty of Divine grace, which would drive the soul to seek salvation in God alone.

It scouts all denominational and creed boundaries, and it has virtually broken down all the old distinctions between the church and the world, denouncing the doctrines of the old theology, and setting at naught the rules and restraints of church discipline. Says an eye-witness: "He used to take people into his church who believed in almost anything and almost nothing. There were Congregationalists and Baptists, and Quakers and Presbyterians, and Episcopalians and Free Religionists. and Universalists and Unitarians, and Progressionists, and those who believed in almost everything from Darwin down. The consequence was the crowd was a very promiscuous one. They were like the preacher, liberal in their views."

Now this whole movement for a broad and liberal church has from first to last been of the nature of a compromise with error and a concession to the demands of the world. It has been a virtual surrender of all these distinctive elements of the gospel of God which are opposed to the natural tastes, prejudices and passions of the human heart, for the sake of winning the approval and the co-operation of the world. It is a kind of preaching and of church organization, which is willing to purchase the favor of unbelieving and ungodly men at the expense of the truth, at the sacrifice of the only gospel of Christ. It is simply and intensely a humanitarian scheme throughout.

It is the gospel of the world baptised in the name of Christ. It is not the gospel of the New Testament. It is powerless to convert a single soul from death. This is not saying there are no converted souls in all this broad church organization. Doubtless, there are true Christians among them. But they have been converted elsewhere, and by other and better agencies, than this style of preaching. All that it has ever done is to make Christians more worldly; and if it could be carried out, it would end, not in converting the world to God, but the church to the world, the flesh and the devil.—Prof. Halsey in the Interior.

A distinguished author observes, that for good or for evil, in these days of ours, nothing is taken for granted. Creed, system, institution, all must justify their existence. No prescription, however venerable, no authority, however sacred, may plead exemption. The restless tide of thought washes away the accretions of ages. But is it indeed so? Must Christianity, which has proved itself divine so many times as it has come down unshaken through the centuries past, prove itself anew, or be summarily dismissed as unworthy of acceptance? As one sensibly asks: Is nothing settled, nothing fixed and permanent? Is truth, moral truth, divine truth, mutual and flexible and subject to revision and amendment and improvement? Verily there are some creeds, and systems, and institutions that need no new justification before men. They are once for all and finally attested and established and will remain till the second coming of the Lord. The tidal wave of human thought can not wash them away.

"I am exhausted by so many severe illnesses. God knows what end it serves. He is like a printer, who sets the letters backward. We see and feel him set the types, but here we cannot read them. Yonder in the life to come, we shall read all clear and straightforward." "Christians must be sown, torn, crushed and winnowed." "So many times indeed do we die, before we die once." "Oh, my God, punish with anything rather than thou be silent to me."—Luther.

—When shall the meeting of the Illinois State Association be held? Where? See notice on the sixteenth page.

—The Du Page County (Ill.) Association holds its semi-annual meeting; soon at Downer's Grove. The time is not yet fixed.

—The lodge has broken out again in violence. See the letters from the General Agent and Bro. Givens. The communication from the latter has been overlooked for two or three issues, for which we crave pardon of our readers. We aim to present such news immediately.

—D. P. Rathbun is an industrious lecturer besides being an effective one. At the close of the Central Ohio Wesleyan Conference in August, which he addressed, he spoke respectively in Clark Street, Sparta, Marengo, Olive Green, Bennington and West Liberty, lecturing ten times and preaching twice. At Sparta the lodge was greatly aroused, and at Olive Green the Masons, headed by a lawyer named Baird, resorted to personal violence which was nearly serious. He also attended the Michigan Conference during the early part of Septemqer, and occupied one evening in an address on Masonic worship. His calls for work in that State are so numerous that he will remain there until his return home about the middle of October.

From the General Agent—Activity in Indiana—A Cowardly Masonic Attack.

N. MANCHESTER, Ind., Sept. 21.

DEAR K:—From Grant county, where I spoke twenty times in ten days and left the friends in good heart, I came to this region on the 26th inst. The church, (U. B.), at Silver Lake being closed against us, I went to Center Church, two miles north, where I met a cordial reception at the house of Bro. Wells. Bro. Ulsh and wife soon came in, and at the hour appointed repairing to the church we found a respectable audience who seemed interested and willing to listen to the truth. Accompanying Bro. Ulsh to his home, five miles distant, I remained quiet recuperating through the day for the work of the evening.

At Yellow Lake the United Brethren did not see their way clear to open their house, for at this point, as at Silver Lake, leading members are reported to me as Masons and Odd-fellows. Of course men who live in open violation of their covenant, and trample the authorities of the church under their feet, "love darkness," and for the same reason that counterfeiters and burglars "love darkness because their deeds are evil." We were not surprised, but did regret to see men thus deluded and sold to sin, and, as it appeared to some at least, "wearing the livery of heaven" in the church "to serve the devil" in the lodge more effectually.

Returning from an enthusiastic, orderly meeting in the church of God, one mile distant, Bro. Ulsh was suddenly stopped by the falling of one of his wagon wheels. On examination it appeared that one of the burrs had been removed, and thus the life of himself and family endangered. Fortunately he has a gentle team and so escaped serious consequences. Having adjusted his wheel we proceeded homeward for about half a mile further, when passing a thicket, we were saluted with a volley of eggs served up in true Masonic style. This was near the "Granger's" lodge, and the eggs were probably some that were left over from the last festival and appropriated for the manly and characteristic defense of the order.

From Yellow Lake I went to Beaver Dam, where fixed attention and good order for two hours in a large and well filled room may be taken as evidence of interest, on the part of the citizens of this prosperous and enterprising community. The friends here showed us much kindness, and the hearty hand shakings and cordial invitations of the brethren to return and occupy their house for a "whole week" will not soon be forgotten.

Father Plumber had prepared the way for us at Zion Bethel, twelve miles distant, and we arrived just in time to shake hands on the steps and around the altar with a few of the veterans before the lecture. Owing to local causes and want of understanding the meeting was not large, but the 100 or 125 present, mostly listened with fixed attention. We stayed all night with a good brother whose name I dare not undertake to spell, but as he promised to send for the Cynosure as soon as he got a little change, you will have it in full and can refer to Prof. Fischer for a correct translation. Other meetings are much needed and desired at this point. The grange officers have been grazing and fattening upon these fruitful fields, and while the few who run the "concern" demurred, most present enjoyed the reading of their "Beautiful Work" in the open congregation.

By the way I hope Bro. Elliott or some of the neighbors of the Master of the State Grange of Indiana will tell the readers of the Cynosure how the devoted spouse of this champion of the farmers' rights used to protect her lord while he slept, from the impertinent streams that trickled through the appertures in the roof of their cabin on a rainy night, by the dexterous use of pans, skillets and other available utensils. This, of course, was before he became a Patron, and now I am told he si building a fine house. Query—Who pays for that house?

From Zion Bethel we returned to Yellow Lake, where, at ten A. M., I preached in the house occupied by the Church of God. Father Plumber suggested a collection and the brethren responded by a liberal contribution. From Yellow Lake Bro. Ulsh brought me to this place, seventeen miles, where I preached in the U. B. church in the evening, and am now with Bro. U. and wife enjoying the liberal hospitality of our worthy friend and brother, E. Lantzenhiser, who has given his subscription for the paper.

Missouri Anti-secret State Convention.

[From the Am. Freeman.]

The Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies met at Brashear, Adair Co., Mo., the 31st of August 1874, G. W. Needles, Vice-President of the National Christian Association for Mo., in the chair. On motion N. E. Gardner, J. B. Davis, were chosen secretaries. On motion it was directed that the Chairman appoint a committee on permanent organization. A. D. Thomas, B. J. Murry, A. H. Geesling, T. S. Downey, Geo. W. Meek, J. S. Kelley, J. H. Estep, were appointed. Rev. Mr. Stewart, a seceding Mason was called, and proceeded to address the assembly; subject, Masonry the Anti-Christ of the present day. After the address of Mr. Stewart, the Committee on permanent organization reported as follows for permanent officers: For President, J. H. Brundege; Corresponding Secretary, E. H. Carpenter; Recording Secretary, N. E. Gardner; Treasurer, L. D. Ambrose; Vice-Presidents, J. Herlbert, Samuel Murry, J. H. Logston, D. E. Statten, S. King, Jos. Beauchamp, Rev. Thomas Evans, of St. Joseph, were duly chosen as officers for one year. Rev. Brundege took the chair and made some pertinent remarks. On motion J. B. Davis was elected Assistant Secretary. On motion the following committees was chosen on resolutions: A. D. Thomas, H. E. Henry, and J. H. Pulley. On Publishing interest, B. F. Miller, B. J. Murry and A. H. Geesing. On Constitution and By-laws: B. F. Miller, H. H. Geesling, B. J. Murry, L. D. Ambrose, C. R. Hunt. Executive Committee, G. W. Needles, John Glendenning, Joseph Beauchamp, A. H. Geesling, Nicholas Murry, of Holt Co. B. F. Miller then being called, and responded in making an address. Subject, Masonic threats. The committee on resolutions reported as follows:

Whereas, We regard that moral questions are invaded in all secret societies, and this being true, we regard it not only our privilege but our duty to investigate the principles which underlie these orders, and if their tendency is to evil, they should be shunned, but if they are right, then they should be upheld.

Be it Resolved, 1. That we regard the calling of a convention of Christians opposed to secret societies as opportune. 2. That we will discuss the merits of these orders in the light of the Bible and Christian fairness, and whatever is wrong in them we will oppose, although it may be unpopular to do so. 3. That we invite all persons who are interested in this movement to come out fully from the power and dominion of the orders and help this movement. 4. That we humble ourselves before God and ask him to guide us, protect and lead us to victory in his name. 5. That we employ a State lecturer through our Executive Committee as soon as possible, and that he lecture throughout the State, and perfect county organizations auxilary to the State Association. The committee on publishing reported a resolution expressing sympathy with and proffering encouragment to the American Freeman, the Christian Cynosure, Methodist Free Press, Reformer, and other journals.

The committee on constitution reported progress, and was instructed to report to the Executive Committee the constitution to be published in the American Freeman, subject to the approval of the association at its next meeting. As it is not a delegated convention all persons favorable to the organization were invited to take part in the meeting. About 75 persons participated. The Executive Committee asked that pledges be made to support the lecturer, and nearly $400 were pledged at once. The meeting then adjourned till 7 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

President Brundege in the chair. Speeches were made by Revs. Geesling and Gardner, after which the business of the convention proceeded. The time and place of the next meeting was referred to Executive Committee to fix. The proceedings of the convention were ordered to be printed in the American Freeman.

We received letters of congratulation and encouragement from ten persons living in Henry and St. Clair counties, but saying that they were sorry that they could not be with us. There seems to be a general awakening throughout the State on the sub- of secret societies. Their despotic character is becoming generally known, and everywhere the people feel that something has to be done or our liberties must soon be lost, outside of the lodges crushed under the heel of despotism. The minutes read and approved. Adjournedsine die.

From Southern Illinois.—The State Agent's Visit and the Local Society at Nashville.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

NASHVILLE, Ill., Sept. 19, 1874.

Our State lecturer, Bro. Hinman, made us a flying visit the first of the month. We were surprised one evening on returning from our work to find among us a person we thought an utter stranger but the brother was not long making himself known; and we went about filling out some of his bills to circulate in the neighborhood, informing our friends that Bro. Hinman would deliver two lectures in our church, (M. E.) on the evenings of Sept. 4th and 5th.

There were not many out the first evening on account of the inclemency of the weather. But the few were well paid for going by listening to the telling blows that our brother dealt upon the hidden ways of darkness. At the close of the meeting Bro. H. stated that he would on the following evening tell us how a man was made a Mason.

The evening of the 5th was pleasant. At the appointed hour there was a goodly number gathered to hear the lecture. Among the number was an Odd-fellow, and the "Mason's jack," a local preacher in our church (the M. E.) who said that he came on purpose to question the preacher. But our brother made his points and arguments so clear and convincing that the questioner was afraid to attack him on a single point; but gave as the reason that Bro. H. did not pitch into him rough shod. He (Bro. H.) was too old for him, and at the same time claiming to be two years older than brother Hinman. So he held himself in reserve for our regular monthly meeting which came off on the following Monday evening.

We had a larger attendance on that evening than we have had on any occasion before. Our school-house was full of very attentive listeners. We opened with song and prayer, and then read a portion of Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The origin and design of the grange and the revised platform of 1872, also an article entitled, "A Word of Caution," from the grange, and the revised platform of 1872; commenting on each as we went along, and intermingling the exercise with appropriate songs. After which the "Mason's jack" asked lieve to make some remarks, which was granted. He gave us the report of the L. O. O. F. for 1872, and quite a lengthy harangue on our efforts to expose the works of darkness; said we were marking ourselves with a stain that it would take years to remove. To which we made a short reply and stated that we would have the same report at our next meeting, and make a full reply to the gentleman.

He has had more than double the years to gain light on this subject than we have, but has failed to improve the time in the right direction. We feel that we are in the right, and have no fears of the stain spoken of, and intend going ahead battling for the right with the expectation of gaining a reward when alone with the cares, toils, and conflicts of an unfriendly world.

Brethren, pray for us.

Yours in the conflict,

CHAS. M. LIVESAY.

From W. M. Givens—Outrageous Secretists in Clark County, Ill.

BRO, K:—On the 27th of last month I went to Clark county, Illinois, to a point known as Potter's Hall, where arrangements had been made for me to deliver three lectures in defense of our church rule on secrecy (United Brethren.) My first lecture was on Odd-fellowship. The house was well filled, and I had good attention, except repeated denials on the part of Odd-fellows, demanding proof for every proposition that I laid down. And by the way, those fellows are very properly named. They are odd indeed; for when they are driven to the wall, they "go back" on their own book and reports, as was repeatedly manifested on this occasion. But I go armed and equipped with their own books and reports, and try to feed them with their own soup.

On the second evening I spoke on the origin, law, spirit and religion of Masonry. Some of the more verdant Masons lost their jewels—that is, talked out in meeting, but after being cautioned by the old ones, they said they had nothing more to say to me if I was a seceding Mason—a wise conclusion. On the evening of my third lecture the house was densely crowded, and as many out of doors as in the house. There were quite a number of Masons present. Two Royal Arch Masons sat immediately in front of me, (so near (that I could lay my hand on their heads,) one of whom stood fire extremely well. The other gave signs of internal agitation soon after I began to talk. His zeal soon got the better of his judgment, and he arose hastily, and leaning forward, he said, "Brother Givens, Jesus Christ was a Freemason, and I can prove it from the Bible." "Ah!" said I, "you come right up here, Bro. Wilber, and tell this audience all about Christ's relation with the Masonic order." He declined the invitation. I still insisted. At this juncture his brother R. A. turned and shook his finger at the claimant for Christ's lodge-ship, saying, "Tut! tut! tut!" Then another Mason arose and said, he did not think Christ was a Mason. I insisted that Bro. Wilber was a high Mason and therefore understood himself. Whereupon he gave me the sign of a Royal Arch Mason, telling me at the same time that he had been that high, but declined occupying the floor, from the fact, (as he said) he was not prepared. I asked him if he learned that Christ was a Mason in the lodge. He said that he did. You may rest assured that I made all the capital I could out of the assertion.

I went from Melrose to Doulson Chapel, one and a half miles north of Martinville, where I spoke Friday and Saturday evenings. On Monday bills were put up through the neighborhood and circulated in the town, of which the following is a correct copy:

"FARMERS, LOOK OUT!—A fellow giving his name as Gibbons [Givens] is passing through the country lecturing against secret societies. He is about 6 feet high, dark complexion, dark hair, dark, sandy whiskers, and about 45 years of age. He pretends to have been a Mason, and pretends to expose its secrets. If so, he is a perjured scoundrel. No one should trust him out of sight, for such persons have been known to travel under the garb of religion, while they in reality were horse-thieves. Keep your stable doors locked!"

The circulation of such a paper had the tendency to bring out one of the largest gatherings that was ever known in that community on Monday evening. As I went into the church a man plucked my arm, and invited attention. He said that somebody had put up handbills about me, but it was not the Masons, for he was a Mason and they did'nt do such things. To which I replied that public sentiment had harnessed it upon the Masons and Odd-fellows, and that it was just as the law and spirit of Masonry required them to be; therefore I should be compelled to rivet the dark deed upon them. On that evening I spoke two and a half hours to a large and attentive audience; subject, How to make Masons.

On Tuesday evening, Aug. 4th, I went to the school-house two and a half miles west of Marshall, the county seat of Clark county, Illinois. When I got to the house I found a large concourse of people assembled, and one of the above named bills posted on the walls behind the desk where I had to stand. In my opening remarks I referred to it briefly as characteristic of the order. When I had spoken about an hour, but not without interruption, I referred to the sign and penalty of the seventh, Royal Arch degree. Instantly a sensation passed through a portion of the audience. One man sprang to his feet, swearing that he was a Mason and that my statements were G—d—lies, etc. A scene of confusion followed that beggar's description. Cursing, swearing, shouting, threatening, and general tumult seemed to be the order. Two professed Masons came at me with drawn knives threatening my life. After some time spent in fruitless attempts to quell the mob, by the advice of my friends I withdrew from the house; but only to find that the fiends were stationed around the building to salute my appearance with a shower of eggs, only one of which hit me, however. When the mob in the house found that their victim was gone, they rushed for the door and out into the yard yelling and screaming like Modoc Indians.

Kind readers, do not think this an overdrawn picture. There are perhaps one hundred men and women that can corroborate what I have stated if necessary. And believe me I have been in California in the days of mobocrisy, in Mexico and Central America, amongst those half civilized people. I have been present at riots, but I have never seen as mean, low, unprovoked actions as those Clark county Masons and grangers exhibited on that occasion. But why comment? It is but the law and spirit of their order, and would be enacted in almost every community where there is opposition if they had the power of influence.

Correspondence.

The Macedonian Cry.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—While on a recent vacation visit to my old home in Bureau county, I was informed by friends near Walnut that the M. E. minister in that place had busied himself recently in preaching the devil's gospel and securing the organization of a devil's church in the shape of a Masonic lodge. The desire was expressed by friends of our cause, that some Anti-masonic lecturer would visit that place, and I was assured that his expenses would be paid but not much more could be expected. Let some person who may be lecturing in the region make a note of this and give them some lectures. The whole region is lodge-ridden, and the M. E. and P. M. ministers, so far as I could learn are all minions of the lodge—blind leaders of the blind. A few noble laymen by "departing from evil make themselves a prey." God will vindicate them in his own good time. May he hasten the time when his own professed ministers shall "see eye to eye," be all united in the great work of publishing a pure Gospel; when part of them shall not be actually and actively engaged in propagating and sustaining what profess to be and are in fact, the spiritual descendants of the heathen mysteries of which the apostle says "it is an abomination even to speak of the things done of them in secret," and that the sacrifices performed in them are made to devil and not to God; and the rest of them with few exceptions, be dumb dogs refusing even to bark although set to watch for the life of the flock.

O. F. LUMRY.

A Sweeping Resolution.

The Bridgewater, Pa, Baptist Association held its forty-ninth Anniversary with the Wyolusing Baptist Church, at Camptown, Bradford Co., Pa., Aug. 25th, 26th, and 27th. The meeting from beginning to end was interesting, rarely equaled, especially that of the last day. The Divine Spirit came down most copiously, and in the concluding free conference, both brethren and sisters spoke as moved upon by that Spirit.

That truth, however radically spoken in love, does not grieve the Holy Spirit was made most emphatically evident from the fact that on that last meeting, prior to the conference, after several speeches, pro and con, the following resolution, offered by the writer of this, was adopted:

Resolved, That we continue to stand by our old land-marks, among which are: individual soul liberty; church independency; church as distinguished from Christian fellowship or communion; anti-slavery, anti-rum, anti-tobacco, anti-organized secrecy, and anti-midisterial titles of honorary distinction."

The Association passing this resolution represents fifteen, most of them small, churches located, all but three of them, in Susquehanna Co., Pa., one of the most intelligent, as to its inhabitants, of the counties in the State.

On taking the vote, a division of the question, so as to let the last two items stand on their own merits was called for and without dissent granted. It was fully understood that organized secrecy "covered the whole brotherhood and sisterhood of secret societies and that "Ministerial titles of honorary distinction" had special reference to the title "Doctor of Divinity" (D. D.) which Roger Williams in his sermon on the Hirling Ministry, characterises as "popish and vaunting." The vote on these two items, stood twenty-four to four; and unanimous as to the other portion of the resolution.

It is matter of earnest desire, if not confident hope, that the discussion and vote may result in good. An itch for titulary honor is cursing the ministry; and the love of mystery and show is cursing the churches. The simplicity and power of the Gospel is ebbing, while pagan mystery and papal show are at the flood. The men and women of martyr spirit must arouse themselves, put on the whole spiritual armor of God and rally together in the conflict now being waged between the powers of light and darkness. The Lord bless them. A. L. Post.

OUR MAIL.

John A. Knepper, Delta, O. writes:

I received your circulars and have distributed them, and through them was able to get eight subscribers for your glorious paper that I love to read above all others. The Anti-masons have organized in this (Fulton) county and have nominated a county ticket and we expect to pole a heavy vote against secret societies."

Rev. John Galbraith, Glade Mills, Penn., writes:

I have taken the paper since it was commenced—have been generally pleased with its course. I love the cause which it advocates."

Joseph Sherk, Sherkstown, Ont., writes:

"It would be impossible for me to get along without the Cynosure, as it is a great help spiritually. I pray God that the time is not far distant when Freemasonry and all other institutions of the devil will cease to exist. I shall endeavor, by God's help, to circulate your good paper. I have the promise of two or more subscribers, at the beginning of next month."

John T. Russell, Rome, Penn., writes:

"I had rather have your paper than any other I ever saw. It spreads light among the lodge men, and makes some of them tremble."

Hon. Francis Gillette, Hartford, Ct., writes:

"I highly appreciate your paper. . . . How much this old world of ours needs reforming, and how little comparatively has yet been done to prepare and straighten the way of the Lord."

A. Waterhouse, North Pownall, Me., writes:

"20,000 Masons in Maine, and half a million in the United States." How many Anti-masons are there?

Mr. L. B. Lathrop, Hollister, Cal., writes:

"I am in the fullest sympathy with your cause. Your paper and the Wesleyan are the first papers I read."

Henry W. Steele, Canton, Dakotah Ter., writes:

We live or stay in the region of country where the grasshoppers have done us a good deal of damage. I have tried to get some to subscribe for it (the Cynosure) but have failed as yet; but am not discouraged. Nor should I be, if I should never get one for I know that the truth that it vindicates is God's own truth. Why is it that in all the Cynosures we have received we do not get them until Monday of the next week? . . . . I suppose Masons could answer this question for they rule here and it is ruinous to both church and State."

We are glad to hear from this brother and to know that although he labors under difficulties he is not discouraged. We hope and pray that he may prove a bright light in that dark region so that others seeing his good works may glorify God.

In regard to the Cynosure's late arrival, we mail it now on Thursday but we are hoping and expecting soon, to make Wednesday our mailing day.

Increase Leadbetter, Cochituate, Mass., writes:

"The Cynosure will be the last paper for me to give up while it exposes evil as it does now. I have just read in my morning's lesson 'Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremiah the Prophet.' Now dear friends work on cheerfully, for secret societies, like those chief priests and elders, can only fulfill revelation. . . . I would have sent in a hundred names on that petition but it came to hand too late."

We are about sending out another petition and we intend to allow more time for its circulation. It is a petition which we desire to present to the next United States Congress. Let us continue this work until the government shall know how the people feel on this subject and act accordingly.

Hosea Washburn, Madison, Me., writes:

"I have tried to do what I could for the cause and will endeavor to."

We have had encouraging letters from this brother before and we hope that he and all our workers in Maine may be blessed and prospered in their self-denying efforts. Maine is a good field to cultivate, we think, and there is a vast amount of cultivation needed there. We trust the Lord will give our friends courage and wisdom adequate to the work.

A. M. Durfee, Sherman, N. Y., writes:

I have circulated some thousands of tracts in the last four or five years. As a continual dropping will wear a stone, the devil could stand it no longer, so he inspired a Methodist Episcopal priest, . . . who says he has been around gathering up the Cynosure tracts that I scattered: and says he has taken care of them so they can do no more harm. He says I ought to be arrested and punished for circulating these vile Cynosure tracts, as they are corrupting the morals of the young. Send me as many tracts as you can for the money enclosed and I will keep said priest busy, . . making tracks to gather up tracts to save the young from corruption. Said priest is a Mason and Odd-fellow."

J. C. Hilbon, Widder Station, Canada West, writes:

"Our Mason minister was much displeased with me for scattering these papers (Cynosures) on the Lake Shore Road appointments. The people told him plainly that they would not pay him if he would come back on the circuit; so he left.

Now they have brought a man from your side (the United States) for a Bishop, and have elected him. They say he is a Royal Arch Mason and we think it will cause a split in the Episcopal church."

W. J. White, Worcester, Mass., writes:

"Dear Brother Blanchard, I send the enclosed lines which you may print if you think best, with my name or without it. I do not pretend to add any new argument against the lodge. Different writers often present old truths in new aspects; and I am much interested in reading the varied correspondence in the Cynosure from unlettered and honest Christians in their way. Your paper is exerting a powerful influence wherever it is read. The lovers of Jesus are brought near together and seem to hold sweet communion with each other. I have not sent you any new subscribers of late, yet I do not dispair of getting new names. Let me not flatter you, but let me say in all sincerity that you have my warmest sympathy in your efforts against the lodge. If some brethren find fault with you in some respects, I ask them, "Who can you get to take his place, either in the East or West." None so fit as those whom God appoints, and if any say that you are not thus appointed, to arouse a slumbering church against these modern wiles of the devil, I ask "How comes it then that Bro. Blanchard stands where he now is? You have only to look at the poor signature in mortal flesh which the Almighty has placed before you for the defence of His truth."

John Denny, Seattle, Wash. Ter., writes:

"I regret that I cannot give you more than two names, but though there are many who are opposed to secret organizations, they dare not speak out for fear of giving offense. The press and the pulpit are muzzled. Consequently we few stand comparatively alone, but like Wellington's Scotch Highlanders at the battle of Waterloo, we entered the fight for death or victory."

C. C. Thompson, Anneville, Iowa, writes:

"Count me in for a life subscription. I have tried very hard to get subscribers here but always fail. The county is one vast grange, but they are getting tired of the 'Old Horse' and will soon cease to ride it. If it was not for occupying room that is deserved by more worthy articles, I should like to tell the brethren how the grange treated me."

Daniel F. Pratt, Reading, Mass., writes:

"It is the only independent paper that I know of. Don't know how to do without it even in these hard times. I hope your efforts in the good cause will prove a success. I believe the time coming when secret societies will not be so popular as now."

LESSON xlii.—OCT. 18, 1874.—THE MIND OF CHRIST.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK xxxiii 33-42. Commit 33-37; Primary verse, 35.

33 And he came to Capernaum, and being in the house he asked them, What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?

34 But they held their peace; for by the way they had disputed among themselves who should be the greatest.

35 And he sat down, and called the twelve, and saith unto them, If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all.

36 And he took a child, and set him in the midst of them: and when he had taken him in his arms, he said unto them,

37 Whosoever shall receive one of such children in my name, receiveth me; and whosoever shall receive me receiveth not me, but him that sent me.

38 And John answered him, saying, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbade him, because he followeth not us.

39 But Jesus said, Forbid him not: for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name that can lightly speak evil of me.

40 For he that is not against us is on our part.

41 For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward.

42 And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

From the scenes of our last lesson, Jesus and his disciples journied southward, and crossing the Jordan, they passed around the head of the lake to Capernaum. After some delay in Galilee they continued their journey to Jerusalem.

What is the first topic? What had Jesus taught them by the way? (verse 31.) Had they listened to the lesson? What kind of hearers were they? (Matt. xiii. 19.). What had they talked about? (verse 34.) Did Jesus know it? (Luke ix. 17.) What did Jesus ask them? (verse 33.) What was the result. (verse 34.) Afterwards they asked him the question (Matt. xviii. 1.) Who was it that disputed? Where was it? What was it about? Do you think Christians ought to dispute? Is there any danger now? Do you have any disputes in your Sunday-school? Read them this lesson.

What is the second topic? Jesus was a teacher. He called his class. How many scholars had he? (verse 35.) What did he say of the one who wished to be at the head? Was he ever sent to the foot? (Matt. xvi. 22,23; xxvi. 33-35, 40, 75.) Did he learn the lesson? (1 Pet. v. 6, 7). Who was the new scholar Jesus brought into the class? (verse 36.) Did Jesus treat the little fellow well? What did he say to them? (verse 37.) Who had the best place? Who was at the head, nearest the teacher? So now those who are humble are in his arms.

What is the third topic? Which of the scholars answered? (verse 38.) What did he do? (Made confession.) What was it? Why did John answer? (Probably he had rebuked the man.) What was his reason for rebuking him? Was this a selfish reason? What was the man doing? Could he do this in Jesus' name and be a bad man? What did Jesus say? (verse 39.) How shall we know who to condemn? Those whose words and works are against Christ.

What is the fourth topic? Jesus had told them he was to be away. While absent who would represent him here? (verse 41.) If we would receive Jesus, we must receive his disciples, his followers. How will Jesus know if they are received? Does he watch them? What does he say about offending them? (verse 42). Stumbling means hindering, giving occasion to fall.

LESSONS. The journey. The wayside lesson, and the careless hearers. The shameful dispute, and the suffering Lord. The teacher and his class. The humbling lesson. The one that confessed. The new scholar, and the first place. The way to receive him and honor him.

Why Should Sunday-school Teachers Understand the Home and Home Life of Their Scholars?

To ascertain their helps and hindrances.

To ascertain the character of their home instructions.

Without a knowledge of their home-life he cannot aptly teach.

To secure the co-operation of parents.

To determine the social influences of the child.

To secure the confidence of both parents and children.

To learn the characteristics of the child.

To induce the parents to attend the school.

To make successful teachers.

For the mutual benefit of parents, teacher and child.

It increases the teacher's interest.

To promote punctuality and regularity in attendance.

To awaken in careless parents an interest in the spiritual welfore of their children.

To assist the scholar in preparing the lesson.

To secure the co-operation of parents in determining the character of and habits of the child's reading.

To overcome the child's diffidence.

A knowledge of the home-life of the children insures success.

To ascertain the child's associates.

To prevent the teaching from being counteracted.

To help them in trouble.

That the influence of the Sabbath teachers may grow stronger through the week.

To better correct any existing evil in the scholar.

To direct and control their religious conversation.

To advise as to their amusements.

To correct faults that should not be mentioned in the class.

To bring children and parents together in religious conversation.

To induce parents to read the Home Readings in the current lessons.

Because it is the best place to talk about Jesus and the salvation of the scholar.

To pray with and for the child.

To turn the hearts of parents to their children, and the hearts of children to their parents.

To secure practical illustrations to be used in teaching.

To influence the children to spend their evenings at home or in proper places of amusement and worship.

To consider and promote the secular interests of the scholars by ascertaining their secular needs.

To promote benevolence in Christian work.

To present an example of faithfulness.

To lead to the conversion of sinful parents.

To secure family worship in Christian families.

Teachers should have a Bible which they call their own, in the same sense that they call their hat their own. That is, for every day use—a daily companion, not to lie on the shelf or center table, but to be used, to carry about with them, to which they may continually refer.

Forty Years Ago.

[From the Anti-masonic Review, 1829.]

Memoir of Jesuitism.

[CONCLUDED.]

But the reader can not suppose that the society of the Jesuits fell without a struggle, and disappeared without excitement. Their moral influence was prodigious, and their political ascendancy was paramount. To rise upon them outright was too much for the courage of that age in France. To save appearances the bill of indictment made out by Parliament run against the pretended Jesuits; and great fears were entertained for the fate of religion and the peace of society in the result. The grossness of the charges exhibited against them, and the atrocity of the extracts quoted from their standard authors, were such as to stumble public belief; and had not their avowed theory of infidelity and regicide been reduced to practice by their more zealous brethren the world could not have believed the righteous charges. But the heinousness of the charges against Jesuitism is no evidence of the want of truth; "and there is tremendous proof that, whatever might be the guilt of their principles, it was sustained by the guilt of their practices." (For. Rev. p. 321.)

Societies, like men, become vicious by degrees; they do not venture upon the cold and cruel slaughter of their fellow-men for their first offence; they approximate this height of crime by regular steps in the lower degrees of iniquity. The investigation of Freemasonry now in the vigor of youth, fetches them to light and exposes them to honest hood-winked brethren and to the world. Where this investigation has been conducted a length of time sufficient to allow its results fairly to operate upon the public mind, the people, by an overwhelming majority, have given the fullest demonstration of their abhorrence and distrust of Freemasonry. The churches have spoken distinctly, and are yet speaking, that the order of Freemasonry is anti-Christian. The people at the polls have pronounced it hostile to our civil liberties and to our political institutions. The honest members of the fraternity are themselves openly forsaking it by tens and by fifties.

For at the West inquiry has so alarmed the people that they have lost their confidence in the tribunals of public justice. "They believe," says the excellent report of the Senate upon this subject, "that Masonry exerts its influence in civil as well as criminal cases; in arbitrations, references, trials by jury, before justices of the peace, and in higher courts. Formerly from one-half to two-thirds of their justices belonged to the fraternity of Masons; now not one in twenty are of the initiated, and this change has been chiefly produced by their entire conviction of the fact that Masonry pervades and influences the courts of justice." And such a storm have the confessed and apparent outrages of the conceited mystery raised in that region that the fraternity not only fly before it but wisely yield to it and honestly surrender their charters.

The Jesuits carried on a trade with the island of Martinico. In the war between France and England, during which Wolf and Montcalm fell on the same contested field, and Washington began his glory, these affiliated traders met with some losses, which they wished to leave upon the hands of their correspondents at Lyons and Marseilles. "The merchants, robbed and treated like fools by the Jesuits, attacked them in the regular way of justice." The Jesuits, in order to make their expected triumph more brilliant and complete, demanded that the cause should be brought before the great chamber of the Parliament of Paris. They lost it there unanimously, and were condemned to pay large sums to the merchants, with a prohibition again to meddle with commerce. In the law-suit it had been debated whether in reality the Jesuits were, by their constitutions, answerable one for the other. This question furnished Parliament with a very natural opportunity of demanding a sight of those famous constitutions, which had never been examined. The examination of these, and afterwards of their books, furnished legal means more than sufficient for declaring their institution contrary to the laws of the kingdom and to the obedience due to the sovereign, and contrary to the tranquility of the state.—D'Alembert.

Abundant testimony is exhibited to show that the Masonic institution is more contrary to the constitution and laws of this Republic and to the tranquility of the State; but it is not legal evidence. The public are deeply interested to know the truth in this matter, and to know it with the assurance which the calm decisions of our legal rtibunals never fail to inspire. This assurance may be properly attained by trying the competency of a Royal Arch Mason to give his testimony or to sit on a jury where a brother Royal Arch Mason is on trial by indictment. The court will not inquire whether the witness or challenged juror deems his Royal Arch oath incompatible with the impartiality of a witness and of a juror; but they will inquire: "Have you taken the Royal Arch Mason oath?" "I have." "Please to step aside until we learn the precise character of that oath." Ten thousand honest Masons may be found, in good standing with the order, who, if called upon by the legal authority, would either frankly say that they could not testify in the case without implicating themselves, or else with true and faithful answer give to the questions put by the court.

This course is very plain; we rejoice to have it so. We make our mark and challenge the fraternity to cross it. We throw our glove at the bar of our legal tribunals; let those who contradict us take it up if they dare. We challenge them to judicial combat. We defy them to meet us before twelve men impanneled in due form of law. We are sure that such a trial would place Freemasonry in the condition of Jesuitism when the Parliament of Paris demanded a sight of the Jesuit constitutions. We know it would furnish legal evidence of the iniquity of the order, which would be irresistible and overwhelming, not to show that every Freemason is a knave, but that the constitution of the order would have him so. We dispute no man's word; honest Masons may declare that they know of no evil in Freemasonry. We believe them; but they will allow us also to know, and from their own ranks to prove, that every point in the oaths revealed in Bernard's "Light on Masonry" is exacted by regularly constituted lodges of Freemasonry; and when that is proved to the entire satisfaction of the court and jury the inquiring public will know and the honest Masons will learn somsthing that they did not know before, viz., that there is evil in Freemasonry.

Until we have opportunity to submit the oaths of Freemasonry to the trial of a high court we, in conclusion, offer for consideration the following questions carefully prepared from those propounded to the Jesuits in the year of their dissolution in France, as recorded in the history of their destruction by D'Alembert:

1. Are not the people competent of themselves, and by their legal representatives, to decide whether any secret or benevolent institution be comformable or contrary to the laws of this republic?

2. Did not the citizens who have submitted themselves to the institution of Freemasonry submit to it on the supposition, nay, in the persuasion, that it was approved by the laws and by the people?

3. If the people or their representatives, having at first permitted or tolerated the institution, come afterwards to be of opinion that it is contrary to the laws of the republic, would the good citizens who have subjected themselves to this institution do wrong to renounce it? Would they err in accounting their vow of obedience to the order inconsistent with the obedience they owe from their birth both to the commands of God and to the constitutions of their country?

4. If the vow which they have made as citizens be contrary to that they have made as Freemasons, is not this second vow null of itself, being destroyed by a vow more ancient and more sacred?

5. If they think themselves, notwithstanding this consideration, engaged by their vow of obedience to the order, ought not the people and their legal representatives to declare that they are disqualified for the discharge of any public trust?

We do not believe that the Jesuits were naturally worse men than their contemporaries, or that they became Jesuits with criminal views. We do not believe that the individuals were, as private citizens, worse than any equal number of their fellow citizens. The mischief was not in the men; it was in their form of social constitution, in their oaths of obligation to the order, in their wide distribution of immense power, concentred in one body, actuated by one spirit of self-aggradizement, and governed by one head of the order. The mischief of Jesuitism was not so much in the men or in the object of their association as it was in the mode of action they adopted to attain that object. They organized into companies like an army; into higher grades like an aristocracy; under one chief like a despotism; and they worked this complicated machine with secret springs concealed from the world and from the inspection of even the great body of the order itself. Here was the mischief. We believe that man is incapable of exercising great power uncontrolled by public accountability without abusing it. Whether it be religious Jesuitism or social Freemasonry, the organization, the power, and the secret operation are the same, except that Freemasonry is much the more secret and complicated of the two. And it may be doubted whether angels in such a society could resist the temptation always held out to sin. It is not the fault of Jesuits or Freemasons individually that their societies are regarded with jealousy or have fallen into disrepute; but it is the constitutional fault of their social organization, and their unaccountable mode of public action, which renders them alike objects of democratic hostility and of republican dread. It is their secret government, their fraternal obligations, their mutual confidence, and their spiritual love to the order, which fasten them together, right or wrong, and incline the whole body downward in the race equally of time and sin. A secret society can not improve in virtue. Its tendency is irrevocably to err, to become wholly corrupt. History affords no example of one which has not fallen into disgrace, or of one which has ever purified itself, or been purified, save only by dissolution and death.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, October 1, 1874.

It is in contemplation to hold the anniversary of our State Association in Chicago soon, and endeavors are being put forth to enlist new men in the movement.

Remember the fast day for the casting down of Satan from his control over the mind of this nation through its secret lodges. Individual men may be wicked, but, in the lodges, mischief is framed into law, and Satan rules man in masses as in heathen and popish countries. As a farmer in Bureau county said to me: "The Masons are afraid of each other and outsiders are afraid of them." Thus the lodges "drive men to hell like sheep," as Wesley said of the distillers of England. Nothing but the power of Jesus Christ ever did or can dislodge Satan from his strongholds, the spurious worships of men. But Christ is mightier than Satan; stronger than the strong man armed, and his kind goeth forth by nothing but by prayer and fasting. Remember our fast day is Sabbath, November 8th.

Dr. V. R. Bridges, of Mattoon, Illinois, read an exceedingly able paper on temperance before the Ladies' Temperance Alliance in the College Chapel at Wheaton, on Wednesday, Sept. 23d. The Chapel was filled and the audience attentive. Dr. Bridges was a brigade surgeon and had charge of an important post hospital during the war; and was an important man in our great struggle. He was also master of Westfield Lodge, Clark county, Illinois; and while sitting in his office in the hospital near Little Rock, Arkansas, a secesh Southerner, who murdered a Union man near Little Rock and robbed him of two thousand dollars, came to Bridges and, "on the square," applied for his help. He was then under arrest and in charge of an orderly. The Doctor took him aside and held the following dialogue with him:

Dr. B.—"Well, did you kill him?"

Secesh.—"Yes."

"Did you get the two thousand dollars?"

"Yes."

"Well, what do you expect of me?"

"I expect you to aid in extricating me from this difficulty, because within the length of your cable-tow."

"You infamous puppy, you. If you think I propose to make such a use of my Masonry, for once you have mistaken your man. And when your matters come up I will endeavor to be present and give my testimony against you."

I need not say that Dr. Bridges is now opposed to the lodge. He is altogether a remarkably fearless, patriotic man.

THE GREAT COUNCIL.

Below find the programme of the National Congregational Council. Dr. Quint, the secretary and only permanent officer, and who should properly sign the notice below, is back out of sight. He proposed, so we are told, to resign his secretaryship to avoid our attacks on the Council, but not to renounce the blasphemies of "his fifth libation."

Dr. Storrs, who signs the call, is a professed Anti-mason, who helped write and issue a tract against the lodge while he was in Cincinnati. Since his going to New York he fraternizes with Freemasons like Quint. We will give a full account of this "Council" and its acts and omissions hereafter.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES OF THE UNITED STATES.

The delegates chosen are reminded that the second session of the National Council will be held in New Haven, Ct., commencing on Wednesday, September 30, 1874, at 3 o'clock P. M.

The precise place of meeting, and the arrangements for entertainment of delegates, will be made known by the committee of brethren in New Haven, through the religious papers.

The opening sermon will be preached on Wednesday evening, by Rev. Richard S. Storrs, D. D. Of topics for consideration previously suggested, papers will be read as follows:

Rev. Zachary Eddy, D. D., of Michigan, upon the occasions of hope for an immediate general effusion of the Holy Spirit.

Rev. I. E. Dwinell, D. D., of California, upon the Fellowship of the Churches.

Rev. N. G. Clark, D. D., of Massachusetts, upon Our Foreign Missionary Churches—their internal organization, mutual relations, and relations to the churches at home.

Rev. D. B. Coe, D. D., of New York city, upon Christian Comity between Denominations on the Home Field.

Rev. C. L. Goodell, of Missouri, upon Mutual Aspects of our Different Benevolent Agencies.

Rev. Pres. A. D. Smith, D. D., of New Hampshire, upon the Internal Spiritual Condition of our Colleges.

Hon. Henry P. Haven, of Connecticut, upon Sabbath-schools, City Missions, and similar agencies.

Rev. W. H. H. Murray, of Massachusetts, upon the Conditions of Pulpit Effectiveness among the multitude.

Rev. A. F. Beard, of New York, upon the Development of latent Power in churches and individuals.

Rev. Pres. J. H. Fairchild, D. D., of Ohio, upon the Character Essential to the religion which will take strong hold of the American people.

A committee of the last Council will report regarding the Consolidation of Benevolent Societies.

The Provisional Committee will also report necessary and occasional items of business.

Blank credentials have been seasonably forwarded to the Secretaries of the several organizations, for distribution.

Henry M. Storrs, New York city,
Chairman of Prov'l Committee.

Report of Meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Christian Association.

Chicago, Sept. 19, 1874.

The Board met in the Cynosure office pursuant to call. Pres. Blanchard, Isaac Preston, I. A. Hart, J. G. Terrill, C. R. Hagerty, E. A. Cook, H. L. Kellogg and C. A. Blanchard, present. Mr. Sturgis of Washington, Iowa, and Mr. Arnold, of Sycamore, Ill., were invited to sit as corresponding members.

Prayer was offered by Pres. Blanchard. Minutes of the previous meeting were read. It was moved by H. L. Kellogg, that the provisional clause respecting the compensation of the Assistant Secretary be stricken out, and that she be allowed 05 per cent. of the now unpledged receipts until her salary be $500, for the term of office.

The report of the Committee on Finance and Tracts was read. It was voted to consider the report on Tracts, article by article. Articles one and two were adopted: Article three was amended by striking out parenthetic clause and adopted as amended. Article four was adopted. The committee recommended that monies for tracts be sent to the Treasurer. It was voted to adopt the plan herewith printed in the report on Tracts.

The report on Finances was taken up. Articles one, two and three were read and adopted. A long discussion was had respecting the propriety of hiring by definite contract State agents. It was finally voted to employ such agents promising them: 1st, The funds contributed for the purpose of the States in which they work; 2d, Their pro-rata portion of other funds in the Treausry unappropriated. Article fifth was amended by striking out the words "General and State agents", and substituting therefor the words Corresponding Secretary. It was adopted as amended. Article sixth was adopted. Article seventh was stricken out.

It was moved that reports of the meeting of the Executive Committee be published in the Cynosure. Carried. It was moved that Pres. Blanchard, Prof. Lumry and H. L. Kellogg be a Committee to nominate the Committee on Tracts. Carried. It was moved that the Chairman, the Corresponding Secretary, and the General Agent be a committee to make contracts with State agents now at work. Carried. It was moved that the annual meeting be held in February. Laid on the table until the next meeting.

It was moved that there be appointed a day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of secret societies. Moved to amend by designating the second Sabbath in November as the day, and that all Anti-masonic churches be requested to take up collections for the cause on that day. The amendment and motion as amended prevailed. It was moved that I. A. Hart, Prof. Lumry, and C. A. Blanchard be a committee on addresses, and printing addresses to the people respecting the coming day of fasting and prayer. Carried. It was moved that proof slips of the address be mailed to ministers and papers so far as deemed advisable by the Secretary. Carried. It was moved that H. L. Kellogg, through the Cynosure, ask opinions respecting a winter meeting. Carried. Meeting then adjourned.

C. A. Blanchard.
Secretary.

Below will be found the reports on Tracts and Finance.

REPORT ON TRACTS.

1, We recommend that a committee for the publication and revision of tracts consisting of five persons be appointed.

2, That so long as Ezra A. Cook & Co. continue to own the tract plates and publish the tracts at their own risk, E. A. Cook be the secretary of that committee.

3, That the business of this committee shall be to examine the tracts already published and approve of, revise, or reject them. (Rejected tracts will not be published in the future.)

4, That all tracts hereafter published be issued only on the recommendation of the committee.

Under the above recommendations the tract fund will be sent to Ezra A. Cook & Co., and the account of it shall be open to the inspection of the tract committee (or any member of it) and the Treasurer of the National Christian Association in all business hours; and be audited annually by the Auditor of the National Christian Association.

The secretary of this committee shall keep a careful record of all monies received and of all orders filled for tracts, and report quarterly to the Treasurer of the National Christian Association, the amount received and paid out, with the balance of funds on hand.

REPORT ON FINANCES.

The committee recommend: 1, That donations be solicited for General and Lecture Funds, and for a State Fund for each State so fast as State lecturers can be provided. These funds to be appropriated according to the wish of the donors, the committee reserving the privilege to appropriate from either in case of a surplus. Where no special fund or object is named the amount to be credited to the General Fund; the membership fees to be credited to the same fund.

2, The General Agent and Lecturer to be paid $1,000 and expenses from the Lecture and General Funds.

3, The Corresponding Secretary to be paid $300 per year from the General Fund.

4th, The State Agents to be paid———per year and expenses from the respective State fund and the General Fund.

5th, The Corresponding Secretary to report monthly to the Treasurer the receipts and expenses of the General and State Agents in full, and the former in such manner that the names of donors may be published.

6th, The Agents and Corresponding Secretary to be paid quarterly, as nearly as possible.

In accordance with the vote of the Executive Committee, correspondence is invited in regard to the best time for holding the National Association at Pittsburgh. Every reader who has a suggestion on the subject write to the Corresponding Secretary.

NOTES.

—The granges of La Salle county, Illinois, held a picnic the other day, and after Grand Master Golder had made his accustomed speech the young folks danced all the afternoon in spite of rainy weather. If the grange has added the promiscuous country dance to its social attractions, the sooner the farmers abandon it the better for the virtue of their families.

—The Odd-fellow Grand Lodge met last week at Atlanta, Georgia. The question of uniting the Grand Lodge with the Grand Encampment was negatived. A charter was granted to the first encampment in Montreal. On Friday the Grand Lodge in a body visited the Supreme Court of the State and were banqueted by the city Chamber of Commerce in the afternoon. This visiting supreme courts in a body is somewhat original with lodges, but the idea must not be considered either fanciful or a simple act of courtesy. The Grand and subordinate lodges of all kinds have a vast interest in the courts, not particularly with their presiding genius, to be sure, for they are not intimates of Justice, but in bribing her attendants. Such courteous visits as the above can never be received without suspicion.

—We call attention to the report on Masonic Prayers from the proceedings of the last Grand Lodge of New York. It is an authoritative confirmation of the really pagan character of the lodge.

—The next issue of the Cynosure, closes the sixth volume. A special effort should be given to new subscriptions and every renewal due is paid with more satisfaction now than at some future indefinite time. Read the publishers notice elsewhere.

—N. E. Spalding, one of the oldest settlers of Northern Illinois died last week a Blackberry, Kane county. Mr. Spalding was a Freemason, but commanded the lodge not to appear at his funeral with its gew-gaws and sham solemnities. Considerable light has been disseminated in that region, no doubt to the enlightment of Mr. Spalding's mind, and to tho weakening of the lodge power.

—An interesting reminiscence of Anti-masonic efforts is a pamphlet published with the assistance of a few friends by Jonas Brown, of Highgate, Vt., in 1859. It contains the Masonic obligations from Entered Apprentice to Knights of Kadosh according to Morgan and Bernard, with notes; reports on the abduction and murder of Morgan and on the construction of Masonic penalties before the United States Convention in 1830, and other documents.

—As a single note of the progress of our reform, the fact that half a hundred or more seceding Masons have joined the Free Methodist church during the past year, is of the greatest encouragement. A minister of that denomination intimate with its statistics gives the estimate. Such converts from the lodge are the ones who get clear over the fence and are faithful witnesses for the truth. May their members increase a thousand fold.

—The periodical difficulties of the great Pennsylvania coal mines—strikes, closing of mines, brawls, murders—have almost always been chargable to the unions, or secret combinations among the workmen. The manager of one mine at Braddocksfield, Pa., Mr. J. B. Corry, has no affection for secret lodges of any kind whatever and will not have a "union" miner in his employ. Neither does he enter any of the dealers combinations, to raise prices regardless of the welfare of their men. He endeavors to use fairness and his efforts are met in the same spirit. No trouble occurs at his mine. While other mines are idle all around his is in full operation. So much for refusing to fellowship the lodge in business relations.

Fast Day, November Eighth.

The National Christian Association, realizing that secret oath-bound societies are corrupting the church of Christ; and deeply sensible of the timid, time serving policy which many Christians is all parts of our land maintain towards such societies; and humbly acknowledging their own weakness, have appointed the second Sabbath of November as a day of fasting and prayer. They ask all Christians who deplore the evils resulting from secret societies to pray that the understandings of God's children may be opened to see the wickedness of these institutions that they all may come up to the help of the Lord against these hosts of darkness who are making fearful breaches in the walls of Zion; and that in the government of this nation the power of those who love darkness rather than the light because their deeds are evil, as well as in the church of Christ may be broken; and that all Christians who have been beguiled into these unholy leagues may renounce and forsake them; and that these societies may be destroyed.

Testimonies of the Church on Secret Societies.

That freemasonry is a fearful evil, is generally acknowledged by christians of different denominations, as the following quotations will show. The Interior, organ of the Presbyterian Church, said in July, 1874, editorially, that MASONS "MUST EXPECT AND RESPECT SHARP CRITICISM AND EARNEST OPPOSITION FROM EVANGELICAL CHRISTIANITY."

The General Association of Cong'l churches of Illinois eight years ago passed resolutions drawn up by Rev. Sam'l C. Bartlett, of their Theological seminary, from which we quote the following:

"Fourth resolution. That there are certain other wide spread organizations—such as Freemasonry—which, we suppose, are in their nature hostile to good citizenship and true religion, because they exact initiatory oaths of blind compliance and concealment, incompatible with the claims of equal justice toward man and a good conscience toward God; because they may easily, and sometimes have actually, become combinations against the due process of law and government; because while claiming a religious character they, in their rituals, deliberately withhold all recognition of Christ as their only Savior and of Christianity as the only true religion; because while they are in fact nothing but restricted partnerships or companies for mutual insurance and protection, they ostentatiously parade this characterless engagement as a substitute for brotherly love and true benevolence; because they bring good men in confidential relations to bad men; and because, while in theory, they supplant the church of Christ, they do also, in fact, largely tend to withdraw the sympathy and active zeal of professing Christians from their respective churches. Against all connections with such associations we earnestly advise the members of our churches, and exhort them, 'Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers;'".

The United Presbyterian Church maintains on its books and in its practice:

"That all associations, whether formed for political or benevolent purposes, which impose upon their members an oath of secrecy, or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity and church members ought not to have fellowship with such associations."

The Reformed Presbyterian organization testifies:

"We reject all systems of false religion and will-worship, and with these, all forms of secret oathbound societies and orders as ensnaring in their nature, pernicious in their tendency and perilous to the liberties of both church and state: and pledge ourselves to pray and labor according to our power, that whatever is contrary to godliness may be removed and the church beautified with universal conformity to the law and will of her divine Head and Lord."

The Free Methodist Church believing that: "Evil works instinctively incline to darkness" that "Good works grow up in the light" that "God commands us to let our light shine" that "A bad institution ought not and a good one need not be secret," maintains the following rule:

"Any society requiring an oath, affirmation or promise of secrecy, as a condition of membership, is held to be a secret society; and any member joining, or continuing in such, violate his covenant obligations and shall in due form be excluded from the church."

The Wesleyan Methodist Church state in their discipline:

"We will on no account tolerate our ministers or members in joining or holding fellowship with secret societies, such as Freemasonry or Oddfellowship; as in the judgment of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection it is inconsistent with our duties to God to hold such connections."

From the discipline of the Friends we take the following on secret societies:

"It being obvious that the public entertainments, and the vain, ostentatious processions of those called Freemasons are altogether inconsistent with our religious profession: if therefore, any of our members shall join therein or unite in membership with them, they are to be treated with as in other cases of disorderly conduct, and if after tender admonition and brotherly labor they cannot be dissuaded therefrom they are to be disowned."

The United Brethren put a rule into their discipline excluding adhering Freemasons from membership in their church, in 1829. The subject came before their General conference in 1849, was thoroughly discussed and the following rule (more explicit than the other) was inserted in place of the old one. "Freemasonry, in every sense of the word, shall be totally prohibited, and there shall be no connection with secret combinations; (a secret combination is one whose initiatory ceremony or bond of union is a secret); and any member found connected with such society, shall be affectionately admonished by the preacher in charge twice or thrice, and if such member does not disist in a reasonable time, he shall be notified to appear before the tribunal to which he is amenable; and if he still refuses to desist, he shall be expelled from the Church."

The Baptist church has in former years gone before almost all others in exposing and opposing this anti-christ. We might speak, if time would permit, of the Lutheran church, the Albrechts, the Christians, the Winebrennarians, the Dunkards and others. But Satan tempts Christians as he tempted their Master promising to give them all that the natural heart desires, if they will fall down and worship him, and some of them are led captive by him at his will. Presbyterians say they are opposed to masonry in theory but in practice their business interests forbid their touching the subject. Congregationalists recognize masonic chaplains as brethren and place them in offices of trust without first requiring them to remove the yoke which "binds them unequally with unbelievers." An eminent pastor in Pittsburgh says that the introduction of the subject of Masonry in conversation with United Presbyterian Pastors of that city makes them tremble. The general ignorance of the masses on the subject of masonry together with the prevailing spirit of a liberal Christianity which proposes to serve both God and mammon, brings such a pressure to bear on those who will follow their Master that many of them, with Peter, are tempted to deny Christ. Different Bodies of Christians which will have no fellowship with masonry find in the National Christian Association an opportunity to mass their forces and make each church feel the strength of every other. In the words of Edmund Burke "When bad men combine, the good must associate, else they will fall, one by one an unpitied sacrifice in a contemptible struggle."

THE CHARACTER AND WANTS OF THE STATE AGENTS OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

As each loyal state was taxed to support the soldiers who were defending our liberties and the rights of the slave, so the churches must combine to support the noble men who have enlisted in this work. See the motives that impelled them to enter it. One of them, laboring in Illinois, writes: "I have undertaken the work for the Lord and as a work of faith, I shall not doubt that He is to triumph though I may fail." Another at work in Indiana writes: "I am committed to this cause for life, God being my helper. Not that I expect always to remain in the field as a lecturer, but whatever I may engage in, to contend for the truth against error." This spirit has compelled these and other noble men to enter this work even before a salary was guaranteed them; has led them to leave home fields of labor where they were sure of obtaining a reasonable salary, to run the risk of support for their loved families while defending a suffering truth.

As yet that support is wholly inadequate.

Have you any money? a friend said to one of them.

Yes. I have sixty cents, was the reply. The friend gave him a few dollars and the agent said "I obtained that sixty cents by the sale of half a bushel of my apples."

Another on receiving $15.00 on his salary writes: "Thank you very much. Nothing ever came more acceptably than did it. I had been clinging to a two dollar bill for over a week wishing to keep it for seed: but one week ago to-day my wife informed me that the bread was all gone, and that she had no flour, so when I bought a sack of flour I had twenty five cents left which enabled me to feel, if I did not say that I was not out of money. · · · I was hard pressed. · · · You have afforded me relief for the present which I heartily appreciate: and I shall trust the good Lord still for the future."

We appeal to every Christian who knows that masons deny the Lord that bought that them; who realizes with Dr. Fisch of Paris, that "The Church in America must stand as one man against Masonry or be destroyed"; to support these self denying men and their families.

We ask every church in sympathy with this movement to take up a contribution for its lecturers this year. If convenient, on the fast day November eighth. Rev. B. T. Roberts of the Free Methodist church writes: "I think a collection for the National Christian Association might with advantage be substituted in our churches for the collection now taken for the Bible Society. They have ample resources and access to all the wealthy churches."

Rev. L. N. Stratton thinks that the Wesleyans at any annual conference would pass a resolution recommending to their churches an annual contribution to the National Christian Association.

Our lecturers need money now and there is nothing in our treasury for state agents. Will you not give this matter your immediate prayerful, careful, attention? As individuals will you not respond to this call if the church collection cannot be taken up soon?

We especially request the people of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Michigan, Iowa and Kansas to respond promptly as these are the states in which our agents are already at work or where we are hoping to put them within three months. Funds contributed from these states will be sacredly used for the salaries of agents in each respectively, unless there should be a surplus. This would be put into the general fund. We have a small salary to pay our General Agent and Corresponding Secretary besides bills for printing and postage. These will be paid out of contributions to the general fund or out of monies received from states where no agents are employed. Although our aim is to have lectures delivered in all states even where no lecturer is at work through the year.

Send all donations in post office order, draft or registered letter, to H. L. Kellogg, Treasurer, N. C. A.

All donations will be acknowledged in the Christian Cynosure.

The Home Circle.

Consecrated by Christ.

By sleep he consecrated sleep,
And taught us how to lay our head
With trust like his, divine and deep,
In slumber on our nightly bed.

By death he consecrated death,
And made the grave a holy home,
In which our flesh, the turf beneath,
Shall rest in hope until he come.

Resting, he consecrated rest,
And bade us in his rest to dwell,
And when, with weariness oppressed,
He sat at noon on Sychar's well.

Weeping, he consecrated tears,
And showed the mourner how to weep:
And yet the tear-sick eyes he clears,
Lest sorrow be too long and deep.

Loving, he consecrated love,
Lifting it out of human sin,
Making it pure, like things above,
And deepening the fount within.

Domestic Life.

Domestic life is the school of patience. Its duties, its difficulties, and its delights, too, are constantly recurring. Only the work of to-day can be done to-day. There is a sameness, also, in the mere external form, an ever-recurring round that must disgust, or make one a mere mechanical drudge, unless the heart is put into the work, and the little, common, trivial acts are made the embodiment of noble ends. Step by step, stitch by stitch, stroke by stroke the work goes on. One round of duty is completed only to commence another. Every day is a lesson and a parctical exercise in patience. It is a good lesson, and we need to learn and practice it. It helps us to another work which is absolutely necessary to the perfection of human character and the happiness of home, and that is the surrender of self. When two persons unite in the marriage relation they become one by mutual concessions. They naturally approach each other. There is much to give up as well as to give on both sides. There are many sharp corners to be rounded off, many rough surfaces to be made smooth, and many crooked ways to be made straight, and irregularities to be adjusted. Some of these are in the very grain of the constitution, some of them have been confirmed and hardened into habit, and it is difficult to make any impression upon them. Neither must seek to make self the standard, and to exact all the surrender and conformity from the other. Neither must seek to become the other, but something better than either. When two substances unite, chemically, the result is a substance different from either of its components. So it should be in marriage; the result should be favorable to husband and wife. Each one should become freer, nobler, stronger, purer and wiser—should attain a higher excellence than either could attain alone. This will always be the result when the rule of action is mutual surrender, accommotion and help. Each should inquire, What can I yield? In what respect and how far can I reform?

Every day will bring occasions to put our principles to the test. There are diversities of taste, of feeling, of judgment, of principle. Happy are those who can yield their own preferences so cheerfully that diversities of character are softened and shaded off into harmonious varieties, and not hardened into irritating and hostile opposition.

A great part of the sum of domestic misery is caused by this want of mutual accommodation, in apparently trivial things. It is as though the builder had left here and there in the floor, partitions and passages, the sharp points of nails to pierce the feet and rend the garments; or as though a thousand rough surfaces and sharp corners were fretting the inmates, and loose, ill-fitting joints were annoying them. If we could see the spiritual houses as we see the natural, we should discover all these defects in the very walls. We would see the marks and scars of painful collisions; the want of proportion and harmony in the various apartments. I repeat, then, if we desire to have the work in our spiritual building to go on harmoniously to a successful and noble issue, we must seek harmony in little things. Our intercourse must be courteous and respectful. We must be filled with that worthy fear which is the off-spring of love—not fear of each other, but fear for each other; fear of ourselves that we may be wanting in some attention or respect; fear that we may do less for each other and exact more from each other than we ought. In a word we must seek the good of each other and of all in the house, and around that end as a center the life of each and all should revolve in freedom.—Sel.

A Remarkable Case.

In "The Philadelphia Medical Times," August 2d, 1873, Dr. T. D. Davis, of Dayton, Ohio, gives an account of a man who, for six months before his death, from tumor from the brain, suffered with what is called by physicians aphasia; i. e., loss of the faculty of language. This gradually increased until "there was complete aphasia, he being unable to recall the name of the most familiar article." But the wonderful exception to this was, as Dr. Davis says, that "he could lead in prayer with a clear voice and well pronounced words. This was the more remarkable, as he did not pray by rote, but framed new petitions each time." Dr. Davis observes, in another part of his report of the case, that "he could repeat distinctly any word after you pronounced it, but would miscall the commonest article. Wanting his hat, he would ask for his boots, and be surprised when they were brought to him; and it was sometimes impossible for him to tell his wishes without resorting to signs. But even in his worst stages he could frame and pronounce accurately a long prayer. He would arise from a well-worded prayer, and be utterly unable to name his children. His last words were uttered in prayer for them.

This is one of the most striking instances of the preservation, in the midst of bodily and mental decline, of those faculties which serve the uses of the spiritual life. In old age, and near the approach of death, many have witnessed the closing, as it were, of the earthward windows and doorways of sense, along with the opening wider and wider of those that look towards heaven. We are thus reminded of Milton's lines upon his blindness:

"So much the rather, Thou celestial Light,
Shine inward, and the mind, through all her powers,
Irradiate; there plant eyes, all mist from thence Purge and disperse, that I may see and tell
Of things invisible to mortal sight."

Riches.

All men desire them.

No man possesses them.

This last is a startling statement, and will be contradicted by all readers of it. The aim of this paper is to maintain it.

The richest man is he who has the fewest ungratified desires; who in himself carries, independent of externals, the largest proportion of all he values.

The desires of a man expand with the increase of his means to acquire; so that the more his wealth abounds, the more do his desires superbound.

A man, then, is poorest in that of which he possesses the most; for as his wishes expand in a geometrical ratio to his acquirements, the more he has the larger is his want.

Thus, a man begins by desiring to possess a house. He obtains his wish. Is he content? On the contrary, he is now looking with a longing mind on several houses. So that possession, instead of extinguishing desire, inflames it. The tendency in any one direction, which may be called the hobby, is like a plant which, at first putting out two small leaves, or cotyledons, is nourished till it grows into a tree, with branches on every side, all abouuding in leaves.

The writer knew a man in London who owned a thousand houses there, besides many in the provinces, and whose eagerness to add to the number was inordinate. He began life on a tailor's board.

The writer having no house, does not wish to possess one, being content with the occupation of one which he does not own.

But the writer remembers when he first began to buy books. He got together half a dozen volumes, and his desires were bounded by one or two more. He afterwards became possessor of twenty-five thousand volumes. and then eagerly searched every critical review, every sale catalogue, within reach, and every second-hand bookstore, and his desires were unbounded and insatible.

He had to part with all, and owns himself richer to-day, with a few volumes now, he than he was with many; for now he has all he wants.

This illustrates what was said at the beginning: No man possesses riches. For if the word be interpreted to mean as much as will circumscribe desire; it is contended that possession enhances instead of diminishing desire; and it follows, of course, that whatever the favorite object, that in which a man has most attained to abound in, is also that in which his ungratfied desires do most super-abound.

Theology says, riches do not make happiness.

Experience says the same thing.

The Bible precedes both in like teaching. "The happiness of man consisteth not in the abundance of that which he possesseth."

Universal practice walks its own way in utter disregard of the teaching of religion, philosophy and experience, for the commonest instinct says, "get as much as you can."

But now, to supress the contemptuous sneers of money hunters at the utterance of such unworldly lore, I am willing to let them decide the matter themselves from the experience of their own lives.

This is a land where such an appeal will be peculiarly right and decisive.

In Europe the rich are often also the men of rank, and, and as they have inherited their title and estates, and never remember a time in which they not in possession of the distinction which wealth confers, they can make only an imaginary comparison of themselves with those men who are in very different, or opposite circumstances. But here, in California, there is probably no rich man who was not once poor, and in the majority of cases, not long ago. His memory is still fresh of the former life; he can recall all the state of mind, and the way of life he had, when he was poor, and now that he is rich, shall one, who is not rich and who never was, make an attempt to speak for such a man, merely from the basis of such a knowledge of our common nature as experience of various fortune has given?

The very possession of wealth is a burden, and the very administration of it a toil and vexation.

We know a man in England whose vast estate compelled him to make this bargain with himself: He visits his ancestral mansion—a sumptuous palace in a beautiful romantic park, and filled with works of art, some of them of world-wide renown—only six weeks in each year; and all that have business with him must come to him on these occasions. At such times he begins early in each day, and continues without intermission as arduous a plodding as any over-worked clerk, auditing his steward's accounts, interviewing his tenants and the workmen who do his numerous jobs; and as soon as the six weeks are expired he tears himself away, leaving a large balance for transaction by his steward, or to stand over for decision on the next half year. This he rigorously adheres to, for otherwise his property would claim all his life. He is well in his generation, but would he not be much better if he were poorer?

Look at the men who are the richest among us. Can they enjoy themselves with the airy freedom of the poorer class? They are way-laid at every turn, besieged in their places of business, invaded in their homes, and delivered as a prey to the teeth of every kind of men who wish a share of their money. They look jaded, weary and overworked, and in fact are so; and they will admit that, whatever the triumph of their position, whatever the distinction and consideration it gives, they pay a heavy penalty for it in the labor it imposes, and the loss of the light and shade, the picturesque freshness of their former life; while they feel an alienation of friends, and the miserable substitution of equals in wealth—since they are sought not for what they are, the truest choice of all, but for what they have. In moderate circumstances, money was his servant and his friend; now he has become the slave of his money, in the enjoyment of which he probably has a smaller share than the poorest man he pays, who, having no ambition beyond his day's work, relishes his food and sleeps soundly after his work, which insures him a good digestion.—Selected.

Trap Rocks.

There is not a rock that crops out of the ground, or that lies asleep far below its surface but has its story. It was not always stone. Some rocks were once mud settlings at the bottom of the sea, and others, in their terrible birth, were cradled in fire. The six days of creation were good long days, no doubt, with a long morning and a long evening to every one of them; and the best reason I have for this belief is the fact that the rocks themselves hold, nicely locked up in their strata, the selfsame story of the six days, in the very order in which Moses gives it.

Among the fire-made rocks the basaltic or trap ridges and dikes are the most famous. Trap is from a Sweedish word meaning stairs and the regularly shaped rocks fitting together in close columns, often look like a flight of steps.

When from the fiery mass of liquid rock below the earth's crust, there is shot upward into the sea, or through some crevice in the continent, some of the red hot mixture, it will form, as it gradually cools under the pressure, regular or prismatic shapes. Such a formation is called a dike. That the trap dikes were once rocks in a melted state, is proved by the appearance of the rocks lying near them. For the distance of several feet the dike has baked it neighbors, changing sand stone into quartz, clays into jasper, and coal into coke and cinders.

Crystals owe their beautiful shapes to to the action of intense heat, and the trap rocks and lavas, though of a coarser grain, when they cool slowly, "behave" as near as may be like the crystals, taking, in their formation, regular shapes.

If the lava from a volcano should pour into a deep chasm till it is full, the cooling would go on slowly. In a hundred years, when it is quite cool, it will be found to have hardened into geomotrical forms. When an earthquake, or the action of water, has torn away the side of a volcano, and a glimpse of the interior has been obtained, the rocks have been discovered in a columnar form, fitting to one another like the cells of a honey comb.

This kind of rock scenery is found in all parts of the world. Fingal's Cave, a great natural curiosity on the Island of Staffa, one of the Hebrides, is of this formation. Staffa is visited by steamers, but it is uninhabited. On the north of Ireland is the Giant's Causeway. Mount Holyoke, in Massachusetts, and the palisades on the Hudson, are also examples of trap ridges. On Lake Superior are scenes of great beauty from the same cause. The Deccan, near the Western Chauts, in Hindoostan, a plateau of great extent, affords the most remarkable example of trap formation in the world. The high land for an extent of 200,000 square miles, is covered with these rocks, and the scenery presents a romantic succession of walls, chasms, stairway, waterfalls and forests.—Ex.

AN ITEM EVERY MAN SHOULD READ.—We have probably all of us met with instances in which a word heedlessly spoken against the reputation of a female has been magnified by malicious minds, until the cloud has become dark enough to overshadow her whole existence. To those who are accustomed—not necessarily from bad motives, but from thoughtlessness—to speak lightly of females, we recommend three "hints" as worthy of consideration.

Never use a lady's name in an improper place, at an improper time, or in mixed company. Never make any assertions about her that you think are untrue, or allusions that you feel she herself would blush to hear. When you meet men who do not scruple to make use of a woman's name in a reckless and unprincipled manner, shun them, for they are the very worst members of the community—men lost to every sense of honor—every feeling of humanity. Many a good and worthy woman's character has been forever ruined, and her heart broken by a lie, manufactured by some villain and repeated where it should not have been, and in the presence of those whose little judgment could not help from circulating the foul and bragging report. A slander is soon propagated and the smallest thing derogatory to a woman's character will fly on the wings of the wind and magnify as it circulates, until its monstrous weight crushes its poor, unfortunate victim. Respect the name of a woman, for your mother and sisters are women, and as you would have their fair names untarnished, and their lives unembittered by the slanderer's biting tongue, heed the ill that your own words may bring upon the mother, the sister, or the wife of some fellow creature.—Ex.

CHURCH-THEATER.—The worst of it is, our conscience is so defiled that we feel quite as innocent and out of harm's way in some theaters as we do in some churches. That is to say, that we find very bad actors in both, and occasionally clowns in the pulpit, and grave and serious gentlemen in the theaters. And we see people going to the church with all their worldly diamonds, and lace, and tucks and frills upon them: and saying with the most beautiful acting in the world, "Lord, be merciful to us miserable sinners;" and we cannot help for a moment help asking—when we see what we see—if it is not the theater.—Banner of Holiness.

Profanity.

TO THE BOYS OF AMERICA.

DEAR BOYS.—Did you ever see a lovely plant overshadowed and choked by great ungainly weeds till it had no strength to bud or bloom? Just so the noxious weeds of profanity shadow your character and choke from your heart every sweet blosom of purity and refinement.

I hope there are many among you who never use bad language of any kind, but I want to warn you all against profanity. First, it is exceedingly sinful to take the name of God in vain, and how often do we hear the name of our blessed Jesus Christ—who died for us—profaned. Any boy has some influence, be it more or less; and if he indulges himself in the use of profane language he places a very bad example before his acquaintances. Besides, this ensnaring practice will surely bring you into bad company, and evil companions would lead you to many vices. Vicious boys would soon trace you and flock around you, while the good could find no pleasure in your society. If you have a friend on earth—one who seeks your best interests, you may rest assured that that friend would suffer deep sorrow and humiliation if you were to entangle yourself either with bad associates, or the disgraceful fault of which I have warned you. Every boy should have a certain independence to enable him to stand up for what he knows to be right, no matter who or what resists him. The lack of independence is the stumbling-block over which very many fall into temptation. Do not be led through the world, boys, by a set of loafers, unworthy to be your leaders. Be independent; have a mind of your own; find where the right is, and uphold it; then you can respect yourself and be respected by others, even by those who desire to lead you astray; while on the other hand, they could but despise you in their hearts, for demeaning yourself in what all know to be wrong.

Putting aside the wickedness of profanity, you cannot be a gentleman in a worldly sense, and use rough or profane language; for this vulgar habit would transform you into an ill bred unmannerly boor, and stamp the unmistakable mark of a nobody upon you, and thus you would be excluded from refined, intelligent society. Who desires to be a nobody? Think of this boys, when you are tempted to swear! Avoid all slang expressions. They are often the prelude to this vile evil. To those, young or old, who have already formed the habit, I say—"It is never to late to mend." Resolve, at once, that you will prove yourself stronger than the habit. If in a moment of anger or forgetfulness, you fail, do not be discouraged, but try again, and yet again, if need be. Do not despair, I entreat you; but persevere until the hidious monster is trampled under your feet!—New York Observer.

Tom's Gold Dollar.

Tom Caldwell threw a stone at Deacon Ulster's horse as the old deacon was riding by the other day. The stone struck the horse. The horse kicked off into the mud, and the deacon himself came very near being thrown. Tom did not exactly mean to do it, although he did cast the stone, and did join with the rough boys in laughing heartily at the sad plight into which the deacon was put by his recklessness.

"Good for you, Tom!" said a red-vested and red-nosed horse-jockey, who stood by the livery stable door, and saw the catastrophe to Deacon Ulster. "Here's a dollar, Tom. It's worth that to see pious pride put into pickle." And the jockey reached out a gold dollar and offered it to Tom. Tom was surprised. He hesitated a moment, but could not resist the prize, and so pocketed the dollar, joined in the jockey's jolly laugh at the deacon's expense, and then walked on, feeling a little ashamed of himself, and yet covering his conviction with the thought of how many nice things a gold dollar would buy.

Tom had gone but a few steps when he heard a voice on the other side of the street calling to him. He raised his eyes, and saw Doctor Maybin, an old Quaker, standing in his office, and beckoning to Tom to come over.

"What did the fool pay thee for thy folly, Thomas?" asked the old man.

Tom blushed. His fingers fumbled in his pockets, and the gold dollar seemed to burn them more than the hot blushes burned his cheeks and brow. He answsred nothing. What could he answer?

"Didst thou sell thyself, Thomas?" asked the old doctor.

Still the condemned boy was speechless.

"Thoughtlessly, thou didst do a foolish thing. Mischeviously, thou didst laugh with fools at thine own wrong. Cowardly, thou didst shrink from confessing thy wrong. Covetously, thou didst accept a bit of gold for a bad and contemptible deed; and canst thou now rejoice in gold thus ill-gotten from base hands?"

The scarlet face was turned upward, and Tom's blue eyes, brimfull of tears, gazed into the white face of the indignant old man.

"I am ashamed of thee!" said the doctor.

"I despise myself," said Tom, flinging the gold piece to the pavement, and bursting into tears.

"Then pick up that gold; go to the giver; place it again in his hands, and say 'I blush that I dared to touch it;' go then to Deacon Ulster's and confess thy wrong."

"All this will I do," said Tom, as he picked up the coin and hurriedly left the doctor's presence.

And Tom did as the doctor advised and as he had promised. And on his way from Deacon Ulster's house to his own home, Tom said to himself, "The reproofs of the wise are sweeter then the rewards of the wicked."—Angel of Peace.

The Fettered Press.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—Please lay before the readers of the Cynosure the following letters touching the refusal of the Standard to publish my questions to ministers of the Gospel who are members of the Masonic fraternity or kindred orders. [Published last week in Cynosure.—ED.] I presented the document to both the editor-in-chief, Rev. J. A. Smith, and one of the publishers, Rev. Leroy Church, neither of whom made any objection to the subject matter of the communication; but on the other hand the tone of their remarks seemed to indicate sympathy with it.

My object in publishing these letters is to show, first, how the press is muzzled by the influence of secret societies: and, second, what flimsy excuses publishers and editors will frame for refusing anything aimed against these orders. "Controversial in tone!" "Provoke replies." "Lead on to interminable discussion." "We believe unprofitable to the readers!" And yet the principles approved of! What is it then, but fear of the menaces of secretism? And yet these men are managing a religious journal, telling the people to trust in God, and that it is perfectly safe to do so, declaring their trust in him because he is Almighty! And then cower before feeble man, while they claim they have God for backing! O cowardice unmeasured! and inconsistancy unparalleled! Poor Standard! I am sorry for you.

The following is the letter of Bro. Church to me:

Rev. A. D. Freeman,

DEAR BRO.—We have examined your article with some care. It is controversial in tone, would necessarily provoke replies, and lead on to interminable discussion, and unprofitable as we believe to the readers of the Standard. In declining it, we mean no disrespect to yourself or your principles, and trust you will accept our decision in the same spirit of kindness and good will with which it is made. Very truly,

LEROY CHURCH.

DOWNER'S GROVE, Sept. 18, 1874.

DEAR BRO. CHURCH.—I am sorry that you have decided to reject my "Article" as you are pleased to call it. And now please allow me to ask you a few questions: Suppose the article is controversial in tone; what then? Is not the Gospel controversial in tone also? Did not Jesus and the apostles controvert Judaism, pharisaism, and the traditions of the elders and the idolatries of the nations, and the spirit and customs of the world? Did not John the Baptist controvert the wicked course of Herod and his unchaste conduct with his brother Philip's wife? You would not tauntingly say he lost his head for it? no, nor that his loss of head should be taken as a token of Divine displeasure? Did Jesus and the apostles and John do right? By what "standard" will you decide? Did not Jesus inaugurate an interminable discussion? I believe it is not yet ended; nor do I expect it ever will end. I expect that heaven and hell and the reigning principles in each will forever be opposites. And yet I expect God's kingdom, and all connected with it, will prosper. And though I have thrown myself into the arena of this great conflict between heaven and hell in battling against this gigantic evil, oath-bound secretism, I expect to prosper. It will be prosperity for me, if God be pleased, whether men are pleased or not. My proposition to you was not to get up a discussion, nor to continue one, if it should arise. I wished only to call the attention of ministers who may be Masons or members of kindred institutions, first to certain obvious truths, which it is manifest they ought to consider. But you, it would seem, are unwilling that these Christian truths, so vital to the welfare of our country, the church and the souls of men, should reach your readers, in the relations that I presented them, at least through the Standard.

My dear brother, I fear you are assuming too much in standing between the truth of God in its legitimate relation to these unholy orders and the readers of the Standard. It would seem that you fear discussion in its bearing somewhere, (where shall we say?) more than all the troops of evils that come in crowds and floods upon all the land from these oath-bound fraternities. Do you fear your subscription list and the amount of deposits would be diminished? I would not of choice think so; but what else can I think from the tone of your and brother Smith's remarks to me a few days ago, and your letter of yesterday? If you could think that discussion would be immediately triumphant in favor of the views I have presented, and of course, therefore, the prosperity of your Standard, would you not be willing to insert my little article, that I had no had the vanity to think for a moment would provoke any reply, much less an interminable discussion. Because I know the obscurity into which I have been pushed by oath-bound secretists, who think me securely caged, so that I cannot cause a jar in the harmony of their dark designs. I had not thought that I could set a ball to rolling that could not be stopped. And it seems I am correct so far as the Standard is concerned. Shut out! You say "We have examined your article with some care;" and now will you please to consider that our heavenly Father has also examined it and noted the comparative worth of the truths (his truths) which you think ought not to appear in your paper, and reject them; and the column of "Brevities and Oddities" which you insert and much more of equal value; for instance, the games and plays for children which you have, much to the annoyance of the sober, thinking part of your readers, made prominent in the Standard, and this in a Christian paper! Shall we be obliged to believe that folly, nonsense and play may hold high carnival in the Standard, and God's truth touching and exposing a gigantic and dangerous evil, be ruled out?

"Watchman, tell us of the night!" Terribly dark, when religious journals flaunt their blotted pages before the public eye, instead of being transpariences through which the light of God may shine away the darkness of the times. O that God would hold editors and publishers in his own hands, and that they would submit to be guided by Divine wisdom!

My dear brother, I hope it will not cause you as much pain to read the foregoing as it has me to feel obliged to write it. And I hope you will consider, seriously, the full import of what I have written. The time has come, I think, when "Judgment should begin at the house of God," the church. And reform in religious journals insue. Yours fraternally,

A. D. FREEMAN.

Religious Intelligence.

—The first Methodist church in the Territory of Idaho, has just had its foundation stone laid at Boise City.

—Rev. E. P. Hart recently organized a Free Methodist church in Braddocks Field, Pa., near Pittsburgh, in which were a number of seceding Masons.

—Rev. F. Brooks, an esteemed and active Episcopalian pastor of a church in Cleveland, Ohio, was drowned at Cambridge, Mass., on the 15th of September.

—The first United Presbyterian church in the territory has been lately formed at Evans, Colorado, with a membership of thirty-two.

—The United Presbyterian Board decided last week to send six missionaries to Egypt. The work of this church in that country is very successful compared with other denominations.

—Extensive revivals are reported in the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist churches in the South. An organ of the Southern Methodist church notes over 2,000 in a single number. Camp-meetings are said to be very successful.

—The Foreign Missionary Board of the Free Baptist church will send out in October as missionaries R. M. Hogbin, Iowa; Miss Mary E French, Massachusetts; and Miss Susan R Libbey, daughter of the Secretary of the Free Will Baptist Missionary Society.

—An extensive Sunday-school conference has just been held in Darlington, England, by the Friends, to advance the interests and efficiency of this branch of Christian work. Nearly 800 delegates were present, some of whom were from America.

—A. H. Springstein, a Methodist Episcopal minister, who seceded from the lodge a year or two since, united with the Free Methodist church at the Michigan Conference held last week at Albion. An effort was made to bring him under charges in the M. E. Conference, but utterly failed.

—A movement for centralization is to be brought before the General Convention of the Episcopal church soon to be held in New York. It is understood that the Bishop of Litchfield will urge the union of the American church with the church of England and all its branches under the primacy of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

—The county auxiliaries of the American Bible Society have, in some localities, performed a good work by placing copies of the Bible in passenger depots and on the trains. The parent society, it is stated, is about to carry on this important step toward the general diffusion of the holy Scriptures among all classes of our people. They now propose to supply all the railroad cars with copies of the holy Bible.

—A table showing the religion of Scotland, lately prepared with great care by a Glasgow minister, gives the Presbyterians (Established, Free and United) 2,362,000 church goers; other evangelical denominations, 202,000; Roman Catholics, 290.000; Socinians, etc., 10,000. It appears that about 500,000 of the population of Scotland, about one-seventh, attend no church, which, however, can hardly be above the proportion in our own country.

—The clergy of the Methodist church, of Baltimore, recently had a warm debate upon the question, "Should not the ministers do something to prevent the running of public conveyances to camp-meeting on Sabbath?" Six or eight of the ministers participated in the discussion, and the most unanimous opinion was that the practice is an evil, and should be prevented, even if it be found necessary to suspend the camp-meeting.

—Many missionaries are scattered all through Japan, nominally as teachers, but actually as pioneers in the work of Gospel evangelization. There are twenty professed Christians among the government officers at the capital, now called Tokia, formerly Yeddo. Mr. Hatate Yama, one of the native Christians, converted in America, is now at the head of the Bureau of Instruction. His predecessor was a bigoted opposer of missionaries. At Yokohama the missionaries have perfect freedom, except that they should not probably be allowed to preach in the streets of the city.

—William Taylor, known in this country as "the California street preacher," has been laboring in India with some remarkable results. He has been preaching in Bombay, Calcutta, and Madras, and such has been the success of his ministrations that suspicion and opposition have been silenced. With him are associated nine missionaries, who constitute what is called "Taylor's Flying Artillery." Formerly the movement was confined to the Eurasians, the offspring of Europeans borne in India, but now the work has been extended to the natives proper, who hear the Gospel as gladly as the Eurasians.

—Rev. G. J. Alf, who has been a fearless and successful Baptist missionary in Poland for some years past, addresses an appeal to British Baptists for aid in erecting places of worship on his field. The lack of these is the greatest hinderance of the work there. Seventeen brethren are preaching the Word in Poland, one church sending out preachers, and their youngest church furnishing two, whose efforts are greatly blessed. During the six months preceding the date of the appeal, fifty-five converts had been baptized at Kicin, and others at other points. But the Papists cannot rent their houses to worship in, since the priests have forbidden it, and the brethren are many of them poor.

—A convention of the Young Men's Christian Association was held in Germantown, Pa., on Friday last. The Secretary of the International Committee stated that there are now 940 associations in the Union, forty-eight of which have buildings valued at $2,000-000, and fifty-six are accumulating funds amounting to $500,000. There are seventy-eight general secretaries employed by individual societies, to give their time and effort to this work. International work is really the missionary work of the Association. Last year, at the Dayton Convention, the reports of the Committee having this work in charge indicated progress in Alabama, Indiana, and Illinois. The present year there is a loud call for work in Virginia. The banner State of the Association is Pennsylvania, and it is to her that we must look for contributions to this missionary work.

—The value of mission work was thus illustrated in the recent Bengal famine. In the Soutal district a Danish missionary took the entire charge of distributing grain to the sufferers for nothing, and gave out the portions with his own hand to prevent cheating. He was well fitted for this work by long experience and his influence in the district. He did not with this work neglect the souls of the people. His mission was already a large one, but as numbers of the inhabtants came from a distance he utilized every occasion to spread the good work among them. Every night he preached to the people before giving the grain, and the overseers he selected were all Christian Sontals, who effectually reached the natives in many cases.

News of the Week.

The City.

An extraordinary row took place in McGarry's saloon, a political rendezvous, late Saturday night. Mc Donald, a notorious gambler and politician accompanied by two ruffians worked up a general fight in which a number of city politicians of prominence were roughly handled. The disgraceful affair is an index of the management of the city government, which disgraces every respectable resident.——The National Board of Underwriters have recommended to all the insurance companies represented by it to remove from Chicago Oct. 1st. This action is in accordance with a vote taken by the body soon after the July fire, making certain propositions for the prevention of and fighting fires. It has caused great indignation among the business men of the city with whose interests it considerably interferes. The rebuilt portion is considered as nearly fire-proof as any in the country, and the water supply will soon be unquestionably ample.

The Country.

The competition in cotton manufactures has reduced prices to a minium, if not a losing rate. A manufacturer's committee met last week at Providence, R. I., and agreed to a reduction of one-third in the production of cotton fabrics for the next three months. Also a meeting of the cotton manufacturing interest was held in Boston, at which about 2,000,000 spindles were represented. The committee in their report express the opinion that four full working days of 10 hours each, per week, would best promote the interest of the employed and employers during continuance of the necessary reduction.——On Thursday last the boiler of a steam thresher exploded in Franklin township, Wright Co. Minn., killing a Dr. Grant, of Watertown, and two ladies, and severely wounding several men.

—No search for the State arms, said to be still held by members of the White League, was made at New Orleans last week, and the peace of the city remained undisturbed. In a consultation which was held between Governor Kellogg and others, and it was decided, after considerable discussion, that for the present no search would be made. This decision will, it is thought, preclude the possibility of further rioting for some weeks at least. During the day a number of gentlemen on both sides were engaged in an effort to again bring together the Conference Committee, but, as the Republicans very properly refuse to allow the White Leaguers to secure a majority on the Board of State Canvassers, it seems to be settled that no arrangement will be arrived at.

—As the south-western mail and a passenger train on the Selma, Romo & Dalton road was crossing Waxahatchie Creek, on Thursday last, the bridge gave way and the engine and train fell in. Judge Wm. M. Boyd, one of the most prominent citizens of Selma, and the fireman were killed. There were several passengers on the train, several of whom were wounded, some fatally.

—The Jewish feast of the Tabernacles began last Friday at sunset and continues for ten days. On Sunday the ceremony of blessing the palm, the myrtle and the willow was observed; on Thursday the scroll of the law will be carried in procession around the synagogue, and on the following Sunday, which is known as the Rejoicing of the Law, the people will give themselves to social enjoyment.

—Reports from Central Michigan state that wheat is beginning to move rapidly and in considerable quantities. Old corn is entirely out of the market, and the prospect for the new crop is fair.

Foreign.

—A London dispatch says: The existence of a cordial and sympathetic letter from the Czar to Don Carlos, which had hitherto been denied at Berlin and elsewhere, is now acknowledged. The letter was written in reply to one from Don Carlos thanking the Czar for his refusal to recognize President Serrano.

—Gen. Moriones, of the Spanish Republican army, has begun a series of operations with the object of relieving Pampeluno, and fighting has been going on several days. The engagement of the first day was indecisive. On the second day the Republican artillery gained an advantage and inflicted heavy losses on the Carlists. Gen. Moriones resumed the offensive and dispersed several insurgent battalions, but failed to follow up the advantages he had gained.

—It is now stated that the wheat crop in France is nearly double that of ordinary years.

Home and Health Hints.

Prevent Colds.

This is the season for colds, with the oldest as well as the youngest, many will forget the thick, long socks and flannels, but rush to their stoves and furnaces, increasing the heat of their rooms (if your room is dark or damp a fire is indispensable) from one to twenty degrees in a single day, and hope thus to avoid them. This is very unwise; a sensitive mucus membrane either from some one of the exanthemata, or asthma, or repeated colds, does not seem to require a higher temperature than sixty-nine or seventy degrees. This supposes all parts of the room to have a like degree of heat. For adults, five minutes use of the flesh brush as they lay off their night clothes will be of vast use in warding off colds. With children use a soft flesh-brush, the brush just tipped with cold water, then dry with your hand, and with infants nothing except lard or sweet oil, well rubbed in. This accomplishes two objects, the rubbing will be tolerated with more satisfaction, while the blood will receive an impetus to the surface, making the circulation quicker. This will increase its warmth, and there is no possibility of catching cold, unless the degree of heat of the blood is reduced. You thus avoid those catarrhs which are so disagreeable, and sometimes fatal, but its more acute form, the agonizing earache, which may be among the earliest ailments of a child, and which the oldest cannot be indifferent too, as with other ailments.

A mother should accustom herself to the physiological appearance of her child's ear so that she can readily turn off the bad effects of a sudden cold. If the child shrieks on the sudden motion of the neck, rubs one side of the head or ear especially, or is trying to pull the hair, you may be watchful. If either external canal is smaller than its fellow or unusually pinky or the texture around it appearing more transparent, dropping a teaspoonful of warm water into the ear, holding your hand or some warm cotton over the ear, has quieted many a child; or one drop of oil, or what is better two or three drops of warm arnica tincture, should be used before harsher remedies are resorted to. This thing should be attended too as soon as all or any of those symptoms appear.

If the cold appears at first to settle in the head, there will be pain and tensions over the temple. Rubbing well with lard there as well as across the bridge of the nose, to give greater freedom through that member, has relieved many a little sufferer. The subject is inexhaustible, but if you can attend to those few or many symptoms within the first three days, with curative results, you will find the cold so much dreaded exhausted.

How to Bake Tomatoes.—Take large, smooth tomatoes and cut them round-ways. Take the seed out and fill the vacancies with stuffing same as prepared for fowls, then place them together again, putting them in a pan or dish and bake. When done remove them carefully and you will have something that is nice. Do not peel your tomatoes. [Remarks—Another grand way is to bake the tomatoes whole, having first sprinkled a little flour over them.]

Sweet potato coffee is out. Sweet potatoes, cut into pieces the size of coffee grains, roasted in a slow oven for the same length of time that coffee is, and then mixed with an equal amount of coffee, will, it is asserted, produce a beverage fully as palatable as the genuine article.

A Frequent Trouble with Kerosene Lamps.—The light is often unsatisfactory while all is apparently in good order. It should be borne in mind that though the wick is but very gradually burned, it is constantly becoming less able to conduct the oil. During several weeks some quarts of oil are slowly filtered through the wick, which stops every particle of dust or other matter, which will with the utmost care be in the best kinds of oil. The result is that the wick, though it is of sufficient length and looks as good as ever, has its conducting power greatly impaired, as its pores, so to speak, or the minute channels by which the oil reaches the place to be burned, become gradually obstructed. It is often economy to substitute a new wick for an old one, even if that be plenty long enough to serve for some time to come.—Agriculturist.

Farm and Garden.

How to Get Plenty of Fresh Eggs.

Once, thirty years ago, I was troubled just as my neighbors now are. I fed my hens plenty of corn, and got few eggs. I reasoned upon the matter, and happened to think that the constituent parts of milk and the whites of eggs were much alike. Now, it has been known to milkmen that wheat-middlings and bran are about the best of any feed to make a cow give milk; why not, then the best to make hens lay? I tried it, and have since had no trouble. My mode of preparing the feed is to mix about five parts of bran to one of middlings. In the morning I wet up with water about four quarts of the mixture in a large tin pan, taking pains to have it only slightly damp. This I set in a warm, sunny spot south of the shed, and they walk up, take a few dips (don't seem to fancy it like corn), and start off on a short hunt for something better, but always, coming around in a short time for a few more mouthfuls from the dish of bran. There is little time during the whole day but what one or more are standing by the pan, and likewise helping themselves. I am careful to mix for them just as much as they will consume during the day.

Walking Horses.—A writer in the National Live Stock Journal thus dwells upon the importance of training horses to walk fast:

One of the most desirable and valuable gaits for a horse is a walk, and it should be the aim to first develop this gait in the handling of the colt. The good walker will always make good time on the road when a day's journey is to be made, without wearing himself, while the slow mope must be constantly kept on the trot if time is to be made. A horse that will walk five miles per hour will go as far in a day, confined to this gait, as an ordinary horse can be driven when kept half the time to the trot, and with much greater ease to himself. If one half the pains were taken by farmers' boys to make fast walkers of the youngsters on the farm that is usully taken to make them trot, the result would be much more beneficial, and we would find plenty of teams that could do their five miles an hour with ease. But instead of this, as soon as the colt is bridled, the sole aim of "the boys" is to make a trotter of him and both gaits are spoiled.

Make the colts walk, boys; make them extend themselves in a long, sweeping, square walk, and don't be satisfied with anything less than five miles an hour. When he gets to trotting he will go all the faster for this preliminary training to the walking gait; and if he cannot trot fast enough to beat Dexter or Goldsmith Maid, or Occident, he will have a gait that is invaluable for business purposes. We hope to see more attention paid to fast walking than heretofore, and we respectfully urge upon agricultural societies the importance of offering liberal prizes for walking horses at the fairs for the coming year.

Calves in the Orchard.—Calves do not injure an orchard, but usually improve the fruit by picking up the wormy fruit as soon as it falls and thus destroys the insect eggs. Calves seldom are inclined to knaw the bark or to injure even small trees; they will sometimes rub against the trees but could do no damage unless newly set. —Live Stock Jounal.

In screwing nuts into any part of machinery in cold weather, be careful not to heat them first with the hands, or they will contract after being screwed on tight, and become immovable afterwards.

Cost of Intoxicating Liquors.

In a late issue of our paper, a correspondent called in question the figures of the New York Evening Post on the cost of intoxicating liquors consumed in the United States in the year 1870, The Post put the figures, in round numbers, at $1,487,000,000. The correspondent referred to, puts the estimate less than $300,000,000, and said he could not make it higher! Let us look at this question a moment. The amount of distilled liquors paying revenue to the United States Government, manufactured in 1873, was 71,-151,376 gallons. This is the amount the distillers produced. We had a conversation with a man, a few days since, who had been a large manufacturer of whiskey, and who told us he had made enough whiskey to swim in from Beardstown, Illinois, to St. Louis, Missouri—a distance of one hundred and ten miles. We asked him which made the most whiskey, the distiller or the rectifier. "The rectifier," he replied. We inquired how much more the rectifier made than the distiller. He said the rectifier made three gallons out of one! Now multiply 71,-151,376 by three, and we have, as the amount of the liquors made by the distillers and rectifiers in the United States, in a single year, 213,454,128 gallons! We inquired how many drinks there were in a gallon, and he said about sixty, which retailed at about ten cents a drink; this would make the snug little sum of $1,280,724,606 for whiskey alone, and that of home manufacture. Add to this $276,235,503 gallons of brewed and fermented liquors paying revenue the same year, and retailing by the glass at five cents a drink, and we may add on $200,000,-000 more which makes $1,480,724,-606! Here we have only the liquor manufactured in the country and paying revenue, without taking the vast amount of imported brandies and wines, and the hundreds of millions of gallons of whiskies, brandies and wines made from chemicals, and by adulteration in the wine-cellars of the importers and wholesale dealers. When we take these into account, we may safely set down the cost at $500,000,000. This amount put to the credit of brandies, wines, and adulterated liquors, will more than compensate for any exageration to the estimates on the distilled, brewed, and fermented liquors paying revenue to the Government; so that we are forced to the conclusion that, if anything, the figures of the Evening Post are below, rather than above, the actual cost of intoxicating liquors to the people of the United States annually.

—Western Christian Advocate.

A New Orleans paper tells of a printer, who when his fellow workman went out to drink beer, put in the bank the exact amount he would have spent, if he had gone with them to drink. He then looked at his bank account, and found that he had laid up five hunerad and twenty-one dollars and eighty-six cents. In five years he had not lost a day, because of sickness. Three out of five of his fellow-men had, in the meantime, become drunkards.

The water drinker then bought out the printing-office; and in twenty years from the time he began to put by his money, he had laid aside many thousand dollars. The story teaches a lesson which every little boy and every young man, and every middle-aged man, and every man should lay to heart.

Tobacco.

It is estimated that nearly 300,000-000, or about one fourth of the human race, use tobacco, and it is computed that the whole number of smokers and chewers consume 500,000 tons annually, or 1,000,000,000 pounds weight. The time, labor and money laid out in one way or another for tobacco is enormous; 5,500,000 of acres are cultivated in raising the crop throughout the world. In one great tobacco factory in Spain, 5,000 young girls are employed in a single room. In the city of Hamburg, 12,000 persons, many of them women and children, are engaged in the manufacturer of cigars alone. In this city the number of hands employed in preparing chewing and smoking tobacco, including cigars, is over 5,000. During 1870 there was imported into this country, chiefly from Havana, tobacco to the value of $1,949,-843, while our exportations during the same year amounted to $12,396,150.

The time spent by a single individual in taking chews and lightning and puffing pipes and cigars would, if properly improved, be sufficient to acquire a thorough knowledge of several useful sciences. Multiplying these by the whole number of chews, and it will amount to centuries of time lost in this injurious practice.

In the annual report of the State Alms House, the following item occurs: "Nineteen dollars for tobacco, snuff, and pipes."

Communities are thus taxed to provide tobacco for paupers. It is estimated that the support of ministers in the United States costs $12,000,000 annually, and the use of tobacco, $100,-000,000—nearly seven times as much for tobacco as for preaching the gospel.

At the Acadamy of Science, in Paris, American tobacco was analyzed and found to contain eight per cent. of nicotine, a most deadly poison. It is a fact confirmed by the best authorities, that the oil of tobacco approaches nearer than any other to that most deadly poison—prussic acid.

Recent statistics show that there exist in New York City 8,620 drinking houses, which do an annual business of $33,000,000. This seems incredible, but the statistics are made with "care not to exaggerate." The fact of so many sellers presupposes the other fact of a great many more drinkers. What thousands of drinkers and drunkards there must be when upwards of 8,000 families are supported by the traffic! Nor does this represent all. There are thousands who do not buy at saloons, who yet drink as much as they who do, so that we are overwhelmned in thinking of the waste in the on city for this monstrous curse. But how shall we cure human appetite?

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samnel D. Greene is a vencrablo gentleman of the highest respcctability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal; or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate acconnt, from personal knowledge, of tne Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samnel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The anthor opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, aud of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"Tho Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abdnction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Mnrderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidenco that Freemasons, abdncted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS. in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Note if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & CO., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Commissions.

A friend sends a new subscription and retains the twenty per cent. saying, "You will please excuse me for retaining the commission." No excuse is necessary; we gladly allow the commission as payment of services rendered. When the full amount is sent, and nothing is said about commission, we do not, as a rule, allow any. But we had rather pay it than not to agents who need it, and whose time is money to them.

Please renew your subscription.

Send us a postal card if not prepared to remit or if you wish to have the paper discontinued.

We are intending to secure a good number of able writers for the coming year. We have multitudes of testimony as to the present excellency of our paper, and we are constantly endeavoring to make it more valuable. Will you not enable us to do this by giving the paper your hearty support?

A regiment of subscribers are wanted to re-enlist in the service of opposing secret societies by renewing their subscriptions for the Christian Cynosure during this month. If your time is out in October, will you no ask your neighbors to send for the paper with you, and send on your remittance promptly? If your time is out in November, will you not devote all the time you can spare in canvassing for the Cynosure and then remit one or two weeks before the date on the label of your paper arrives.

We expect more interesting and valuable news of our work this fall and winter than ever before. One year go, Mr. Kiggins was the only State agent in the field, now there are four State agents in the field and other Sates are arranging for them. Wisconsin, Indiana, Ohio, and Missouri have organized State associations within a year. Pennsylvania seems to be preparing to organize one.

The Cynosure assists much in preparing the way for these organizations. It opens the way for lectures and keeps up an interest in the subject after the lectures have been delivered. It strengthens those churches which the lodge is attempting to crush because they hold that Freemasonry and kindred orders are unchristian in their nature and practice.

One year ago the Cynosure was a third smaller than it is now and in a less convenient shape for reading and binding. It is generally conceded to be of fundamental importance to the progress of this reform. Will you not then, give those who issue it weekly, first, your sympathy and your prayers, and secondly, your generous and persevering support?

The Illinois State Anti-secrcy Association held a meeting at Normal, Illinois, in May 1872. It has not met since.

The Secretary of the Association wishes to issue a call for another but desires to know the date at which it will be best to hold it, and the place where it will be best to meet. Chicago has been mentioned as the place and October 28th, 29th as the date. Some think November 5th and 6th would be better. Let us hear from friends interested on this subject. The Cynosure goes to three-fourths of the counties in the State and wherever and whenever the meeting is held, we hope our readers will be sure to have their counties well represented.

Executive Committee Notice—There will be a meeting of the Executive Committee at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A., 148 East Madison St. at 2 o'clock P. M., Saturday, October 10th. All citizens of Chicago, who sympathize with the National Association in its opposition to secret societies, are requested to be present to consider the question of inviting the Illinois State Association to hold a Convention in this city in the month of November. A local committee of arrangements will probably be appointed and other matters of interest be discussed. A full attendance of friends is desired.

Topics of the Time.

POLITICAL CAPITAL.—Some of the Republicans of Indiana are bringing upon themselves lasting disgrace by their use of Southern outrages to hoist themselves into office. A circular has been issued from the Republican State Committee to country editors requesting them to give all possible prominence to these sad stories "until after the election." This is nearly equal to an alliance with murderers. Even could it be proved that the troubles at the South were not greatly due to the provocation of Republican State governments, to thrust them forward for simple electioneering purposes shows the heartlessness begotten of politics.

THE MARQUIS OF RIPON.—The London correspondent of the Advance thinks it difficult to account for the aberrations of the Marquis of Ripon in entering the Romish church. Though never considered of great abilities, this nobleman has vast wealth ($250,000 yearly income), and has occupied an important social and political position. He received his Marquisate as a reward for his services as head of the English delegation to the Joint High Commission to settle the Alabama troubles, which met in Washington in 1871. A great part of said services, by which we are told "he became favorably known to Americans," consisted in hob-nobbing with Freemasons. It is now becoming known that the Marquis was led, from his position as Grand Master of English Masons, to investigate the reasons for the opposition of the Romish church to the order. This examination, it is said, convinced him of the deceptive and infidel character and tendency of Freemasonry. He resolved to abandon the order, and naturally fell off to its antagonist whose counter claims had impressed him. Such examinations with us make Anti-masons of true Gospel stamp.

AN INDEPENDENT PLATFORM.—Gen. Farnsworth, opposition candidate in the Fourth Congressional District of Illinois, in a recent debate with his opponent, General Hurlbut, put forth the following as his platform. After acknowledging the favor of the nominating convention in leaving him free to make his own platform, he said that he was in favor of a tariff for revenue; of Civil Service Reform, from the highest to the lowest office; in favor of the election of Postmasters by the people; was opposed to inflation and in favor of returning to a gold basis; in favor of protecting all the rights of the people, without distinction of race, color, or class; in favor of the State maintaining jurisdiction and all proper control over the railroads and other corporations, and opposed to surrendering that control to the Federal Government. In his remarks on tariff he was opposed to duties on such crude material as salt, pig-iron and lumber, which protect no skilled industry, but only allow portions of the country to become enriched at the expense of the vast agricultural districts. These are the views of a gentleman of experience and ability, and approximate toward the Chicago platform of 1872.

THE SABBATH AT CINCINNATI.—The Chicago Tribune wants the Art Gallery of the Inter-state Exposition opened on the Lord's day because it was successfully done at Cincinnati. It seems, however, that it is far from a success there. Ministerial associations have remonstrated personally and through the press at the desecration; a respectable number of the supporters of the Fair have done the same and will withdraw if it is again allowed; and as for the class of visitors which the misconceived benevolence of the Cincinnati managers and the Tribune would bring in, they nowhere appear. Says the Herald and Presbyter in reply to the Cincinnati Commercial:

"In speaking of the 'thousands of people in Cincinnati who do not attend church,' it says: 'It is better that they should be attracted there than to the hundred and one beer halls which are open to the public on Sunday.' Granted. But those classes which are 'attracted to the beer halls' will go there anyhow, whether Art Hall is opened or closed on the Sabbath; nor will the opening of the Art Hall on that day draw away a single visitor from the beer halls. Its opening has no influence of this kind. If it had the Commercial's argument would have some force, though even in that case we should not favor the opening. But beer hall visitors are not lured away from scenes of dissipation by such means. It is precisely here as with opening public libraries. It was thought that they would attract those who spend Sunday in idleness or in roaming about the streets. But it is found that these are the very persons who are never seen there."

BEECHER AGAIN.—The heavy pressure of public opinion has at length brought the Brooklyn scandal where it should long ago have been taken—into the courts. Mr. Beecher, on his return from the White Mountains last week, appeared before the Grand Jury and demanded the indictment of both Tilton and Moulton for libel. This suit will of course practically annihilate that of Tilton against Beecher now pending, and dwarf those of Miss Proctor against Moulton and the Graphic newspaper. The most eminent counsel are said to be retained on both sides; among them Senators Conkling of New York, and Carpenter of Wisconsin, Ben. Butler, Dudley Field, Wm. M. Evarts and Judge Fullerton. With such managers let us hope that the last of this awful affair will soon be reached.

We can not help but notice with regret, which will be shared by sincere Christians generally, the defiant and worldly spirit shown by Plymouth Church on Mr. Beecher's return. He conducted the usual Friday evening lecture and preached on the Sabbath. The church was gaily adorned with flowers and on both occasions the crowd was much beyond the capacity of the building. A decent respect for the name of religion and the Christian churches of the land would, in the present state of the scandal, have advised less publicity. Mr. Beecher referred to the matter as a discipline from God upon the church, or, as he expressed it, God "has brought you upon the grindstone to sharpen you for the day of battle;" yet upon every hand there was an ovation as of victory. No useful lesson seemed to be gained from the discipline; no humiliation was expressed, if felt; no call to fasting and prayer; but gay receptions, songs, promenades and thundering applause.

Are Secret Combinations Sinful?

BY BISHOP D. EDWARDS.

"Prove to me the sinfulness of secret organizations, and I too will oppose them." These, in substance, were the words of a good minister in Pennsylvania, some months ago. It is an old argument; it always meets us when a darling sin or amusement or popular evil is denounced. "What harm is there in dancing?" asks the votary of pleasure. "Is it a sin to drink a little wine or an occasional glass of something stronger, so a man does not drink to excess?" says the man who is learning to be a drunkard. It has been only a few years since the hated abolishionist had to hear the same question over and over, from ministers and editors, Where does the Bible condemn slavery as a sin? The same persons now, after the whole system has been destroyed, and the entire civilized world shouts approval, admit that it was condemned by the whole spirit of the Bible. The time is not far distant when the conscience of the Christian world will be as united in the condemnation of sworn, combined secrecy.

I now propose to prove the sinfulness of secrecy. Not secrecy in the abstract, nor innocent family privacy, but combined, oath-bound secrecy, such as Freemasonry and other kindred institutions.

1. My first point is the waste of time and money by lodgemen. This may be considered a small matter by some. But the enlightened Christian must see that to throw away time and money is a plain violation of such passages as, "Redeem the time;" "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Many families are robbed of the husband's and father's needed presence, and the money that is needed for food and clothing, to keep up a standing in from one to half a dozen lodges.

2. Intimate fellowship with the wicked is most positively forbidden in the Word of God. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." "Come out from among them, and be separate, saith the Lord." "Ye adulterers and adultresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." Every man who joins and adheres to any of the many worldly societies, now so popular, goes directly against these plain and positive precepts. If such utter and palpable disregard of Bible precepts is not a sin, what is? If a man may deliberately set aside one of the commands because it is popular to do so, why not another—why not all, and still not sin? O ye pleaders for Baal, see what havoc you make of the Word of God and every principle of Bible morality, by following the multitude who pervert or set aside the teachings of the Bible, or by justifying them in it.

3. There is another point, equally clear with the latter, that ought to satisfy any candid mind as to the sinfulness of secret combinations. I refer to their swearing. Our Saviour, in the sermon on the mount, has, in the most positive terms, forbidden all swearing. Suppose we admit that he has reference here to all voluntary swearing, allowing the use of the oath when required by the civil authorities in courts of justice. All other forms of swearing are as absolutely prohibited as lying or stealing. James places wonderful emphasis upon this point. Hear him: "But above all things, my brethern, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by earth, neither by any other oath." It will not answer for the objector to say that these passages refer to vulgar cursing and profanity merely. The context shows that the reference is to just such swearing as is done in the lodge, where they "promise and swear" by the Bible, square, and compasses, to keep the secrets of the lodge and of each other, &c. A dozen men have no a whit more right to go into a secret chamber and swear than the same number, or any number of men, have to swear in the street or bar-room. In either case they go directly across the plain and positive declarations of the Bible. And yet, in the face of all these facts, there are men who plead for the innocency of these swearing, worldly associations—I suppose because they are now popular, and that some respectable men have been caught in them.

4. There is still another passage of Scripture which should not be overlooked. It is this: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Adam Clarke says that this passage referred to the secret societies which existed in those days. Here we are taught to have no fellowship with them. Neither join in with them nor defend them, but reprove them—hold them—hold them up to the light, that others may see their corruption and avoid being taken by snare.

There are many other arguments which might be adduced to proved the sinfulness of the dark orders; but the few points presented above ought to be enough. A prejudice strong enough to set aside two or three plain "thus saith the Lords" would not stagger at fifty. If wasting time and money, if friendship and intimate, yoked fellowship with unbelievers and worldlings, if repeated voluntary swearing, and all these in plain disregard of explicit Bible declarations, does not convince a Christian minister of the sinfulness of secretism, then he ought to be considered a proper subject of prayer, that the grace of God may enlighten him, so that he may set a higher estimate on the teachings of the Word of God, and regulate his conscience accordingly.

My Renunciation and the Result.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

There appeared in the Cynosure of June 4th, 1874, my renunciation and letter of withdrawal from the Masonic lodge; and thinking your readers might like to know the result of my action therein stated, I will inform them of what has transpired since that date.

In the month of June I received the following communication from the secretary of the lodge of which I was a member:

BRANDON, Vt., June 2, 1874.

BRO. SANDERSON:—At a regular communication of St. Paul's Lodge, No. 24, May 27, the following resolution was unanimously passed: "Resolved, That unless Bro. W. H. Sanderson pay his assessments, previous to the next regular communication, June 24th, that he be indefinitely suspended, agreeable to article 18, Sec. 2d, of the by-laws of the Grand Lodge."

Fraternally yours,

JOHN L. KNIGHT, Sec'y.

This, then, is the reply to my communication to the lodge, dated the 25th of last February. It remained with me now to either succumb to the will of the lodge and be false to myself, or to stand firm and show my colors; accordingly, I sent the following letter to the lodge instead of an assessment:

BRANDON, Vt., June 12, 1874.

To the W. M., Wardens and members St. Paul's Lodge, No. 25, F. A. M., State of Vermont:

Several days ago I received a communication from the secretary of the lodge containing the substance of a resolution concerning myself passed May 27th. In replying I will say, I cannot comply with the requirements of the said resolution, as by my letter of 25th of last February I morally and virtually suspended myself from the institution of Masonry; therefore, if I should pay the tax referred to, I should really "go back" on my own words and action in regard to my connection with the lodge, and recognize myself as still a Mason and hold myself liable to any other tax which might be levied on the members of the order or lodge. Therefore, as I have said, I cannot comply with the requirements of the resolution.

It matters but little to me what the lodge does in my case, as I said in my letter of the 25th of February. I leave the institution of Masonry upon the same principle I entered it nine years ago—"of my own free will and accord." I cannot then give my substantial support to an institution which I cannot support morally. You may ask, What are my objections to Masonry? Of course we must judge everything of man's work by its appearance and precepts, and lastly, by its truth and fruit; and on this principle I judge of Masonry; and I find nothing in its appearance or of its truth or fruit which I can support in the spirit of it. But you may say that the holy Bible is one of the great lights of Masonry. That statement I must dispute, as Masonry is the same the world over, and it so happens that the Bible is a bait to be used only in Christian countries; but it changes not Masonry itself, which is a relic of the heathen mysteries of the Middle Ages and earlier times, the very institutions which were condemned by Christ and his disciples.

Again, you may say, it is a Christian institution, a hand-maid of religion," yea—a religion of itself, as Albert G. Mackey says, "The religion, then, of Masonry, is pure theism, on which its different members engraft their own peculiar opinions; but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge or to connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry." (See Mackey's Masonic, Lexicon, page 404, "Religion.") This, then, with the oaths of Masonry, cannot be reconciled to my mind, with the only real religion, which is of Jesus Christ our Lord, whom Masonry rejects entirely. Therefore it is a false religion. This is distinctly stated in Acts iv. 10–12.

These are some of the reasons why I renounce Masonry; but there are many others. To sum up: the character of Masonry is unchristian, its government is despotic; deceptive in its pretentions to antiquity; its ritual and ceremonies a mockery; its titles blasphemous; and its oaths unreasonable and directly antagonistic to the law of which Christ came into the world to fulfil. (Lev. v. 4,5.)

I thus renounce the institution, not in a moment of excitement, but by months of study and thought on the subject. I profess to be a Christian and I try to live up to my profession, although I am like all mankind, weak, and require the strength of an Almighty hand to keep me steadfast.

I will say in conclusion, that my feelings are against Masonry and not the individual members of any lodge. Some of my best friends are members of the order, and I think none the less of them for differing with me in judgment and opinion if they are honest in their convictions.

Respectfully yours,

WM. H. SANDERSON.

I now consider myself clear of the lodge, although according to Masonic law I can still be dealt with in the secret tribunal by being expelled from the order; or to be, Masonically speaking, "dead." I expect that Masons will do all in their power to injure me if possible. But by the continual holding to the light the evil and nonsense of the diabolical institution, we hope to inform people of our State of the danger which is lurking in every nook and corner of church and civil government. There are a few earnest Anti-masons in Vermont, and before spring or the next annual meeting of the N. C. A. we hope to get a permanent foothold. There is great need of reform in all of the churches of Vermont. Many of them are being ruled by anything but a Christian spirit. I many towns, if the minister of the Gospel preaches boldly against evils of the community and sins of the church, calling things by their right name, he is a marked man; sooner or later he has to resign, or is requested to do so. Can the churches prosper in this way? May the Lord speed the day when nothing shall be covered, and the wolf be in his natural clothing, that he may be known.

W. H. S.

Our Relations to the Grangers.

From the "Lutheran Standard."

As the grangers are making considerable trouble in some of our congregations, it might be well to publish the following in the Standard. It is translated from the Ev. Lutheran Kirketidende.

Several applications concerning the grangers have been made to me, partly by ministers and partly by members of congregations. I have therefore deemed it best to answer publicly in our "Kirketidende."

I have had opportunity to make myself acquainted with the constitution of the grangers, with the Monitor and Manual, and several other documents from their last National Convention at St. Louis Having tested the contents of these in accordance with the Word of God, I have been fully convinced that no Christian can join or remain a member of this society without making himself guilty of denying Christ and other great sins, although they be of infirmity. The grangers are a secret society, in which the person joining takes obligations on himself by oath, which he does not understand. They have religious ceremonies and religious tendencies; in consenting to these or participating in them the members promote gross errors and take the name of God in vain. In being silent and not confessing against them, they make themselves co-partners in the sins of others and deny their Christian faith. Matt. xix. 32. 23. In joining such a society with heathens and Jews, and praying in common with them, they deny their Saviour and yoke themselves unequally together with unbelievers. Comp. 2. Cor. vi. 14. &c.; Ps. 1. Finally they present the appearance of evil and offend their fellow believers. 1 Thess. iv. 22; Matt. xviii. 6,7.

I see in the establishment and effusion of this society a deceit of the devil, especially to entrap our country-people into the net of secret societies, from which they hitherto, by the grace of God, have in general been preserved. I regard it the more a duty on our part, ministers as well as members of congregations, to oppose this society with all earnestness, with instruction, with admonition, and with reproof, in order that this dangerous poison may not be spread around and totally destroy our congregations. If we, on account of not being sufficiently posted respecting the nature of this society, regard it as a Christian right and consider it as a matter of indifference to join it, then we have opened the door to our congregations for all kinds of secret societies, and must give up contending against them. Every one of us should therefore make himself acquainted with the nature of this society, for which our "Kirketidende," by its reliable information, gives us the desired opportunity.

The grangers seek not only to keep outsiders, but also members of their own society in ignorance of a great deal which shows the real nature of this society. Yea, in some places, they make exceptions to the rule and offer concessions to Christians, so as to entrap the laity and less posted so much the more easily. We should treat with mildness and wisdom members that have joined on account of complete ignorance of the nature of the society, because of the earnestness which the case demands. We should in private conversations, patiently seek to instruct and convince them. Their participation in the communion should be suspended until we have obtained sufficient opportunity to treat with them and to judge whether it is unacquaintance with the nature of the society, or deficiency of Christian knowledge, or carelessness, or unbelief that is the cause of their joining them and continuing in them. In the latter case suspension from the congregation must follow as a consequence. In the former case, either an extended suspension from the communion or a provisional admission thereto will be advisable,—according to the degree of the Christian knowledge and to the spiritual condition of the one concerned.

Where the grangers have not yet made their appearance, there they should be guarded and admonished against, so that no one, on account of deficiency in knowledge of them, may be deceived. The consequence is in the hand of God; but then we need not accuse ourselves that any one has been entrapped into the suspended net by our negligence. We can also be assured that our testimony shall not be in vain. Even if some should not receive, but reject it, yet it will be testimony against them on the day of judgment.

May the Lord also bless this witness and conflict of ours! May he preserve our dear congregation from the deceit and fraud of the devil! May he support our souls in the right faith into life everlasting for Christ's sake! Amen. H. A. Preus.

To Christian Voters.

1. Take part in political action. Because your citizenship is in heaven your obligation to your country is not diminished. It is rather increased. Politics may have fearfully degenerated. So much the more need that they be reformed. But this reform will not come through mass-meetings and high sounding resolutions. It will come through the individual efforts of good citizens. You may not be a manipulator of the political wires, but you can do your part to influence the opinions of your fellow-men into the right directions. You can frown upon dishonesty and low trickery. You can exert yourself to secure the right men as candidates for office.

2. Use your influence as a distinctively Christian man. Take your religion into your politics. Govern your political conduct not by motives of party expediency, but by the everlasting principles of right. If there is anything among us that needs the beneficial efforts of the Christian religion it is our politics. This influence can be brought to bear only through Christian men bringing their religion with them into the political arena. Political concernments are not so trifling that religion may not come down to leaven them.

3. As one of the most practical methods of doing your duty in political matters, satisfy yourself as to the moral character of all candidates for public office. The cases are rare in which a Christian must allow himself to vote for a bad man. The principle of voting only for good men though difficult to carry out is a true principle nevertheless, admitting but few exceptions. If you do not know anything about the character of a candidate seek knowledge on the subject. Do not be willing to vote in the dark. Politicians would soon learn, were Christian men determinedly to take this course, to have an eye to character in their nominations for office. Bad men can hardly fail to make bad laws, or to open themselves to corruption in the administration of office. So far as your vote goes to place them in their position you become a partaker of their sins.

4. Pray for your country, for her lawgivers, and rulers and judges. Ask that the Spirit of God will teach her senators wisdom. Ask that the selfish plots of wicked men may come to naught. Ask that the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord may permeate all this people. Do not forget your land at the mercy-seat.

Have the secret alliances any right to claim Luke xvi. 9, in support of their organizations? Have they any right to refer to Jesus as a patron of secrecy?. S. H.

The passage has no more reference to secret societies than it has to breeding poultry for a city market. The fact that any should cite it in support of such alliances, shows how hard pushed they are for Scripture authority. The text does not teach us to court the friendship of the world—which is "enmity to God"—nor to enter into close relations with the wicked by mystic ties of oath-bound secrecy, If it did, it would fly in the face of the plainest precepts requiring us to "come out from among them and be separate." It simply teaches us to make a faithful use of the money or "mammon of unrighteousness" committed to our trust, so that, in the day of the Lord, those who shall have been saved through our benevolent activity may welcome us as the instruments of their eternal deliverance. How can any have the temerity to connect the sacred name of Jesus with the darkness of midnight conclaves? His principles were so pure that they needed no curtains of concealment. He could testify, "In secret have I said nothing." Let us never be identified with a cause that cannot bear, and does not welcome, the severest scrutiny.—Bible Banner.

The Holy Sabbath Day.

How persistently and insidiously the enemy of church and state is at work to destroy our American Sabbath. On a Sunday evening not long ago, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, Lawyer O'Gorman, of New York, delivered a lecture on Burke, while the Mercantile Library Association of the same city, and just opposite the Academy, was thrown open to the use of the members. There are other classes who think that the beer gardens and billiard rooms are harmless places in which to spend the Sabbath day. Whenever any opposition is shown by the pulpits or the religious press to these forbidden and unholy Sabbath amusements, the cry of bigotry is at once raised. In all periods of the world crosses have had to be borne by the children of God, and in no age more than the present. It is singular to think how many soldiers of the Cross fly before the accusation of bigotry. When the devil and his hosts quote the Golden Rule and talk of toleration, instantly our tongues cleave to the roofs of our mouths and our arms become paralyzed. This is our reproach and shame. Many a battle has been lost by this cowardice on the part of those who honor the Sabbath and obey God.

Serious encroachments are also being made on the Sabbath day under the pretense of holding sacred concerts, at which nothing holy appears but the name. The music and the proceedings at these places are gradually undermining the santity of the Sabbath day. Easy-going and ungodly officials are more than ready to construct statutes liberally for the benefit of sinners. Years ago we were horrified at the way the Sabbath was spent in New Orleans and Paris, but now we are upsides with the wickedest cities of the world, and foremost in dishonoring the fourth commandment.

All this is the work of a minority of the people. In the Mercantile Library of Brooklyn there are three thousand subscribers. This institution has been open on Sundays for nearly a year. Our readers will be surprised, and also somewhat pleased, to learn that only about two per cent. of the members go near the rooms on the first day of the week. This is somewhat creditable to the City of Churches, but it would be infinitely more creditable if the sentiment in favor of the Sabbath was so strong as to peremptorily turn the key against those fifty or sixty unbelievers who claim the right to throw open the doors of the institution against the large marjority who are too indolent or passive to learn their duty or perform it. Is it not a sorrowful thought that reverence for the Sabbath day is gradually diminishing. What it is to be in the spirit we know not. Our pulpits are not guiltless in this matter. The danger, if perceived, is unheeded. The infidel German, the dancing Frenchman and the jolly Irishman are subverting our institutions. Those natives who revere the memory of Theodore Parker and go occasionally to hear the twaddle of Frothingnam are their co-operators. A busy and energetic party, they always combine to injure evangelical religion. We had better do something before they effect complete ruin. Lectures on Burke will be followed in a few years by Tyndall and Porteous lectures on science, wit and agriculture. Already the time is anticipated when the theaters will all be open for the gratification and amusement of those who are too poor to take pews in the churches but rich enough to spend double the money on Satanic pastimes.

Our forefathers used to think that a Sabbath day well kept assured a week of prosperity and contentment. This the world now calls inexcusable superstition, although thousands of families in Christian lands know better than they know anything else that in the keeping of God's laws there is great reward. The reward is itself untold wealth. Are we warranted in enquiring whether the deplorable condition of public affairs, the individual frauds and public corruption which stare us at every point have any connection with the Sabbath dishonored? How many politicians in these cities—at Albany or Washington—reverence the Sabbath and read their Bibles? It is said, only forty out of the whole number; and what are they among so many?—N. Y. Witness.

Art and the Sabbath.

The opening of the Art Department at the Cincinnati Exposition has called out frequent and strong remonstrances from the ministerial associations and the press of that city, but without the desired effect of closing the hall on the Lord's day. The discussion will no doubt result indirectly in good. The Daily Gazette of that city says:

"The opening of the Art Department of the Exposition on Sunday is to be objected to chiefly because it will be construed as a movement against the observance of the Sabbath. The suggestion that the laboring people would visit the gallery on that day who could not spare time during the other days of the week proves to have been based upon a mistaken idea. If there was anything in the suggestion it would be an argument in favor of opening the entire Exposition on Sunday, but there is, as we have said, nothing in it. Those who visit the Exposition on Sunday are not the laboring people, but well-to-do classes, who could go on any other days of the week just as well.

"It may as well be understood that an effort is being made to destroy the American Sabbath and substitute for it a French Sabbath, and that movement is chiefly in the interest of those who seek to make money on that day. The Commissioners made a mistake in yielding to the demand, and now that it has been shown that the talk about laboring people is a sham they should reconsider their action.

The German papers, from the oldest to the youngest, unite in reviling those who oppose the opening of the Art Gallery on Sunday. This was to be expected. The clap-trap arguments they use were also to be expected. We do not see that they are entitled to any weight. The simple fact is that the conscience of no one can be offended by keeping the Art Gallery closed on Sunday. The conscience of many is offended by allowing it to be open. Those who are thus offended are among the men who have been the most cordial and earnest supporters of the Exposition. They have subscribed to its guarantee fund, and have been exhibitors, year after year. As a matter of expediency, simply, there is but one course the Exbosition Commissioners can safely pursue. Leaving all questions of right out of view, listening to the dictates of the German papers will be disastrous. Four years the Exposition has been run, six days in the week only. Every class of our citizens has supported it heartily. Let us stick to the old and approved plan."

The form of a protest, which is being circulated for signatures from exhibitors and guarantors, is as follows:

We, the undersigned, either exhibitors in the Cincinnati Exposition, or contributors to the guarantee fund, express our sincere regret that the Commissioners have thrown open the Art Department on the Sabbath, in opposition to the Christian sentiment of a large numbers of its supporters. We are satisfied that such action is deleterious to the best interests of our City and State, and will inevitably tend to withdraw sympathy and support from the Exposition. Nor can we conscientiously give further aid to the enterprise, if such violation of the Sabbath continues to be associated with its management."

—Truth is always consistent with itself and needs nothing to help it out; it is always near at hand, sits upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware; a lie is troublesome, and sets a man's invention upon the rack, and one trick needs a great many more to make it good. It is like building upon a false foundation, which continually stands in need of props to shore it up, and proves at last more chargeable than to have raised a substantial building at first upon a true and solid foundation.—Addison.

—The Association lately organized at Groton, N. Y., holds a meeting at McLean on Wednesday, Oct. 14.

Grand Rally at Noblesville, Ind., Oct. 10, 1874.

The friends of free discussion and political reform, who are opposed to cliques and secret rings in church and state, and who believe that our country should be officered by men untrammeled by the oaths of Freemasonry or any kindred order, will meet in mass convention in the court-house at 10 o'clock, A. M., to listen to addresses by J. P. Stoddard and others, and to transact such business as may be necessary to promote the interests of our much needed reform.

La Salle County Anti-masonic Convention.

We, the undersigned citizens of La Salle county, Illinois, believing that secret societies, and especially those bound by oath, are contrary to the principles of Christianity and subversive of republican equality, and believing that the time has come when there should be an earnest and united effort to resist their influence both in the church and state, do hereby call a convention of all those opposed to the secret orders, to meet in the court-house at Ottawa, on Thursday, Oct. 29th, 1874, at 10 A. M., to take such measures as are calculated to promote this object and to transact such other business as may come before the convention. Signed,

Daniel Brown, Flavel Bascom, J. Stout.	Ottawa.

Reform News.

From the General Agent.—Working in New Fields in Indiana.

YELLOW LAKE, Ind., Sept. 25, 1874.

DEAR K:—This P. M., at Roann, Wabash Co., completes my labors for the present in this part of Indiana. The ten meetings which I have held in this region during the last nine days have been well attended and most of them enthusiastic. Our meeting last evening was large and attended with marked interest and good order. Many threats had been made by the fraternities and some of the brethren were apprehensive of trouble, but their fears proved groundless, at least so far as any violence to myself was concerned. Some were a little disheartened and awed by the presence of so many of the boastful craft, and advised a retreat across the meadow and a by-path out of the neighborhood; while others, knowing the right, dare maintain it, and with these I preferred to stand or fall at my post. With a few of these dauntless, noble men and women near, I passed out of the house and getting into the wagon with brethren Cox and Adams, we drove homeward unmolested. As we passed out, expressions like these could be heard, "If you egg him it will be the dearest job you ever undertook," etc. An unsuccessful effort was made to obtain possession of my chart, which is a special object of dislike to the "fraternities."

These are the first lectures delivered in this region in the interests of our reform, and Masons, Odd-fellows and grangers assume that with their sympathizers they have a monopoly and free speech must not be tolerated. It is hard to bring all under this yoke of bondage, for some will speak their sentiments.

On Wednesday, the 23d inst., I attended a meeting of our German Baptist brethren, near North Manchester, and by permission, spoke a few moments of our work, introducing Bro. Ulsh as agent for our paper and publications. Bro. U. sold nineteen books and obtained one subscriber for the Cynosure. The audience was estimated at from fifteen hundred to two thousand persons, and I have never looked upon a firmer, more robust congregation of men and women than were gathered in that assembly. The preaching in English was plain and eminently practical. That in German I could not understand. One spirit prevaded the meeting and the whole congregation were invited to a substantial meal. With many cordial hand shakes and earnest "God bless and prosper you" I left for my evening meeting being greatly comforted by the brethren. One ministerial brother called to us after we had proceeded some distance and coming up, after expressions of warmest sympathy and inquiries how I was sustained, made a very timely donation to aid in spreading the light. The ground is fairly broken in this region and friends of our cause are looking, praying and laboring, hopefully, in the good work.

As ever yours, J. P. STODDARD.

From Bro. Caldwell.—His Work in Pennsylvania.

CAREY, O., Sept. 23, 1874.

BRO. KELLOGG:—I only returned from Pennsylvania after an absence of nearly five weeks in time to attend our Annual Conference (Sandusky), which convened at Westerville, O., on the 16th inst., and adjourned on the 20th, after a session of five days. You will see from the foregoing statement that my time was all occupied, and this is the excuse I offer for not having written sooner respecting my tour to Pennsylvania. The programme for this series of lectures, had been previously arranged by Bro. Stoddard for himself, but circumstances unavoidable prevented his going; and at his solicitation I consented to go on a very brief notice, and without any previous preparation. Upon the whole I enjoyed it pretty well, meeting with just opposition enough to make the visit interesting. During my absence I preached and lectured thirty times, generally to good audiences, and with good attention. That my efforts, though feeble, were appreciated, is inferable from the fact that almost universally the desire was expressed for more, which I could not give and fulfil the previous arrangement. The appointments were arranged for but one lecture at a place, with several exceptions, but at no place over two. I gave three lectures, however, at a place called Dimond, in Venango Co., Pa., the circumstances indicating it proper to do so. Among my auditors at this place was a minister who is familiarly called Elder Wright of the Wesleyan connection, and who has been a Mason for a number of years according to report. After the lectures were over Squire Proper, who also attended the lectures, said to the Elder the last evening just before they parted at his yard gate, "Well, Elder, I suppose if I understood Masonry as well as you do, I would know whether that man told the truth or not." To which the Squire says the Elder replied, "Well, Squire, what he said about Masonry was as straight as a string, and so far as my experience goes it corroborates every word that he said;" and further added that he was done with Masonry. Now here is evidence that our labor in this department is productive of good, even among those who have been adhering Masons; for it is evident that the very things I told him he knew before, but never had expressed himself in this way. So that by giving "line upon line and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little," honest men may be persuaded to forsake the unclean thing and give their testimony and influence against the unfruitful works of darkness. I gave one lecture at Willis's School-house, Crawford Co., at which a Mason was present from Mill Village and staid all night where I did. On the evening of the lecture when introduced to him he gave me the Master Mason's grip which I did not return; on the next morning he followed me out to the buggy; when about to start, I there reminded him of having given me the grip, and asked him if he was not a Mason. He said that he had belonged to a number of secret societies, and that he had taken three degrees in Masonry, and was recognized as a Mason by the fraternity, but said there was nothing good in the order, but much evil, and said he recognized the work I was engaged in as a most laudable, yet a dangerous work, wishing God speed in my efforts, stating that he did not deem it safe for him to go any farther at present, and intimated that he wished me not to expose him to the public. I therefore deem it prudent to withhold the name of this person. He also admitted that we have what they call the secrets of Masonry, and what I said of the first three degrees was strictly true.

At my Linesville lecture I had quite a sprinkling of the craft out to hear me. I could see during my remarks that it did not go down well with some, and I learned afterward that these uneasy ones were Masons; and that one of the craft charged me with lying. I stated in my introduction that I was no Mason, neither had I ever been one. This was the particular in which I was charged with lying; the Mason referred to said that I lied in my very introduction in saying I was no Mason, for he said no man could tell as much about Masonry as I did if he had not been one. So you see that Masons in their rage frequently injure their own cause, and build up ours, as was the case in this instance, he bearing witness to the truth of what I said. The charge of lying was not for misrepresenting Masonry, but for saying that I was no Mason and never had been. So that what I said about Masonry was true according to the admisson, whether what I said in regard to being a Mason was true or false.

INDICATIONS OF A CHANGE IN PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

The Masons of north-western Pennsylvania have introduced a feature of life insurance into their order, doubtless with a view of making it more attractive, and of overcoming the prejudices of many who are opposed to secrecy, by the consideration of mutual financial aid after the plan of mutual life insurance companies. The late legislation of Pennsylvania invests the judges of the courts with the prerogative of granting charters in such cases. Accordingly, the officers of the Masonic relief incorporation of north-western Pennsylvania, applied to Judge W. H. Lourey, of Meadville, Crawford Co., Pa., for such a charter; whereupon the judge refused to grant such charter, and the Masons are feeling quite blue over the matter, and it is believed that the refusal is the legitimate result of the anti-secrecy movement in this part of the State. Right upon the heels of that refusal the friends of anti-secrecy met on the 7th of August in the court-house in Meadville and organized an anti-secrecy county association, auxiliary to the National Christian Association, also adopted a political platform and nominated a full ticket of county officers to be voted for at the fall election.

OFFICERS OF THE COUNTY ASSOCIATION:

L. Ketchum, President; R. Shaw, O. A. Chapin, John Splitstone, Wm. R. King, M. Childs, R. McKay and Isaac Brooks, Vice presidents; D. W. Elderkin, Corresponding Secretary; S. Murdock, Recording Secretary; John True, Treasurer. The political action resulted in the nomination of the following named persons as candidates for the several offices with which their names stand connected: Rev. H. H. Hervey for Congress; Adams Davis, Joseph Derickson, Henry Hempy and George Chase for Assemblymen; Wm. Roszell for Commissioner; Wm. McArthur, Auditor. These candidates are all said to be men of good character, and true to the principles of anti-secrecy, and it is believed that some will have a fair chance to be elected.

In conclusion I would give it as my judgment that it is only necessary to give the people of Pennsylvanian a fair showing of the iniquity of secret orders, in order to rouse the latent element already existing there, and to place in offices of trust such men as shall be an honor to the positions they hold, and a terror to evil-doers. They are already conscious of great oppression, through the lack of proper legislation in their State, but many have not had their attention sufficiently directed to the fact that the source of their trouble is traceable directly to the dark orders which are sworn to promote the financial and political elevation of their mutually sworn allies, though it be sure death to civil liberties and the ruin of civil government. Many are pining for deliverance, yet they are scarcely half conscious of what ails them and know not what course to adopt that will best remedy the evil. They need more lectures, and a continual stream of anti-secrecy light poured in upon them, until their whole being is full of light, and then they will talk right, pray right, and vote right. Then will usurpers be hurled from undeserved power, and true men, men of integrity, will fill the places now occupied by them. So mote it be.

D. S. CALDWELL.

Correspondence.

Rev. D. P. Rathbun.

Your correspondent had the pleasure of listening to Mr. Rathbun at the session of the Michigan Conference of the Free Methodist church, held at Coopersville, Mich., a short time since. The three attempts upon his life by Masonry, the last within a few weeks, have excited quite a degree of interest in him, and perhaps your readers would like his portrait.

APPEARANCE.

He is a man of medium hight, prodigious cheek bones, large development of the perceptive faculties, high but not great breadth of forehead, heavy lips, short chin, dark hair, and sunburnt complexion. His face is at once peculiar and indicating great force of character. His voice is clear and strong, and his enunciation good. He secures and holds attention from the beginning. His thoughts, on the whole, are clear and terse, his periods sometimes rounding with tremenduous force.

THE LECTURE.

He spoke upon Masonry; its relations to Christianity, and Free Government. The lecture consisted of the arrangement of testimony from Masonic authorities, and the examination of phrazeology, and therefore was not so well calculated to display the powers of the man. I would like to give a synopsis of it, if it were not probable that he may wish to deliver it again. His style is of the Western stump stamp of oratory. From the first you are impressed with the thought that he is not to be trifled with,—that he is acting from high conscientious motives, and is not to be turned aside from his purpose. He is doubtless not at all dangerous as a Christian, but if he backslides, look out! He can take care of himself. Of his bravery there can be no doubt. He is already facing danger and death. His wisdom in bearing so hard upon motives, might be questioned. The denunciations of Masons as a class, and especially those who claim to be Christians, in which he indulges, might be pruned from his lectures with good effect. The experiences of seceding Masons, as a rule, teaches that he takes time and much reflection with much of the Holy Spirit's influence to be able to arise and shake off the chains that bind them. His own experience even, to which he alluded, illustrates this. Human nature is apt to forget the struggle and pain with which it secures its own freedom, in its efforts to liberate others, yet Mr. Rathbun has seen enough of the spirit and principles of Masonry to enable him to judge better than we who have never been there. But this question of conscience and the best manner of presenting it is worthy of careful consideration by those who speak upon the subject of secret societies.

I have been thus explicit in speaking of Mr. Rathbun, because the question has been raised as to whether he unnecessarily provokes men or not.

A Discussion and Victory in a Free-Will Baptist Conference.

HARRISON, Maine, Sept. 21, 1874.

In want to say to the brethren of the Christian Association and of the Free-Will Baptist denomination of Vermont, that our cause has achieved a victory in our last yearly conference, held at East Topsham, September 9th and 10th. A resolution was presented and read before the conference. At first there was a motion to lay on the table which was declared carried, but was disputed, and finally a vote to adopt passed, and it was placed before the conference for action. First, the Masons must declare their views of the resolution, and we thought they were determined to take up all the time. As soon as we began to tell what Masonry was and of the oaths and penalties, and presented a book to read, they interfered in some way, got a motion passed to stop the reading. One young preacher who joined the Masons at Strafford some few years since, and took one degree, but as the church objected he promised to go no further; but went into another State and went up higher, he now made quite a display in favor of Masonry and no one forbade him. A goodly number spoke against the institution. Dr. Graham, from Hillsdale College, Mich., spoke against the lodge, because it brought on trouble between brethren, and divided churches. The resolution was then given into the hands of a committee of three. They reported the next day, and quoted the passage of Scripture—"If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no more flesh while as the world standeth;" advising the brethren not to unite with the lodge.

Brethren in Vermont take courage and do not fear. The victory is ours if we put forth moral courage, and we shall see this Goliath of Gath fall.

I would say to the brethren in Vermont, that I am now in Maine and shall in about two weeks be in Vermont at Bartonville.

ELDER J. JACKSON.

The Xenia (Ind.) Difficulty.

[The following letter is published that both parties in the question may be heard. Bro. Darby, who is so sharply noticed, is an old and zealous supporter of our reform; of Elder Evans we know nothing aside from this correspondence. Neither of the letters place him in a very graceful or gracious light; but the original cause of difficulty may be of much less moment than appears.—ED.]

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I see in Sept. 3d an article in your paper casting reflections on the trustees of the U. B. church at Xenia—and myself as elder on the Marion District. The facts are these. The man referred to as being made trustee never accepted the position, and the elder made this statement at the time, that it was not in keeping with the usages of this church, that persons belonging to secret orders be made officers in this church. The Discipline of the church allows them to elect a trustee that is not a member of any church. But this same man gave $18 to the church, his wife being a member, and showed more of the spirit of Christ than your informant, for he left the Sabbath-school and his class the day of dedication and gave $3 toward fixing the church. There is no church that he can join, they are all too bad as he is too good. Next, he says the anti-secret society was turned out of its home. The society was not started as a political organization, and the brethren thought as they were going to a great expense to repair the house that it had assumed a political form, and they wanted no political conventions in the house, and as far as the lecturer is concerned that depends on his ability as a defender of the principles of the church. I did say that some anti-secret society men were doing more harm than good, and that Xenia is a standing argument of that fact. If the course recommended by our friend is true, why is the place under control of these orders with such champions as Darby and others to defend the anti-secrecy movement. So far as the selling out to these societies is concerned I disregard statements of no importance coming from such quarters.

A Severe Experience.

Dear Christian Brethren of the Baptist church and of every name and order:

About six years ago I joined the order of Freemasons, and that to my hurt. I soon found that it was an institution to which Christians should not belong. It is bad enough for the wicked to form themselves into secret clans for the sake of advantage; but when the righteous join them in this, the sin is more than doubled. It is bad enough for the wicked to engage in mock worship and to show their total disregard of God's Holy Word and blessed will, leaving out the name of Christ in all their devotions; but when Christians join them in this and become one with them in such measures of hidden wickedness, how awful—O, how awful it must be in the sight of God! No wonder the church of Christ does not prosper more. It never can while it is accessory to such high-handed wickedness as Freemasonry.

Some of those said to be foremost preachers and many professors of religion of my acquaintance seemed to think well of Masonry; and their good report of it lead me to form a favorable opinion and to consent to join the order. A thought here that all would do well to remember. To engage in any thing or join any institution that we can know but little about until after we get into it is contrary to the Bible, for it says, "Ponder the path of thy feet, look well to thy going." But I was made to feel and to see something for my joining Masonry more dreadful than for a man to have his throat cut or to endure any other kind of death. I was made to feel the deep strokes of conscience and to see apparently, the frowns of a sin-avenging God upon me. I was apparently forsaken of my Saviour.

Just how long I remained in this condition I do not remember. But, be that as it may, having been engaged in prayer to God, during this time of depression, for his mercy in the forgiveness of my sin, at length it pleased him to withdraw the chastening rod and to smile upon me, to shed abroad his love in my heart, and to make me feel the evidence of salvation. I was again made happy and rejoiced greatly in hope of the glory of God. But still I felt that I was bound up to an evil that I could see no chance of escaping. From that time until very recently it has been an entanglement, a stumbling block, and the worst besetment of my life. Not being sufficiently enlightened upon the subject of God's holy, eternal and pre-existing law, I always felt bound by Masonic law never to speak disrespectfully of that institution. So frequently while in conversation about it with others, I have had to speak about it in a way contrary to my conscience. In this it has been to me an entanglement indeed. I could view Masonry in no other light only as an evil and as a snare, and yet I dare not warn others of their danger of falling therein. This made it a stumbling-block to me; and besides, its obstructing the course of justice, setting the guilty free, giving advantages to members over the balance of mankind, and its lifeless, graceless, Christless mock worship were truly besetting.

But thanks be to God, he has provided a way of escape from the most miserable snare of Freemasonry, into which many of his people have fallen. I have endeavored to make my escape by that way. If you wish to find it go to Leviticus, v. 4, 5, and mark also the whole tenor of the Bible. I say that I have made my escape by using the liberty that God gave me. But Masons say that is more liberty than I ought to take. They don't say it in these words, but they do say they would have just quit and have said nothing about it. Besides I understand they have been overheard to swear vengeance against me, and they even acknowledge to my face that my life is in danger. Why is it in danger? For doing nothing but my duty. They promised me this liberty before I joined them, but now they refuse it, from the fact that my duty leads me, and has led me, to denounce Masonry as an evil. The goodness of Masonry must not be questioned. It must be better than the church. Masonry must not be spoken against let it be good or bad. But there is one thing I want them all to remember, and that is that so far as matters of conscience and religious duties are concerned I do not stand on the smiles nor the frowns of men. I have gone into the last secret institution I ever expect to. I do not think there is any thing ennobling to humanity that will not bear the inspection of the public eye; but this Masonry will not do.

And now, my Christian brethren in the lodge, I call upon you to hear the word of the Lord. Remember they that hear shall live. God calls upon you in his Word to come out from among the wicked; to be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; be not conformed to this world; have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. Christians are commanded to let their light shine. The interest of our race requires us to let it shine. Every noble principle says, Let it shine, and if Christ himself says, Let it shine, why not do so. So long, my brethren, as you stay in the dark your deeds will be suspected that they are evil. Men can see no good reason why a good thing should be kept hid. I believe Masonry to be the man of sin which the Apostle said should be revealed. May the happy time roll on when the church of Christ may be entirely disconnected from all man-made institutions.

OUR MAIL.

E. G. Cooper, Sampson Creek, Mo., writes:

"I have been some time without your paper. I changed to the Methodist Free Press when it started, but now must have both. I belong to the Anti-secret corps. . . . The hoodwink is being raised from their eyes in this section, so that some of the blinded begin to see men as trees walking. I have frequently taken off some of its false covering, when in the pulpit, showing the antagonism of Masonry to the religion of the Bible. This raises a growl among the clerical brethren who are in fellowship with these rotten orders. Certainly the stone (of Truth) is falling, and some men will be ground to powder. I find the truths of the Bible all-sufficient yet to overthrow even the wisdom of the nineteenth century, though the walls that protect it are more stubborn than those of Jerico; yet vast breaches have been made in its towering walls, its gigantic ruins will soon only remain to tell of the magnitude of the work accomplished."

H. C. Stoughton, Duncan, Ill., writes:

"Times are somewhat hard, but the greatest fault is in the blindness of the people."

Robert M. Huston, Irvington, Ill., writes:

"I am the only one in this neighborhood who dares to declare his sentiments on secretism. There are a good many who are as decidedly opposed to it as I am, but popularity or self-interest hold them still."

J. P. Johnson, College Springs, Iowa, writes:

"I have been reading the Cynosure for the year past and I like it very much. I feel as though I could not do without it. It is the best paper that I can get hold of. I think it is just what the people all need to stir them up."

Thomas E. Turner, Kirk's Cross Roads, Ind., writes:

"There are some very warm advocates of the Anti-secret movement here, but the Masons and Odd-fellows are putting forth their greatest efforts to build up themselves."

Mrs. Laura Darbee, West Falls, N. Y., writes:

"There are so many Masons, or those who apologise for them, that I do not know as I can get any subscribers; but I will try again. . . I wish some one could come and lecture here, I think it would do a great deal of good."

Can Mr. Barlow send a lecturer to this field or go himself? Perhaps he would like to correspond with Rev. J. C. White, Mr. H. Fields or Mrs. Darbee on the subject. The address of each of these is West Falls, N. Y.

Rev. J. M. Snyder, Kishwaukee, Ill., writes:

"I wish I could send a thousand new subscribers."

We are glad to hear from this brother again, and hope he may live to accomplish his wish. What part of the thousand will you send this year?

Geo. W. Merritt, Forestville, N. Y., writes:

"I take five different papers. Cannot spare one of them. Yet if I have to stop one of them it will not be the Cynosure. I expect to get some new subscribers. I am sowing. I expect to reap soon."

Philip Bacon, Wheatogue, Ct., writes:

"I think a great deal of Finney's work, and whenever honest men read it, I find that it makes an impression."

Mr. Alex. Needles, Sparta, O., writes:

"I will send you some confessions from the faint-hearted Masons since the lecture. (Rev. D. P. Rathbun's.) W. Ashley, of Sparta, told me he was a Mason and was done with them. He said that Mr. Fuller, of the same place, said that Rathbun's lecture was a lie. To which Mr. Ashley said Mr. Fuller knew nothing about Masonry or he told a lie. . . .

Esquire Way, of Morrow county, Ohio, told me he was a Mason but said he could go no longer with them to the lodge. Said he had nothing more to do with Masonry than I had; because it was no food for his soul; and that he was as free a man as I was.

Wesley Harris told me he was a Mason, but said he believed it was doing harm, and that church and government would be better off if there were no secret societies: He hoped they would be curtailed.

George Hibbard told me he had taken one degree in Masonry, and that brother Rathbun stated as near as he could recollect, the obligations. He knew the penalty was to have his throat cut across and his tongue torn out by the roots. He does not or cannot consider the obligations binding, because the Master told him, before he took them, it would not conflict with his duty to God, government or man, and he considered that it did.

Abner Elliot, of Deleware county, Ohio, told me before Mr. Wesley Harris that he was a Mason and a Methodist, and that he would leave the church before he would the Masons. He said it was a religion, if lived up to would save a man, for it was the best institution in the world.

This man is a stranger to me but is indorsed by Mr. Harris. I know all the rest of them. They are men of note, or ought to be, for all of them are church members."

Let us hear more testimonies from Masons. They condemn the institution whether they speak for it or not. Christ is the only way by which lost sinners can reach heaven.

LESSON XLI.—OCT. 11, 1874.—THE EVIL SPIRIT CAST OUT.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK IX. 17-29. Commit 23-29. Primary verses 23, 24.

17 And one of the multitude answered and said, Master, I have brought unto thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit;

18 And wheresoever he taketh him, he teareth him; and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I spake to thy disciples that they should cast him out; and they could not.

19 He answereth him, and saith, O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him unto me.

20 And they brought him unto him: and when he saw him, straightway the spirit tare him; and he fell on the ground, and wallowed foaming.

21 And he asked his father, How long is it ago since this came unto him? And he said, Of a child.

22 And oft times it hath cast him into the fire, and into the waters, to destroy him: but if thou canst do anything, have compassion on us, and help us.

23 Jesus said unto him, If thou caust believe, all things are possible to him that believeth.

24 And straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief.

25 When Jesus saw that the people came running together, he rebuked the foul spirit, saying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him.

26 And the spirit cried, and rent him sore, and came out of him: and he was as one dead; insomuch that many said, He is dead.

27 But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up; and he arose.

28 And when he was come into the house, his disciples asked him privately, Why could not we cast him out?

29 And he said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"And straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe: help thou mine unbelief.—MARK ix. 24.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

Where was Jesus at the time of our last lesson? What event occurred there? (ch. viii. 1-9.) How does this differ from the account in ch. vi.? Where did Jesus then go? (viii. 10.) What occurred? (viii. 11-13.) Where did they land? (viii. 22.) What occurred next? (viii. 22-26.) Where next did they go? (viii. 27). This was a village fifteen miles north of the lake. The eastern source of the Jordan is here. What great event is recorded in ch. ix. 1-10? This was doubtless on Mt. Hermon.

What is the first topic? What had occurred during the absence of Jesus? How many children did this man have? (Luke ix. 38.) What four things are told in verse 18? Was the boy ever in danger? (verse 22.) There are four sweet words in verse 19. What did the evil spirit do? (verse 20.) How long had he been afflicted? (verse 21.) What did the father say? (verse 22.)

What is the second topic? What was Jesus' reply? (verse 23.) Who did the "if thou canst" belong to? How many things did the father need? What was it? Who did Jesus say had power? (verse 23.) How many things did he say are possible?

What is the third topic? Was Jesus trying to quench faith or increase it? What did the father do? (verse 24) What confession did he make? What prayer did he offer? Confession in three words, prayer in four words. Can you increase a thing when there is none? Who can pray for faith? Do you want more?

What is the fourth topic? Was this a difficult case? How long had it stood? Who had tried to heal him? Was it hard for Jesus? Is anything difficult to him? What did he do? (verse 25.) What is told in verses 26, 27?

What is the fifth topic? What did the disciples ask? (verse 28.) What was Jesus' reply? (verse 29.) The thought of prayer and fasting is being alone with God, and learning his will.

Precious Words. "Bring him unto me." "All things are possible to him that believeth." "Lord, I believe." "Help thou mine unbelief."—The National Sunday-School Teacher.

Value of a Single Soul.

It was but a few weeks ago that I visited the tower in London. We were shown through its various rooms, and called to examine the various mementoes of by-gone ages that are there preserved, and as we were passing out the guide asked us if we would not like to visit the jewel-room. We told him yes, and we were conducted thither. There we saw the crown with which Queen Victoria was crowned. We saw all the royal plate, and, with Yankee inquisitiveness, we asked the person in attendance what the present value of those jewels and that plate was. She replied, 4,000,000 lb. sterling, or $20,000,000 in gold. The next day, in company with two beloved ministers, I visited schools for ragged children, where there were gathered 1,300 chil- from the worst dens in London; and as I stood at the desk of the principal, there sat before me a little girl,—she may have been thirteen years of age,—barefooted, bareh aded, uncombed hair and unwashed face, and, as I looked down into her bright eyes, and thought of the jewels in Queen Victoria's crown, I said to myself, "That little girl is the possessor of that which is of more value than all the crown-jewels of England;" for I saw in those eyes a gleam that told me she had faith in Jesus, and that shall remain when all else has passed away from earth.—George H. Stuart.

In Accord with the Truth.

Any one who undertakes to be a faithful teacher and interpreter of the Gospel must be in harmony with the spirit of that gospel, and in fellowship with its author. When the Jews were astonished at Jesus' knowledge of divine truth he said, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine." A half-hearted, halting follower of the Saviour ought not to expect to know the marvelous depths and extent of God's revealed will. His mind is divided; it is trying to serve two masters. That quick, delicate spiritual perception required to see heavenly truths is blurred or destroyed. The richness and beauty others behold in them he cannot discern. He charges all the difficulty to the obscurity of the truth rather than to his own rebellious heart.

When any teacher, therefore, finds the Bible lesson unusually difficult; when by ordinary pains-taking study he fails to get any vivid or clear apprehension of the message, or any sense of its divine power, let him at once inquire prayerfully whether he is in close and conscious sympathy with his Author, or in spiritual accord with the probable teachings of that truth. Let the teacher bring himself into spiritual unity with Jesus, and into full sympathy with the Bible message, and the mountains of difficulties will melt away. His spiritual sight will be extended and cleared, the lesson will be taught with ease, with fervency and with sincere joy.—S. S. World.

Negative Proof Regarding Masonic Antiquity.

That masonry is as old as Babel, we do not refuse to believe; it is Freemasonry, otherwise called speculative Masonry, of which we treat, and of which we affirm that its era is A. D. 1717; no man need to mistake our meaning. Neither do we pretend that the order was then made up of new principles, or of a newly created race of men; but certain men and certain principles, previously existing, were then for the first time formally united and embodied into that mystic order called Freemasonry; and a system was formed, which did not exist before even by name, which system we know by the name of speculative Masonry. We do not even suppose that all the materials of this coat of many colors came out of one fleece, or was spun and wove by the same king Solomon. The aprons and trowels and temple were taken from the masons; the divine origin, mystic virtues and wonderful secrets of the order came from the Rosicrucians; the magic and fortune-telling from the Necromancers; the morals from the Jesuits; and the horrid oaths of the order from its own bowels. But the time that all these were first publicly stitched together to form speculative Masonry, was when the only four companies of operative masons in the south of England met at the Apple-tree Tavern in London, February, 1717, and constituted themselves "the Grand Lodge" of England pro tempore in due form. Vide Preston, p. 166. Anthony Sayer, Grand Master.

The proof that it had no earlier existence is perfectly conclusive. Speculative Masonry, or Freemasonry, is a matter of great notoriety. Any question in a future age of its existence in the 18th or 19th centuries, could be answered satisfactorily by pointing to splendid Masonic halls, to quarto volumes of constitutions, and octavo histories, to medals and monuments and deeds of parchment, as well as deeds of wickedness. The literature of this age abounds with it. Those who read the account of laying the corner-stone of the Bunker Hill monument will point to that pillar of national glory as a proof that Freemasonry existed A. D. 1825; and, if that is not enough, the foundation may be removed, and there a medal be found with inscriptions of vanity, which, in this republic, can only belong to Most Worshipful Freemasonry: unless an indignant people should justly tear the disgraceful plate from its proud resting place.

In vain we search for any proof of this sort existing earlier than the 18 h century. We find constitutions of Jesuits, Rosicrusians, and Alchymists. We find histories of political parties, religious sects and Bucaneers. We find text books of Cabala, necromancy, astrology, magic, fortune telling and various proofs of witchcraft; but not a particle of evidence to show the existence of Freemasonry, or speculative Masonry. It is not mentioned or alluded to; it is not painted on canvass, or stamped on paper, or indented on plate. That its universal language must have been spoken; that its mystic characters were certainly understood, and its omnific word even then possessed some share of omnipotence, no one who believes in Freemasonry can for a moment doubt. But all the proof is found in pages and documents, in fraternities and monuments of the 18th and 19th centuries; and this in such abundance as quite to supply the failure of five hundred years preceding; although it admits of a doubt whether there is enough to supply the deficiency of the other five thousand years from the year of light. Fifty centuries is a long period for the active labors of a great mystery spead over the face of the whole world, to pass entirely unobserved; and there is no accounting for it, only as a great mystery, and such Freemasonry may undoubtedly be, for men do not well understand it when it is fully revealed.

We have read the volumes of Hume and Smollet and Bissett with care. They give a connected history of England from the earliest dates to the 19th century, and no mention is made of Freemasonry to our recollection. Perhaps they were political historians, and overlooked the hand-maid of religion. Then we have to run over Mosheim, who gives a faithful history of the the church, century by century, from the year of our Lord, to the 18th century, and Freemasonry entirely escapes either his notic or our memory. Perhaps this religious man mistook its modest apron for the garb of a craftsman. Then we have read Henry and Andrews with attention. They give a connected history of England to A. D. 1603, with a particular notice of the arts and of architecture. Now we shall hear of Freemasonry. The introduction of glass windows and chimneys, the erection of the Royal Exchange, Burleigh House, and the Abbey of Dumfermline, are faithfully recorded, with many other things of the same character; but not a word is said about Freemasonry, or speculative Masonry; and only one word about the "most ancient and most honorable society that every was, or, perhaps, ever will be."* This is the more remarkable in Mr. Andrews, who records the fact of that great Mason's, Sir Walter Raleigh, eating the bitter apples instead of the roots of the newly discovered potatoe; and who even counts the fardingale worthy of a page in his work, giving a precise account of that Spanish petticoat, and not so much as naming a Freemason's apron, either for size or form, materials or emblems! This is very strange; and although Jones, Sackville, Woolsey, Savage and Wren are often named in history, not one of them is entitled "Most Worshipful Grand Master," which honor Freemasonry now confers on them all. This fact is enough to prove what the reader must have ere this suspected, that all the English historians are men who hate the light of Freemasonry, and the order who swear away their neighbor's character, and their own lives.

We lay them away, and turn to honest Scotland. Robertson tells its story in the most exquisite manner; he spreads upon his page every fact of importance, and Walter Scott fills the world with the poetry of its history. But where is the mention of Freemasonry, or speculative Masonry, or the men of the cabletow? In the lights and shadows, in the tales and legends, in the songs and histories of Scotland, as well as of England, where is the mention of Freemasonry prior to the 18th century? We know of none. Jack the Giant Killer, Tom Thumb and Robin Hood live both in prose and verse, and so does Freemasonry; but it did not begin to live in English prose or verse until A. D. 1717. Wonderful mystery! so carefully concealed that its very name is unknown to the literature of the world for the lapse of fifty-six centuries!

"Hail Masonry! thou craft divine!
"Glory of earth, from heaven revealed!
"Which doth with jewels precious shine,
"From all but Mason's eyes concealed."
—Constitutions of N. Y. Pa. and Md.

It is edifying to observe the modesty of the heavenly mystery, when it begins to reveal itself. As if mortals might be dazzled with the jewels of its glory too suddenly displayed, it first introduces itself by the simple name of Masonry, as in the lines above; but when years had accustomed men to the brightness of this revelation, it gently distinguishes itself in terms, as it had previously done in fact, from operative masonry, and sings:

"Blest be the day that gave to me
"The secrets of Freemasonry.
"Come fill up a bumpet, and let it go round,
"Let mirth and good fellowship always abound,
"And let the world see
"That Freemasonry
"Doth teach honest hearts to be jovial and free."
Const. of N. Y. p. p. 176. 179.

It is too much after this, to search Gibbon, Gillies, Ferguson and Rollin for Freemasonry; if we did, it would be of no use; they take no notice of it; but possibly the reader may think Freemasonry existed somewhere, if not in the literature or realms of Great Britain previous to A. D. 1717. We will see

*Henry's History of England, Book 4, Chapter 5, gives an extract from Wren's Parentalia, p. 306, which mentions the society of Freemasons, and makes them one with the operative masons licensed in the 14ht century by the Pope's Bull to erect churches and edifices in any part of Europe.

But Wren's Parentalia was left by him in MS, and was first published by his son Stephen, A. D. 1750. See the British Plutarch. It may be doubted whether Sir Chris. Wren left in his own hand writing the passage quoted by Henry. We do doubt it.

Youthful minds, like the pliant wax, are susceptible of the most lasting impressions; and the good or evil bias they then receive is seldom, if ever, eradicated.

The Christian Cynosure.

The Day of Fasting and Prayer.

The Executive Committee of the National Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, have called upon all Christians in sympathy with their work to observe the eighth day of November next as a day of fasting and prayer. It is proper that we consider briefly some of the reasons for such an observance of that day.

First among them should be placed the wide-spread combination of secret lodges that corrupt our churches, our courts of justice, our political and commercial centers, and our social life. Ministers and members of many of our large and influential churches are bound by bloody and barbarous oaths to organizations composed largely of ungodly men. By these same oaths they have sworn to conceal the words and acts of these bad men, even when those acts are crimes. Thus many Christians who are taught by Christ to come out from among those who disregard his law, voluntarily go into associations controlled by his enemies, take oaths forbidden by his Word, and practice a religion from which his name is cast out, Thus has the church lost spirituality until in many instances she has a name to live and is dead. Lodges are in many places fuller of worshipers than prayer meetings. "Christ is dishonored and Satan is enthroned."

Turning our eyes from the church to the state, the same evils are apparent. In Pennsylvania and Ohio men who belong to a secret miners' union, murder without hesitation, men who are willing to work for less than the union price, while all through the South Masonic lodges, calling themselves White Leagues or Ku-Klux Klans, are killing, whipping and banishing those who do not at once submit to the decisions of the lodge. Nor does this leprosy of secretism infect the adult alone. Under the guise of college fraternities and temperance societies young men and women are busied with regalia, grips and signs, until the very idea of man or womanhood is lost; yea, until the true idea of the worship of the true God is lost. For when the children of Israel made a molten calf and sacrified before it, when in groves and secret chambers they burnt incense to Baalim and Ashtaroth and all the hosts of heaven, after the manner of the ancient sages of the nations, then they forsook the moral as well as the spiritual law of God and practiced every manner of abomination. And then "the anger of the Lord was hot against Israel" and he poured his "fury upon them for the blood they had shed upon the land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it." And whoever will carefully analyze and compare the worships and their fruits for which the Israelites were utterly abhored and cast off with the worships of the secret orders of our day and their fruits, can not, we think, fail to perceive that in their essential elements and results those ancient and these modern worships are identical. When, therefore, we consider how many professed Christians have gone into those secret chambers and burnt incense and worshiped with all the idolatry of the nations and bound their souls with the oaths that form the fountains whence the blood of murder flows and has defiled all the land, surely we have reason to say with Moses, "O this people have sinned a great sin."

Let no one suppose that these tides of evil will recede of their own free will. Evils do not cease in that way. Slavery talks fair, but it means universal dominion or the graveyard of Andersonville. So Freemasonry, under whatever name it may exist, Odd-fellowship, Knights of Pythias, Ku-Klux Klan, or White League, will do one of two things: It will supplant the Christian churches, override the courts of law and establish the reign of poison and knife, or die under the heel of enlightened patriotism and Christianity.

If, however, in our exertions against these evils we use human weapons we shall suffer defeat. Secret lodges do not rest upon intelligence, but ignorance. They do not gain members by arguments, but by bribes. They are in communities like gambling hells and houses of ill fame; needing no defense but darkness and asking nothing but silence. Hence the power that is to overcome the lodges, is the power that is to overcome human selfishness, that is, the grace of God. No other power can avail.

Accordingly let us, on the second Sabbath of November next, fast and pray before God for the overthrow of the giant iniquity of the age.

Let us confess our own fault in this matter, that our efforts have been so intermittent and feeble; that we have not more fully and heartily sought the establishment of Christ's kingdom in our hearts and in the world.

Let us pray for those whose eyes the god of this world has blinded so that they can no longer discern between the righteous and the wicked.

Let us pray for the many who loathe the chains they dare not break, that they may be led out into the light.

Finally, let us in faith, doubting nothing, ask for the complete overthrow of these accursed systems that blaspheme God and damn men; assured that though the weapons of our warfare are not carnal they are mighty through God to pull down these strongholds of Satan.

} Committee on Address.

We clip the following from last week's Advance. Our readers will see that the Cynosure was right when, some six months or a year since, we said that the public press would leave Mr. Beecher's case where we had placed it. There has never been but one theory consistent with his acts and letters, and that is the theory of his guilt. Men do not pay the inventors of black mail slanders thousands of dollars, by instalments, to hire them to suppress their own lies, and trust their honor to do it. But men do bribe others to conceal crimes, which if revealed will ruin them:

"Miss Catherine E. Beecher has not been able to resist the temptation to write a letter to the public in defense of her brother, Henry Ward, and a foolish one at that. She charges Mr. Bowen with being the originator of the scandal. Mr. Bowen replies in a card explicity denying her charges and asserting that he never wrote a letter charging Mr. B. with adultery. Mr. Tilton's last statement seems to have made a greater impresoion on public opinion than any other statement yet made in the case. The Interior boldly declares that Mr. Beecher is ruined. The Springfield Republican declares that Mr. Beecher ought not to re-enter Plymouth pulpit until a verdict has been passed on the case in the courts, and says his failure to proceed against Moulton and Tilton in a suit for damages will be regarded by a large and constantly growing portion of the public as a confession of guilt. The Congregationalist thinks it will be difficult for Mr. Beecker to explain away some of the points made by Mr. Tilton, and the Chicago Journal is disposed to believe that the issue of the case will turn on Mrs. Tilton's sanity. Judge Lord of the Massachusetts Superior Court has written an elaborate review of the case, and says that Mr. Beecher has made no sufficient explanation of his own letters, and must by their evidence held to be guilty of adultery."

THE NEW HAVEN COUNCIL.

We have seen but a meagre sketch of the doings of the Congregational National Council which met at New Haven, Sept. 30th; and that we have seen concerns chiefly neither religion or morals, but the consolidation of societies and their organs and the management of funds. A national Congregational council to redress practical evils, to expose and guard the churches against errors hurtful and dangerous, or even to adjust and settle questions disturbing the peace and threatening the purity of Zion, as did the attempt to force circumcision on the early Christians which led to the Council at Jerusalem,—such a national council would be a national blessing.

But this National Council was called by Leonard Bacon, the protector of heresies, and run by A. H. Quint, a chaplain of Freemasons, who voted steadily with the Democrats down to Buchanan, for whom he voted while Democracy meant slavery, as all the world now sees and confesses.

This National Council was called to settle no disturbance save that caused by the discussion of secret societies by Finney at Oberlin; and that not by meeting it in open, manly, Christian discussion, but by communing with Freemasons in the First Church at Oberlin, which had once cast them out.

And further, this National Council professes no distinct doctrine, but left its members disputing what doctrines it held. It assailed no abuses or public immoralities. The railway trains ran by it on the Sabbath without a jar on its sensibilities. In short, it was a scheming convention called by scheming men.

When we get the proceedings of its New Haven meeting in full we will analyze and explain them to our readers.

THE KANSAS BRIBERY.

A special session of the Kansas Legislature closed on the twenty-first of September. During its sittings a resolution ordering the State Treasurer to deliver the Pomeroy-York money to its legal owner was introduced and lost. This action may be explained on the same theory as the original conspiracy; the popular explanation will be that the courts have not yet given their decision. The trial of ex-Senator Pomeroy on the charge of bribery is set for November in the Osage County court, to which a change of venue was taken in July last from the Topeka court presided over by Judge Norton, well known as a violent anti-Pomeroy man.

As Mr. Pomeroy prophesied in his address before the Chicago Convention, that it was political suicide to engage with the lodge power, the conception and execution of the York conspiracy was Masonic. Since that time journals under control of the lodge have not failed to keep up the cry of bribery, and on every convenient occasion to boisterously demand his trial. But they have little to say of the developments in Kansas politics regarding York, Ingalls, Horton and others engaged in the plot. York is only remembered as the Judas of Kansas politics. Ingalls, elected to Mr. Pomeroy's seat in the Senate has been publicly charged, and challenged to bring suit if libeled, with about all the crimes in the decalogue. He is charged with petty larcency when at college; with dishonesty and double-dealing in his profession; with licentiousness and intrigue; with bribing judges and witnesses; with purjury and fraud as legislative clerk; with avaricious greed; with selling offices and blackmailing; with knowing beforehand of the York plot, and the schemes to bribe witnesses on the investigation, and to corrupt the officers having charge of the case. Such an indictment would sink any but a Freemason politician.

The people of Kansas have learned something of the lodge power in the case and the tone of their journals is remarkably changed since 1872. The correspondent of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Standard writes of their present opinion of Mr. Pomeroy: "After canvassing the merits of his case, I have come to the conclusion that he is about the best abused man in Kansas, and a large majority of the people, with whom I have conversed of the subject, unite in saying that he was the best Senator Kansas ever had, and has done more for the State than all the others put together. York and his coadjutors who sprung the seven thousand dollars bribery case on him, thereby defeating his re-election to the Senate, are denounced as being a set of unprincipled conspirators, who deliberately concocted this scheme to defeat the "old man," and put York in his place. The ex-Senator is looking hale and hearty as a man bearing no weight of cares."

Some time since Caleb Cushing wrote the following caustic description of the case, which is worth reading to show what depths Masonic conspiracies may descend: "Now, there are some crimes which a gentleman may commit, such as treason, or even occasionally assassination of vendetta or of honor; other crimes belong to natures so mean as to be beneath anger, such as common theft; but there is another class of crimes of vulgar, low, brutish order, such as forgery, cheating, and rape, which disgust and repel. Such is the crime which these conspirators deliberately agreed to commit by the hand of York, a crime one degree lower than that of which Rhorabacher was convicted; for burglary has an element of physical courage in it which does not appertain to conspiracy to swindle a Senator of the United States. And these conspirators are friends of education, forsooth; they must needs season their criminality with cant on that subject; they were to cheat in order to get money for the school fund. When Vespasian exhibited to Titus the new coin obtained from the tax on cloacae he said, 'My son, non olet.' What sort of a smell would belong to a school fund augmented by money which Mr. York should have obtained from Mr. Pomeroy by conspiracy, falsehood and fraud?"

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

This young man, whom a wise but a myterious Providence has made heir to the throne of a great Christian nation, is well known for his vagaries and sometimes disreputable conduct, far from excusable in a person of his education and relationship. He has lately been reported so deeply in debt as to require the assistance of his royal mother or an act of Parliament to save the necessity of repudiation. He has been Grand Master of English Masons, an office given probably more from deference to his political rank than for sagacity or official ability. When the Marquis of Ripon, Grand Master, lately seceded, the Prince of Wales took the place as Past Grand Master until the regular election. This has since taken place and he has been made Grand Master a second time. The following from the London Times of August 15th, will give our readers some idea of the Masonic proclivities of this young man, and we hope lead them to pray that he may be soundly converted from such follies before called to the throne of Great Britain:

PLYMOUTH, Aug. 14.

The most striking feature in the day's programme was the reception of the Prince of Wales by the Freemasons of Devon and Cornwall, assembled in United Grand Lodge in the Great Hall of the new buildings, whither the brethren walked in procession. The union of the two provinces for any such purpose is unprecedented in the annals of Freemasonry. The brethren in the west did their best to attend, whilst so unique an occasion had attractions for members from Suffock, Lincoln, Hants, Somerset, and other distant places. Close upon three thousand mustered at the rendezvous of the brethren, which was the prison built for the French captives a century since, and here in the square the procession was marshalled by the provincial directors of ceremonies, assisted by others specially appointed for the occasion. Although brethren were limited to carry their smaller banners, and to wearing only craft clothing and craft and Royal Arch jewels, the procession looked very picturesque, and the section occupied by officers of the Grand Lodge and the past provincial officers, of which there was a very large gathering, was magnificent, the brethren wearing full suits of Masonic clothing of purple and gold. The streets were crowded throughout, but the greatest order was maintained on the route. In the procession the youngest lodges were placed first, and the Grand Masters last; but when the van reached the door of the Guildhall the procession opened right and left, facing inwards, room being left for the Grand Masters, preceded by the standard and sword bearers, to pass up the center, the grand officers and brethren following in succession from the rear. This gathering of the Masonic body quite filled the hall in every part. When all had assembled the lodge was opened in ancient form, and immediately afterwards the Prince entered the hall, heralded by a flourish of trumpets. The whole of the brethren, led by a small orchestra, rising then sang "God bless the Prince of Wales," the chorus being thus adapted to the occasion:

From Cornwall's rugged moorlands,
And Devon's lovely vales,
Oh let the prayer re-echo—
God bless the Prince of Wales.

The Prince took the chair as Past Grand Master of England, being supported by the Rev. John Huyshe, Provincial Grand Master of Devon, the Earl of Mount Edgcumbe, Provincial Grand Master of Cornwall, and by Mr. Metham and Sir Frederick Martin Williams, M. P., Deputy Provincial Grand Masters of Devon and Cornwall, Lord Charles Beresford, and the Hon. T. Agar Robartes, respectively. The salutation of the Prince in ancient form by the three thousand brethren was very imposing. This was followed by cheering that lasted for several minutes, the Prince repeatedly bowing his acknowledgments.

The Provincial Grand Master of Devon, addressing his Royal Highness, remarked upon the Prince's close connection with the west as Duke of Cornwall and Lord High Steward of Plymouth, and then upon the closer bond of union as a brother Mason, concluding by asking the Prince to accept an address of warm and fraternal welcome from the united Grand Lodges upon this his first Masonic appearance among them The Earl of Mount Edgcumbe read the address, the principal paragraphs of which were as follows:

"On a former occasion we met in our respective Grand Lodges to offer our heartfelt and fraternal congratulations on the happy recovery of our Royal Highness from a lingering and very dangerous illness (loud cheers), and on the present occasion we are unitedly assembled to greet your presence among us in the full enjoyment of renovated health and strength. (Loud cheers.) We unite in grateful praise to the Great Architect of the universe for having preserved a life so dear and precious to this mighty empire (renewed cheers), and we desire to offer our fervent prayers that our Royal Highness may be long preserved in vigor of mind and body, beloved and revered by all her Majesty's liege subjects, and regarded with feelings of the most earnest and fraternal affection by your loyal and devoted brethren of the provinces of Devon and Cornwall." (Cheers."

The Prince, who was received with a great outburst of cheers, rising, replied as follows:

"Worshipful Provincial Grand Master and Brethren of Devon and Cornwall:—I thank you for your address of welcome. It has been a matter of warm congratulation to me that I should have been able to meet the brethren of Devon and Cornwall in united provincial lodge assembled on the present occasion, and I highly appreciate the motive which has led so many of you, at considerable personal inconvenience to yourselves, to assemble here to-day from all parts of the two counties. I can not be sufficiently grateful to the great Architect of the Universe for his merciful preservation of my life from so severe and dangerous an illness as that from which I suffered (loud cheers), and I am much touched by the kind terms in which you have alluded to my recovery."

The Earl of Mount Edgcumbe thanked the officers and brethren of the province of Devonshire for having so cordially and so fraternally given the brethren of Cornwall the opportunity of joining with them on this auspicious occasion. The Prince of Wales then said:

"Brethren:—I am anxious to have this opportunity of thanking my Right Worshipful Brothers Huyshe and Lord Mount Edgcumbe, for the very kind words they have spoken on this occasion; and I am also glad to have an opportunity of thanking you once more for having met here to-day in such large numbers. I have been present at several great Masonic meetings during the six years that I have had the honor of belonging to your craft, but I never saw a gathering like the present. (Loud cheers.) I not only look on this immense gathering as a kind of personal expression of feeling on your part towards myself, but it is also a proof to me that Masonry flourishes in this part of the world. (Loud cheers.) Long may it be so, brethren; long may it flourish as it does at the present moment, and long may we uphold those principles for which it was instituted. (Cheers.) Allow me to thank you once more for the reception you have given me to-day —one which I shall never forget." (Loud cheers.)

NOTES.

—In the report of the Executive Committee meeting published last week the action of the Committee on the salary of the Assistant Corresponding Secretary is sadly blundered in part of our edition. The vote was five per cent. of certain funds, not fifty, as printed.

—The Executive Committee invite correspondence from every friend of the reform who has any valuable suggestion on the time of holding the next anniversary. Shall we meet at Pittsburgh late in the winter, in the early, or in the latter part of spring? What say you?

—There are hundreds of seceding Masons in the country a brief statement of whose experience would be of great value to the reform. Please see a notice of the Syracuse Convention elsewhere and get the desired information sent from every seceder in your neighborhood. What a glorious army these men would be could they be brought together!

—At the late meeting of the Odd-fellows Grand Lodge in Atlanta, Georgia, a resolution was passed "after considerable discussion" that "all spirituous, vinous and malt liquors should be excluded from the the lodge-room and the ante-rooms of the halls." The United Presbyterian very sensibly remarks on the case: "The 'discussion' of this measure suggests that some members were in favor of encouraging intoxicating drinks about the buildings, which would be a curiosity in a temperance society. These Odd-fellows, and other kindred associations, originated with good intentions, perhaps, are all prostituted in the very nature of things to unworthy uses."

—In the reports of this Grand Lodge meeting are the following items: Number of grand lodges, 46; number of subordinate lodges, 5,486; Rebekah degree lodges, 512; number of grand encampments, 36; subordinate encampments, 1,512; lodge initiations, 56,454; lodge membership, 414,815; encampment membership, 80,132; total revenue, $4,433,001,08; total relief, $1,490,274 72. This shows a general increase, except in the proportion of the relief funds, which cannot rise higher than one-third the receipts.

—A Jewish paper notices the favor with which Hebrew Masons are regarded in England, and mentions as an example, that the provincial Grand Lodge of Warwickshire was appointed to meet April 8th, but when the Grand Master was informed that this date occured during the Passover holidays, he at once postponed the meeting. Jews are far from losing their individuality in the lodge.

—Six thousand cash gifts, aggregating $250,000, to be drawn from fifty thousand tickets is the way the Masonic Relief Association of Norfolk, Va., is proceeding to raise funds for a Masonic temple in that city. Its advertisement comes to us in the Stocton (Cal.) Independent. We need to be told again that the lodge does not patronize lotteries.

—Some weeks ago a lady asked through the Witness some searching questions concerning Masonry, to which we have received answers from Masons in the negative of most or all of them. On the other hand we have received answers from ex-Masons in the affirmative of most or all of them. The discrepancy is, perhaps, explained by the fact that those who answer in the affirmative had got into the higher grades of Masonry, whilst those who answer in the negative probably never advanced beyond the lower grades. We infer this from the fact that they say nothing about their Masonic rank, and seem to be ignorant of the facts affirmed by the higher grade men.—New York Witness.

This is one explanation of the conflicting testimony, but not the one. As President Finney affirms and proves, and as many of our readers know by experience, the Mason who begins to talk about his order must soon begin to lie or break his Masonic oath. Hence the discrepancy above.

—A writer in the Lutheran Standard mentions the last attempt on D. P. Rathbun, and with a righteous indignation deplores the fact that the Knight Templars of Ohio are to have a representative in the next General Council, in the person of G. W. Overmyer, a person who parades his Masonic regalia on the trains, and two years ago demanded his pastor to sign a paper agreeing to cease remarks derogatory to the Masons and Odd-fellows, threatening him at the same time with raising a party against him and dividing the church. The pastor scorned to sell his Christian privilege and the gallant Knight Templar who swore to defend the religion of Christ and wield his sword in its behalf, stirred up dissention and divided the church. How long, O Lord! must this enemy of thy Son always prevail?

Sleep on, My Love.

The following lines written by the Bishop of Chichester, nearly a century ago, breathes more of unutterable love and human tenderness towards a buried wife, "not dead but gone before," than any poem in the language.

Sleep on, my love, in thy cold bed,
Never to be disquieted.
My last good night! Thou wilt not wake
Till I thy fate shall overtake;
Till age, or grief, or sickness must Marry my body to that dust
It so much loves; and fill the room
My heart keeps empty in the tomb.
Stay for me there; I will not fail
To meet thee in that hollow vale.

And think not much of my delay;
I am already on the way.
And follow thee with all the speed
Desire can make, or sorrow breed.
Each minute is a short degree,
And every hour a step towards thee.
At night when I betake to rest,
Next morn I rise nearer my West
Of life, almost by eight hours sail,
Than when sleep breathed his drowsy gale.

But hark! my pulse like a soft dream
Beats my approach; tells thee I come;
And slow bowe'er my marches be,
I shall at last sit down by thee.
The tho't of this bids me go on
And wait my dissolution
With hope and comfort. Dear, forgive
The crime,) I am content to live,
Divided with but half a heart,
Till we shall meet and never part.

John Knox.

Sabbath, the 24th day of November, 1872, was the three hundredth anniversary of the day of the death of John Knox, the great reformer of Scotland—a day far better to him, though not to the country that owes him so deep a debt of gratitude, than was the day of his birth. "Go," he said to his wife a few hours before the end, "read where I cast my first anchor." She read the seventeenth chapter of John's Gospel. When his faithful attendent, Ballantyne, perceived that he was speechless, he requested him to give them a sign that he died in peace. Upon this, as if gaining new strength, he lifted up one of his hands, and, sighing twice, he expired without a struggle.

In the beginning of this century it had become the fashion with historians to denounce John Knox as a most unlovely character; as at once a sour bigot and an unscrupulous revolutionist; as a subverter of institutions venerable by age; while a fanatical prosecutor of his own novelties; as an insulter of royal ladies, and a destroyer of noble works of art; a man, in short, who regarded neither the convictions of others, nor the misery and ruin he produced in the setting up of his own views. Now this prejudice of historians has been driven back before the evidence of facts, and has given place to a very different historical verdict. Wherever church history is studied, he is admitted to have been in every respect one of the best, as he was in some respects the greatest, of British Reformers. England can claim a share in him as well as Scotland. While banished from his native land, he was for some time a minister in the southern kingdom, was offered a bishopric (which he declined), took part in the preparation of the Thirty-nine Articles, and, as has been lately shown, was probably the person to whom chiefly the Church of England owes it that her Book of Common Prayer contains a disclaimer of the Popish doctrine of a personal presence in the substance of the sacramental bread and wine. He would have reformed further, but—unhappily, as events of the present day are proving—his advice was not taken.

Knox is now seen to have been the man of his day in all Britain; the one man who not only knew the signs of the times, but had the courage to speak out and act at the critical moment so as to be the instrument of saving both parts of the island from falling back under the sway of Rome—from losing gospel truth and civil liberty at once.

He is proved by the strictest examination of his words and actions to have been as upright in character as he was resolved and brave; perhaps no character more blameless in such a public and difficult career is to be found in history. One historian indeed has shown his own ignorance of the nature of heart-religion by interpreting one of Knox's lowly confessions of sin before God as a betrayal of remorse for some great crime he must have committed, and so he has actually set himself to hunt out the crime! Knox knew himself to be a sinner, for he was a deeply exercised Christian; but he was also a remarkably consistent, as well as a preeminently useful, Christian. When he stood in the sacred chair, he spoke the truth as conscience demanded of him, "gain say it who list;" when in the presence of nobles and kings he resisted their evil-doings, and exposed their cunning machinations to their face, for he "feared not the face of clay;" but when alone with God he was one of the lowliest of sinners saved by grace. Accordingly his letters show deep sympathy and tenderness, as well as holy skill, in dealing with timid, contrite souls.

Yes, such was the man to whom, more than any other, Scotland owes, under God, the reformation of her church, her celebrated educational system, and the preservation of her civil liberties;—things that have so influenced her character, and made her what she is. After this, it seems coming down to small things to add that he was possessed of genuine and genial personal humor; that he wrote, too, in a pure English style—losing nothing by an occasional spice of Scotticisms—that was far ahead of that of all his northern contemporaries: and that he was an admirable historian—his history of the Scottish Reformation being racy and instructive, and forming delightful reading to this day.

Knowing all this, how impressive become almost his last words on the day of his death. He had fallen into an apparent slumber, when he awoke and sighed deeply. When asked the cause, he replied, "I have formerly, during my frail life, sustained many contests and assaults of Satan. . . . Often before has he placed my sins before my eyes, often tempted me to despair, often endeavored to ensnare me by the allurements of the world; but these weapons were broken by the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, and the enemy was foiled. Now, the cunning serpent has labored to persuade me that I have merited heaven and eternal blessedness by the faithful discharge of my ministry. But blessed be God, who has enabled me to beat down and quench this fiery dart, by suggesting to me such passages of Scripture as these: 'What hast thou that thou hast not received?'—'By the grace of God I am what I am.'—'Not I, but the grace of God in me.' Upon this, as one vanquished, he left me. Wherefore I give thanks to God through Jesus Christ, who has given me the victory."

Of no man in history is it more eminently true, that his works do follow him.—British Messenger.

God's Work Goes On.

It is not optional with you, my friend, whether you shall live on a redeemed earth, and in times on which the ends of the age are come; it is only optional with you how you shall live here. It cannot be with you as if your Saviour had not sanctified the world with his feet and sweetened its air with his charity, and judged it by his cross. These supernatural facts are a part of the estate you occupy. Neither your ingratitude nor your caprice can root them out, or clear you of the accountability they bind upon you. Your indifference may blind your eyes, or paralize your limbs; it does not slide you out of the range of the mediatorial ministry, or out of the reckoning that must follow it. In any case, therefore, the scale of your choice does not hang evenly balanced. Your right decision is already weighted with the coming of the Son of man. The way of life has his light upon it. Choose you this day whether you will serve, in joy, the Master of the house, or turn your back upon it and upon him! If you have wandered some distance away, turn you, for your place is kept for you, and you are yet within the borders of the King's country! If you have fallen into a slumber of unconcern, awake and arise! and Christ shall give you light!—Bishop Huntingdon.

Danger of Half-Knowledge.

The practice of taking advantage of the early morning for traveling is a necessity in the East, in order to get the full benefit of the cooler hours of the day, and to have time for the rest and repast at noon, when traveling would be intolorably oppressive and often dangerous. While this is the unvarying practice when proceeding from day to day on a pilgrimage, it is never done on the first day of a departure. On that day the party does not leave until within a few hours of sunset, and often pitches its tent on the first night within sight of the place which it has left. This was our uniform experience. The custom, which has all the authority of a law, is very ancient, and illusion to it can be discovered in Jewish writers at least a century before Christ. The reason in which it appears to have originated was the very simple one that if, on the first evening of unloading the baggage, it was found that anything of value had been left behind, or anything indispensable to the journey unprovid, there might yet be time to return and procure it. This custom illustrates one of the most beautiful passages in the history of our Lord. When Joseph and Mary were on their way back from Jerusalem, on the first occasion of their visit with Jesus to the temple at the feast, they discovered, when halting at sunset, that their wondrous child was not in the company. This fact has long been used as a stock objection with infidels, and with interpreters who dwell on the border-land of infidelity, and it has even been picked up and appropriated by Strauss, as casting doubt on the reality of the entire narrative. Was it credible, it has been said, that our Lord's parents could have taken a long day's journey, and never once have inquired for a child so deserving of their love? This is another instance of that skeptical quarreling with the Scripture narrative which has its origin in half-knowledge. Joseph and Mary, it is probable, were only a few miles distant from the city when they made their painful discovery. We saw Jerusalem on the day of our encampment on our way southeastward.—Dr. A. Thompson.

Those Brothers.

I wonder if girls realize what an influence they might have over their brothers by exercising a little self-control. I say a little, perhaps that is too moderate a word; it would hardly be too strong to say a great deal, for I know very well how tormenting boys are oftimes, and how they put one's patience to the severest proofs. But, after all, there is nothing gained by finding fault with them, for the next day after we have scolded and lectured them for prowling about the house and helping themselves to whatever there is to eat, they will go and do the same thing again. I grant that it is provoking to have all the doors left open, and the tracks of mud on the floor and carpets, and that it is discouraging to have a boy swallow his food without chewing, show all he has in his mouth while eating, drink with his mouth full of meat and potatoes, put in his food with his knife, or any way to get it in; it is discouraging, especially if the boy is getting on in years, and quite disgusting to his more refined and delicate sister. But it is not positively wicked, and I have known such a boy, a boy who did not half wash himself besides, grow to be a great and good man, and behave as well among civilized people as any gentleman of them all. I don't know as there is any reason why boys should not be as tractable and controlable as girls, but as a class they are not, and we must accept the fact and govern our deportment toward them accordingly. They will be out evenings without always accounting for themselves, which their sisters would not think of doing, or be allowed to do if they did think of it; and they won't get up in the morning when they ought to; like enough they are lazy, and perhaps they smoke and won't study. It is an unpleasant state of things to say the least of it, and ought not to be so. But I don't know any other way for sisters to help the matter than by uniform kindness and forbearance. If possible, never find fault with them, and let the sisters never miss a chance for commendation. It is surprising how a little judicious praise will set a boy thinking of his short-comings, and planning how he may deserve more. Don't look at them when they are eating. It is very comforting to remember that boys do learn to eat properly when they have stopped growing, and all the fault-finding in the world does not hasten the matter. I don't believe there is a boy in the world who would not be susceptible to the refining influence of a gentle, loving sister, who was ready to help and encourage him. Sisters, do all you can to make the home such a cheerful, delightful place, and yourselves so good natured and obliging, that many of the places where your brothers now seek amusement will lose their attraction, and a course, loud, fast girl become repulsive.—Christian Union.

Toilets of Uncivilized Nations.

Savages are passionately fond of ornaments. In some of the very lowest races, indeed, the women are almost undecorated, but that is only because the men keep all the ornaments themselves. As a general rule we may say that Southerners ornament themselves, Northerners their clothes. In fact, all savage races who leave much of their skin uncovered delight in painting themselves in the most brilliant colors they can obtain. Black, white, red and yellow are the favorite, or rather, perhaps, the commonest colors. Although perfectly naked, the Australians of Botany Bay were by no means without ornaments. They painted themselves with red ochre, white clay, and charcoal; the red was laid on in broad patches, the white generally in stripes, or on the face in spots, often with a circle round each eye; through the septum of the nose they wore a bone as thick as a man's finger and five or six inches long. This was of course very awkward, as it prevented them from breathing freely through the nose, but they submitted cheerfully to the inconvenience for the sake of appearance.

They had also necklaces made of shells neatly cut and strung together, earrings, bracelets of small cord, and strings of plaited human hair, which they wound round their waists. Some also had gorgets of large shell hanging from the neck across the breast. On all these things they placed a high value. The savage also wears necklaces and rings, bracelets and anklets, armlets and leglets—even, if I may say so, bodylets. Round their bodies, round their necks, round their arms and legs, their fingers, and even their toes, they wear ornaments of all kinds. From their number and weight, these must sometimes be very inconvenient. Lichtenstein saw the wife of a Beltuan chief wearing no less than seventy-two brass rings. Nor are they particular as to the material, copper, brass or iron, leather or ivory, stones, shells, glass, bits of wood, seeds or teeth—nothing comes amiss. In Southeast Island, one of the Louisiade Archipelago, M'Gillivray even saw several bracelets made each of a lower human jaw, crossed by a collar-bone; and other travelers have seen brass curtain rings, the brass plates for keyholes, the lids of sardine cases, and other such incongruous objects, worn with gravity and pride.

The Felatah ladies in central Africa spend several hours a day over their toilet. In fact, they begin over night by carefully wrapping their fingers and toes in henna leaves, so that by morning they are a beautiful purple. The teeth are stained alternately blue, yellow and purple, one here and there being left of its natural color as a contrast. About the eyes they are very particular. They pencil them with sulphuret of antimony. The hair is colored carefully with indigo. Studs and other jewelry are worn in great profusion. Not content with hanging things round their necks, arms, ankles, and, in fact, wherever nature has enabled them to do so, savages also cut holes in themselves for the purpose. The Esquimaux, from Mackenzie river westward, make two openings in their cheeks, one on each side, which they gradually enlarge, and in which they wore an ornament of stone resembling in form a large stud, and which may therefore be called a cheek stud. Throughout a great part of Western America, and again in Africa, we also find the custom of wearing a piece of wood through the central part of the lower lip. A small hole is made in the lip during infancy, and it is then extended by degrees until it is sometimes two inches long. Some races extend the lobe of the ear until it reaches the shoulder; others file the teeth in various manners. Dr. J. B. Davis has a Dyak skull in which the six front teeth have each been carefully pierced with a small hole, into which a pin with a spherical brass head had been driven. In this way, the upper lip being raised, the shining knob on each tooth would be displayed. Some of the African tribe also chip their teeth in various manners, each community having a fashion of its own.—From Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.

Never Too Old To Learn.

Sir Henry Spelman neglected the sciences in his youth, but commenced the study of them when he was between 50 and 60 years of age. After this time he became a most learned antiquarian and lawyer.

Boccacio was 35 years of age when he commenced his studies in polite literature. Yet he became one of the greatest masters of Tuscan dialects; Dante and Petrarch being the other two.

Ogleby, the translator of Homer and Virgil, was unacquainted with Latin and Greek, till he was past 50.

Dryden, in his 30th year, commenced the translation of the Iliad, his most pleasing production.

Fudoyice Monaldesco, at the great age of 115, wrote the memoirs of his own time.

Franklin did not fully commence his philosophical pursuits till he had reached his 50th year.

Plutarch, when between 70 and 80, commenced the study of Latin.

Socrates, at an extreme old age, learned to play on musical instruments.

Cato, at 80 years of age, commenced to study the Greek language.

Children's Corner.

Lullaby.

Kate L. Colby, in the Boston Transcript.

Baby mine, baby mine,
Listen to your mother's words,
All the bluebells that do blow,
Went to sleep, oh, long ago—
Long ago, long ago—
Sung asleep by birds.

"Go to sleep, go to sleep,"
Sang the birds upon the bough,
"Silver moon a watch will keep,"
So they sang with chirp and peep;
"Go to sleep, go to sleep,"
As I'm singing now.

Hide away, hide away,
Bluebells in my baby's eyes;
All the shadows of the night
Wait to shut you out of sight—
Out of sight, out of sight—
Mother guards her prize.

Open wide, open wide,
Gold-fringed lids, another day,
On the eyes so deeply blue.
Drenched in all as tender dew,
As the wood-born bluebells knew,
'Neath the morn's white ray.

Charly's Dilemma.

Charley Bright sat on the door-step late one evening, looking very dissatisfied. This was rather unusual, for he was such a good-natured, merry little fellow, that at school he was as often called "Bright Charley," as Charley Bright.

"Why, what's the matter with my boy?' asked his Aunt Fanny, as she came up the steps with a basket of fresh-gathered flowers.

"Nothing much, Aunt Fanny," was the reply. But Aunt Fanny evidently saw that all was not right. Drawing his attention to her pretty flowers, Charley became interested in their tasteful arrangement, and his warm heart soon lost its reserve.

"Aunt Fanny," said he, after a little pause, "what is the use for anybody to try to do right? This morning all the boys were going fishing, and Mrs. Phifer told Frank he might go; but Mrs. Brown told Rob that he was too little, and he must not go. Rob stole off and went with the boys, and while he and Frank were fishing together in the boat, they were overturned, and came very near being drowned. Now, one boy minded, and the other did'nt, and they both got a ducking, just the same. That's just the way all the time, and I don't see any sense in it!"

"Well, I'll tell you what I think of it," said Aunt Fanny. "You know God sends blessings on the just and unjust; the bad, worldly man fares just as well as his good neighbor, and sometimes better. But mark this, Charley, the result will be different. As for Frank and Rob, I happened to know something about their case. Frank went home with a good conscience, for the accident was an unavoidable one, and he was not in fault. Rob went home sad and guilty, and his mother punished him severely for his disobedience. I was at Mrs Phifer's when Frank came in dripping, with streaks of mud on his face, and his mother actually drew him to her bosom while he told his story, and kissed him repeatedly as she thanked God for sparing his life. Now, I've no doubt Rob's mother loves him just as dearly. But instead of both boys deserving or receiving the same, Frank will go to bed to-night peaceful and happy, and poor little Rob will go repentant, I hope, but there is a great stain on this day for him. Don't you see, Charley-boy, that though good people and bad people may seem to get the same reward, that it really is'nt so? Time will show!"

And as Aunt Fannie and Charley went in to tea, she whispered to him:

"God sees us every day, and every minute of the day. We ought to do right for his sake, and the rewards and punishments will take care of themselves."—Kind Words.

A Hindoo Story.

A tiger, prowling in the forest was attracted by a beautiful calf. It proved to be a bait, and the tiger found himself trapped in a spring cage. There he lay two days, when a Brahmin happened to pass that way.

"O Brahmin!" piteously cried the beast, "have mercy on me; let me out of this cage."

"Ah! but you will eat me."

"Eat you! devour my benefactor? Never could I be guilty of such a deed," responded the tiger.

The Brahmin, being benevolently inclined, was moved by these entreaties and opened the door of the cage. The iger walked up to him, wagged his tail, and said: "Brahmin, prepare to die; I shall now eat you."

"Oh! how ungrateful! how wicked! am I not your saviour?" protested the trembling priest.

"True," said the tiger, "very true; but it is the custom of my race to eat a man when we get a chance, and I cannot afford to let you go."

"Let us submit the case to an arbitrator," said the Brahmin. "Here comes a fox. The fox is wise; let us abide by his decision."

"Very well," replied the tiger.

The fox, assuming a judicial aspect, sat on his haunches with all the dignity he could muster, and looking at the disputants, he said: "Good friends, I am somewhat confused at the different accounts which you give of this matter; my mind is not clear enough to render equitable judgment. But if you will be kind enough to act the whole transaction before my eyes, I shall attain unto a more definite conception of the case. Do you, Mr. Tiger, show me how you approached and entered the cage, and then Mr. Brahmin will show me how he liberated you, and I shall be able to render a proper decision.

They assented, for the fox was solemn and oracular. The tiger walked into the cage, and the spring door fell and shut him in. He was a prisoner. The judicial expression faded from the fox's countenance, and turning to the Brahmin, he said: "I advise you to go home as fast as you can, and abstain, in the future, from doing favors to rascally tigers. Good morning, Brahmin; good morning, tiger."

Religious Intelligence.

—There are three Mennonite churches in Philadelphia. A new building for the third church has just been roofed in.

—The eighth annual Convention of the General Council of the Evangelical Lutheran Churches in America will be held at Jamestown, N. Y., Oct 15.

—The Bible Society at Allahabad, India, have begun and purpose to continue until they shall have furnished a copy of the Holy Scriptures to every inhabitant of India.

—The Disciples of Christ report the following gains for July and August: Accessions to the church, 3,156; churches organized, 31. Their General Convention will be held in Cincinnati, Oct. 20.

—A revival, somewhat similar to that which has been prevailing in Scotland, is in progress in New Zealand. In Dunedin all the denominations have joined together in securing a large hall and in conducting special services every evening.

—One of the most powerful auxiliaries to the church and Sunday-school is the system of public evening schools in our cities. There are upwards of 16,000 pupils enrolled in these schools in New York city, of whom nearly 5,000 are girls.

—Within the last sixty years it is computed that twenty-five thousand Jews have been converted to Christianity. Missionaries are now welcome to every house in Jerusalem. Sixty Jewesses meet there daily to hear the Gospel.

—A protracted meeting among the Friends in Hunting Creek, N. C., resulted in thirty conversions, among them a liquor distiller who publicly confessed his sin and requested to join the society. A liquor seller also yielded to the power of the Holy Spirit.

Five years ago there were not 500 Protestants in Mexico. There are now more than 100 churches, with 10,000 members, while 27 schools and academies are under Protestant direction. The capitiol alone supports 11 Protestant churches, several missions, and seven day schools.

—The Russian government has refused to allow the American Bible Society to circulate the Scriptures in Armenian and Ararat dialect among its Georgian subjects and other Armenian Christians in the Southern provinces. Meanwhile the sacred volume is eagerly bought by these Russian Armenians from traders, who have smuggled the books across the borders.

—A Parsee writes to the Bombay Guardian that the only hope of their race, numbering some 80,000 in India, being saved from extinction is in adopting Christianity. That journal states that there are thousands of educated Parsees in Bombay who have entirely lost confidence in their own system of religion, and are perfectly convinced of the truth of Christianity.

—On March 28th, 1874, the 4th Martyrs' Memorial Church was dedicated in Madagascar. The church is built on the rock Ampamarinana, from which 14 confessors were thrown, while 4 were being burnt to death elsewhere, on that very day 25 years before. About 2,000 persons, among them some who had suffered in the persecution, united in this dedication.

—The Seventh Day Adventists have a General Conference, including 15 State Conferences, 300 churches, 75 ordained ministers, 60 licentiates, and 15,000 members. To keep up in the round numbers we are told that the amount pledged to the systematic benevolent fund is $50,000. The headquarters of the Adventists are in Battle Creek, Mich.

—The present French Government is hostile to the Old Catholics and does not concede them a legal existence. They are not allowed to open a public chapel but about 20 of them, say the Abbe Michaud, meet regularly in "a private apartment transformed into a private chapel." Their services consist of "prayer, the sacrifice of mass, and preaching." The French language is used except in certain prayers, which are said in a low voice in Latin. A course of 50 sermons is in course of delivery on the Nicæo Constantinopolitan creed.

—A remarkable instance of the power of prayer against intemperance occurred during the past season in the little town of Wethersfield, Ill. A German built a small brick brewery a few years since and commenced the sale of liquor—a business from which the place had been almost entirely free since its settlement in the early days of the State. A number of young men were gathered into this school of vice and frequently spent the Sabbath in carousals. There seemed to be no hope in arousing the community to suppress the place by law, and the godly women determined to plead with God for his never-failing aid. They were not disappointed. The liquor seller packed a portion of his building so full of ice during the winter, that by the pressure or action of the frost, the walls were rent and the building ruined. He has given up the business and gone on to a farm, and no more liquor is made or sold in he place.

—The yearly meeting of the Friends in Richmond, Ind., is generally the occasion of considerable revival power. It is one of the largest of the kind in the country and is always attended by vast audiences. On Sunday great crowds were in attendance on the camp ground. E. Osborn, of Iowa, preached a powerful sermon on the Deity and offices of Christ. A number of speakers, male and female, addressed he thousands outside the church. On Saturday a meeting was held by the Friend's Sabbath-school Association. They report 110 schools with 8,000 pupils, and forty-three mission schools. An appropriation was made for the erection of new buildings at Earlham College. This meeting or conference has 16,338 members of all ages, 147 congregations and 169 ministers.

News of the Week.

The City.

An honest determination to improve the facilities for fighting fire appears in Chicago. It seems that next to New York there are more miles of pipe, and larger pipe than in any other city in the Union; small pipe on two of the streets lined with hovels in the last fire led to the false report about insufficient water supply. Gen. Shaler, a celebrated organizer of fire brigades, is here at the invitation of the Citizen's Association and may be induced to give his aid. Forty of the insurance companies doing business here have withdrawn, but there is no uneasiness manifested, insurance having been generally secured in advance.——The Second Congress of Women will be held in Chicago in the Methodist Church Block, Oct. 15–17. The various subjects to be discussed are various as woman's work—financial enterprises, crime, housekeeping, education, hygiene, intemperance, etc. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore is President.——The nominating conventions of Cook county were held last Monday. The Tribune announced before hand that it would support no ignoramus or man of doubtful character for the Legislature by whatever party nominated.——Aron Anderson, a Swede, was last Friday convicted of arson and sentenced to a fine of $100 and six months in the State prison. He was arrested on a charge of attempting to set fire to his own house. The testimony proved that he was a man of good character, and failed to show any reason for the crime, and the judge in giving sentence said he did not consider the prisoner guilty, but gave sentence according to the verdict. Anderson refused to appeal for another trial on account of the expense to himself and friends. The verdict was evidently a compromise on the part of the jury. An effort is being made to procure a pardon.

The South.

A compromise has been arranged in Louisiana between the Kellogg and White League parties. The registry board is to be composed of two persons from each and the fifth member is umpire. Senator Carpenter has replied in a letter to the Chicago Tribune to charges of bribery which have freely circulated for the past week. He declares that his fee was for legal services not connected with the Louisiana case. The U. S. troops and gun-boats at New Orleans effectually prevent any further disturbance, although the White Leagues have a controlling influence in the city.

Political.

The following despatch from New Haven, dated Sept. 21, is interesting as showing what the Romanists desire:—There was a great deal of excitement in this city to-day over the election of three members of the Board of Education and other minor offices, owing to the fact that a prominent Roman Catholic clergyman had announced from his pulpit that it was time for the Roman Catholics to act and get control of the Board, so that their schools might be supported by the public fund. A Catholic ticket was in the field. Two members of the present Board are of that religious belief. The whole excitement called out a vote of over five thousand, which was unprecedented in the the history of New Haven school elections. About 1,400 votes were cast for the Catholic candidates, but there were defeated, and the regular nominees were elected by a majority of about 1,500, the cumulative system being used. Many Roman Catholics condemn the strong sectarian animus of the others, and refused to vote the Catholic ticket.——Four Democratic State Conventions have declared in favor of payment of the U. S. Bonds with greenbacks, four in favor of inflation.——Mr. Willard Phillips of Salem, Mass., has agreed to run for Congress in opposition to Ben. Butler.——A new Republican journal has been started in New York with $500,000 capital and an able editorial staff. It will be a strict party paper.——Gov. Dix has been renominated by the Republicans of New York.——The Prohibitionists of Ohio, besides a State ticket (for which they expect to poll 30,000 votes), have tickets in thirty-one counties, and will vote for their own candidates in fourteen of the twenty Congressional Districts.

The Country.

—A dispatch from Charleston, S. C., dated Sept. 29, says that the most fearful gale since 1854 occurred in that city the day before. For a full hour the gale was the most severe ever known there. The tide was forced up to an unprecedented height, inundating the entire river front of the city, damaging the wharfs, and in some instances sweeping away the pier-heads. The long stone sea wall, known as the battery, a famous promenade resort, was reduced to ruins; and the public bathing-house was demolished. The shipping, generally, escaped any serious damage. Some small craft were wrecked, but large vessels were only chafed. Throughout the city the effect of the gale is everywhere visible. Fences and out houses were destroyed, branches were torn from trees, and during the height of the storm the air was filled with the slate and tin stripped from the roofs, making the streets impassible. The storm extended to Willmington, N. C., and was one of the most severe ever experienced there.——A fire occurred early on the morning of the 2d at Greenpoint, Long Island, and destroyed three box factories and entire block of frame tenement houses, in consequence of which a number of families are rendered destitute and homeless.——Miss Maria E. Sherman, daughter of Gen. Sherman, was married to Lieut. Fitch of the U. S. Navy on the 1st in brilliant style. The ceremony was performed in the Roman Catholic church of St. Aloysius by Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati.——The direct cable which was being laid by the steamer Faraday between Europe and the United States has been lost. It parted in a heavy gale, and all efforts to recover it have been unsuccessful. The cable, it is understood, belonged to the old Company, and its loss will not be so deeply regretted as if it were an independent and rival Company which had suffered. The Faraday has arrived in port.——All the railroad companies operating lines in Wisconsin are now complying with the Potter law. Nothing remains for them but the hope of a favorable decision by the United States Supreme Court. They have not resorted to cheaper trains; if compelled to do so some compromise will probably be made.——A fire last Wednesday destroyed the Atlantic Block at Long Branch. On Friday the Grand Hotel at Saratoga was burned; loss $300,000. The First Baptist Church in New Haven was burned on the same day.

Foreign.

The latest dispatches from Spain indicate that the Carlists troops are becoming disorganized, and that the adherents of Don Carlos in the North are losing faith in the ultimate success of their cause. That this dissatisfaction may spread until all insurrectionary feelling is uprooted and order and good government finally established under a well ordered republic, is a result devoutly hoped for.

—The typhon which visited the southern part of Japan August 20 was one of the most severe ever experienced by foreigners. The steamer Ping On Gooloo and the German bark Hamburg were driven ashore on the rocks at Nagaski; the iron-clad ram Stonewall was sunk, and hundreds of Japanese junks were wrecked. Fully 200 lives were lost at Nagaski alone. Stores and houses were overthrown, and the Governor's new houses are a heap of ruins. Kobe also suffered. Not less than 1,000 junks were wrecked. Sagoken suffared much from the typhoon. Six thousand houses were destroyed, and 100 lives were lost, and thousands of cattle on the plantations were killed.

—A dispatch from Hong Kong says that a dangerous conspiracy of soldiers has been discovered at Teintsin. Sixty thousand troops are stationed in the neighborhood, and a large number of them had planned to seize the city and massacre all the foreigners. The ringleaders of the conspiracy have all been arrested.—A barge loaded with gunpowder lying on the Regents Canal, London, near the Zoological gardens, exploded on the morning of Oct. 2d. The report was heard at a distance of twenty miles from the place where it occurred. Five bodies of victims of the explosion have been recoverd. The lights in a railway station and in other buildings two miles away were extinguished by the concussion. Many persons had narrow escapes from death. Several animals in the Zoological Gardens were killed. Many trees were uprooted, and houses two miles distant from the canal were shattered. Several persons are yet missing. There was a perfect panic for hours, and it was not until the cause of the terrible report was learned that the fears of the people were allayed. Several persons died from fright.

Home and Health Hints.

How to Avoid a Cold.

After violent exercise, the skin being bathed in perspiration, lay off the clothes and rub briskly with a flesh brush and coarse towel. If not convenient to lay off the clothing, use the towel over such parts as are accessible, breathing deeply at the same time. In riding or sailing, if you notice a lowering of the thermometer, and you have insufficient clothing, inflating your lungs to their utmost capacity, will help you to withstand the cold without harm, for hours if necessary.

One is much more liable to take cold suddenly if very tired, from long continued applications or excesses of any kind, and from the lack of food.

An invalid whose blood is watery, who can neither exercise vigorously, or eat a suitable quantity of food, with hopes of assimilating it, will be sure to notice changes of thermometer, and will complain about cold, chilliness about the ears, of the hands and feet. Such should take the best of care of their general health; wear light porous clothing, a light gauze shirt and silk stockings, under some soft, all-wool clothes, which will well repay their cost. Loose clothing will keep the person much warmer; this is particularly true in dressings for the hands and feet.

For people who become rheumatic on exposure to cold help has been given them by the use of the chamois-skin shirt and drawers, making them full and long, these perhaps will cost you from fifteen to twenty dollars; but a good overcoat will cost you much more than that amount, while those garments will do you three times the amount of good.

For gentlemen who are out of doors much, one of those oil cloth coats are very useful. They are quite light and portable, so every one should have one who studies economy and health.

How to Put Children to Bed.

Not with reproof for any of that day's sins of omission or commission. Take any time but bed-time for that. If you ever heard a little creature sighing or sobbing in its sleep, you could never do this. Seal their closing eyelids with a kiss and a blessing. The time will come when, all too soon, they will lay their heads upon their pillows lacking both. Let them then, at least, have the sweet memory of a happy childhood of which no future sorrow or trouble can rob them. Give them their rosy youth. Nor need this involve wild license. The judicious parent will not so mistake my meaning. If you have ever met the man, or the woman, whose eyes have suddenly filled when a little child has crept trustingly to its mother's breast, you may have seen one in whose childhood's home "Dignity" and Severity" stood where love and pity should have been. Too much indulgence has ruined thousands of children; too much love, not one.—Fanny Fern.

Cheap Vinegar.

Take a quantity of common Irish potatoes, wash them until they are thoroughly clean, place them in a large vessel and boil them until done. Drain off carefully the water that they are cooked in, straining it, if necessary, in order to remove every particle of the potato. Then put this potato water in a jug or keg, which set near the stove, or in some place where it will be kept warm, and add one pound of sugar to two gallons and a half of the water, with some hop yeast. Let it stand three or four weeks, and you will have excellent vinegar, and at a cost of six or seven cents per gallon.

Removing Grease Spots.

In taking out grease from clothing with benzole or turpentine, people generally make the mistake of wetting the cloth with the terpentine and then rubbing it with a sponge or piece of cloth. In this way the fat is dissolved, but is spread over a greater space and is not removed. The benzole or turpentine evaporates and the fat covers a greater surface than before. The only way to remove a grease spot is to place soft blotting paper beneath and on top of the spot, which is to be first thoroughly saturated with the benzole and then well pressed. The fat is then dissolved and absorbed by the paper and entirely removed from the clothing.

Preserving Winter Apples—Orchard Management.

The result of twenty years' experience in keeping apples may all be summed up in a few words, viz.: Keep them dry, cool and entirely shielded from the external air. After trying numerous experiments, I have finally adopted the following method as being the cheapest and most expeditious:

I commence gathering winter fruit about the 1st of October, and finish, if possible, by the 20th of the same, leaving those kinds most affected by early frosts, and which are most tenacious of the parent stem, until the last. Hard frosts are injurious to apples for late keeping. After the dew is off, and the apples become dry in the morning, I commence picking with the hand, and put them immediately and carefully into well made flour barrels, made expressly for the purpose; they should be air-tight. Head them up, lay them on their sides, and when done gathering, wheel them to an outhouse or open shed, where I let them remain until severe weather sets in, when they are taken into the cellar, and remain undisturbed till wanted for the market.

It would be better to take them under shelter each day as they are picked, to prevent as I said before, the whole secret of preserving apples is in keeping them as dry and cool as possible without freezing. Apples should be picked only in dry weather. I have a cellar expressly fitted up for keeping apples, as it will not do for the cellar to be warm enough to keep other vegetables. It must be well ventilated. I leave my cellar windows open through the winter, unless in very severe weather, and when warm weather approaches, I close them through the day and open them at night. When the air is warmer on the outside than in the cellar, I keep all closed up tight, and vice versa.

I never repack or open my apples, for in so doing it lets in a new agent of decomposition; the air that is fixed in the barrels becomes in a great measure deprived of its decomposing properties.

Having a scanty supply of barrels last fall at gathering time, I had a lot of old salt barrels recoopered, making them nearly air-tight. Into a part of these I put Winesaps. On opening them late in the spring I found they had kept one hundred per cent. better than the same variety that were put into other barrels, which I attribute to saline influences.

A very great error of managing apples, used to be, and still is practiced by many fruit growers—that of putting apples in bins or on garret floors, to go through the "sweating process," leaving them until they become shriveled before putting them away in their winter quarters. Thus the apple looses flavor, as well as its vitality; for the aroma which escapes from the apples by being thus exposed to the warm atmosphere, is nothing less than minute particles of the apple itself. I have observed that the late keeping apples, as a general thing, have thicker rinds than those that mature earlier. This is peculiarly the case with the Roxbury Russett. If I am correct in this observation, it is a strong argument in favor of close keeping, for the rind serves as a protection against the escape of the aroma of the apple, and consequently against the effects of the atmosphere. There is no apple with which I am acquainted that emits a greater odor than the Summer Queen, and none more frail.

I avoid heavy pruning, which I think is not only injurious to the tree, but deleterious to the fruit. It is true that the fruit is larger and fairer, but large apples are not the best keepers. Besides, frequently cutting off large portions of the top of a tree sours its juices, and eventually the tree becomes diseased and dies. I am also opposed to the frequent plowing of an orchard. Breaking the roots of the trees certainly can be of no advantage; besides, it exhausts the soil and leaves it heavy and dead.—Cor. Ohio Farmer.

Everlasting Fence Posts.

I discovered many years ago that wood can be made to last longer than iron in the ground, but thought the process so simple and inexpensive that it was not worth making any stir about it. I would as soon have poplar, basswood, or quaking ash as any other kind of wood for fence posts. I have taken out basswood posts after having set seven years, that were as sound as when first put in the ground. Time and weather seemed to have no effect on them. The posts can be prepared for less than two cents apiece.

For the benefit of others, I will give the recipe: Take boiled linseed oil and stir in it pulverized charcoal to a consistency of paint. Put a coat of this over the timber, and there is not a man that will live to see it rotten.—Cor. Western Rural.

Temperance.

From 1860 to 1870 we had in operation, in Indiana, what this Convention calls a judicious, well regulated license law. What are its effects? Did it restrain the traffic in drink? No! Turn to the United States Census Report for Indiana; compare 1860 with 1870 and we find that during these ten years the population increased twenty-four and one-half per cent., churches twenty-six per cent., schools thirty-five per cent.; the manufacture of fermented liquors in the shape of lager beer, etc., three hundred and one per cent., ardent spirits four per cent., insanity forty-five per cent., idiocy fifty per cent., pauperism one hundred and thirty per cent., and crime two hundred and one per cent. Under this judicious, well-regulated license law, it appears, the manufacture of liquor increased twelve times faster than the increase of population; and, as a legitimate consequence, insanity and idiocy twice as fast, pauperism six times, and crime nine times faster! What an admirable result of a judicious, well-regulated license law! This surely is regulating the traffic with a vengeance. How long can the State stand such a regulation as this, before it becomes wholly pauper and criminal? No wonder the saloon-keepers all over the State are clamoring for a judicious license law. They know by long experience that license means free whisky.

This resolution declares that "the Baxter Bill has proved a failure." How does this declaration accord with facts? Let us see. In December, 1872, the close of the year immediately preceding the passage of the Baxter Bill, there were in Indiana 261,869 polls, 2,094 saloons, 345 convicts committed, and nine counties without saloons. In December, 1873, when the Baxter Law had been in operation only ten months, and when many of the officers of the law, were opposed to its execution, and embarrassed its workings at every point, there were 265,854 polls, 1,487 saloons, 250 convicts committed, and 23 counties without saloons.

Thus it will be seen that, under a judicious, well-regulated license law, the manufacture of liquor increased twelve times faster than the population, and, with that, insanity and idiocy doubled; pauperism increased six times, and crime nine times faster than the increase of polls; whereas, under the Baxter Bill, in less than one year, the number of saloons decreased thirty per cent., and crime twenty-eight per cent., although the polls increased upward of four thousand.—New Temperance Era.

It don't pay to have fifty working men poor and ragged in order to have one saloon-keeper dressed in broadcloth and flush of money.

It don't pay to have those fifty working men live on bone soup and half rations in order that one saloon-keeper may flourish on roast turkey and champagne.

The country is groaning under one most loathsome form of wickedness, namely:—legalized drunkenness. Here are some startling statistics:

Total Internal Revenue 1878, $114,075,456.08. Spirits, fermented liquors and tobacco,—three articles alone—$95,810,612.71. In a city not far from Syracuse, N. Y., of 50,000 inhabitants, 500 bar-rooms consume daily 10 bbls of C. W., 1,000 kegs of lager and ale, 15,000 cigars and 200 lbs of S. T. daily. Barrell W., first cost $40., retail $300., profits $260.; 10 bbls daily profits $2,600, for 300 days equals $780,000. According to report of special committee that on retail sales of liquor over counter one year $1,483,491,865.,—nearly 500,000,000 more than half the national debt. Ohio has 54 liquor distilleries, and 478 breweries,—annual product is $13,253,838. Bread distilled into liquid damnation.—Report of Rochester Wesleyan Conference.

Facts and Figures.

There are now five European republics: France, Spain, Switzerland, San Marino and the lilliputian Andorra, in the Pyrennees. The latter has enjoyed its free institutions unchanged for more than a thousand years. It has thirty miles square of mountainous territory, and 8,000 inhabitants.

In the course of pulling down the old mint building in Cowgate, Edinburgh, recently, to widen the street, there was discovered in the crevice of a wall a specimen of the medal struck by Gregory XIII, to commemorate the massacre of St. Bartholomew. It is rather larger than an English half-crown, and bears on the obverse side the effigy of the Pope, with the legend, "Gregorious XIII, Pont. Max. An. I." (Gregory XIII., Supreme Pontiff, in the first year); and on the reverse with the legend, "Vgonottorum Strages (Slaughter of the Huguenots), 1572," a representation of the massacre, in which is seen the figure of a winged and helmeted angel, with a cross in one hand and a sword in another, engaged in the work of destruction.

The statistics of the Poor Children's Free Excursions in New York show the following interesting figures: On the twelve excursions this year there were 6,761 girls and 17,086 boys taken away from the city for a day's fun and pleasure. The total cost of these excursions was $8,834.89, or the insignificant sum of thirty-seven cents for each of the 23,847 children. To feed so great an army of little ones Mr. George F. Williams, the successful manager of this most successful undertaking, purchased 5,510 loaves of bread, 1,941 pounds of ham, 672 pounds of tongue, 1,121 pounds of beef, 861 pounds of butter, 40,000 French roll., 24,600 pounds of ice, 12 boxes of lemons, 6 barrels of sugar, 3,060 quarts of ice cream, and 4,200 quarts of milk. On Saturday Mr. Williams closed his third summer's work, having superintended in that time no less than forty-four excursions, while the aggregate number of children that left the streets of New York under his care was nearly 64,000.

Lansingburgh, N. Y., has for a century been celebrated for its mammoth brush manufactories, which today supply nine-tenths of the brushes used in this country, the other tenth being made in Boston and Philadelphia. There are, large and small, sixty-odd brush manufactories in Lansingburgh. Some of these employ from two to three hundred hands, including many girls who draw brushes at home.

The steam machinery used in large factories for shaping brush blocks, boring the holes for the bristles, and finishing the backs and handles is wonderful. Huge white birch logs, thirty feet long and two feet in diameter, are fedinto machines which rapidly cut and shape the unwieldy mass in brush blocks, varying in size from a lady's toilet brush to a barber's penetrator. Each machine is adapted to the manufacture of a particular kind of brush. Thus, every style, including hair, cloth, hat, shoe, paint, whitewash, horse, window, scrubbing, flesh brushes, etc., is produced only by its particular machine.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company have finished six artesian wells this season in the heart of the great plains, and generally at an elevation of more than 4,000 feet obove the sea. The particular region is in what is known as Red Desert, which is from 700 to 800 miles west of the Missouri. At Rock Springs the well is 1,145 feet deep. They passed through various veins of coal, from two to eleven feet thick, and the aggregate of veins is 90 feet. Water flows from the surface steadily to the amount of 960 gallons, or 24 barrels, an hour. At Point of Rocks, 28 miles east, the well is 1,000 feet deep, and water is abundant, but it does not rise nearer to the surface than 15 feet, whence it is pumped into a tank; and such a well is a great advantage, for hitherto water trains have been run to supply different water stations on this route. No coal of value was found. At Bitter Creek, 21 miles east, the well is 696 feet deep, and 1,000 gallons per hour flow to the surface. At 96 feet is a small vein of coal. At Creston the well is 300 feet deep. At Separation the well is 1,180 feet deep, and water rises to within ten feet of the surface. A vein of coal is 45 feet deep and several feet thick. All the water in these wells is hard, but it is of fine quality.

Now this whole country is in the Rocky Mountains, but a traveler would hardly suspect it, for no lofty elevations appear. Gentle hills are everywhere, not covered with timber, but with excellent grass, well suited for stock. The soil is rich, but as there is no rainfall to speak of, no crops can be grown. We can see now the value of a flowing artesian well in this vast solitude of grass. A well flowing 24 barrels an hour will irrigate 20 acres of grain in a day, or 160 acres in two weeks, which is as often as grain needs water; but by having a reservoir a far larger tract can be watered. A well 1,000 feet deep will cost at present about $1,500. We can see, therefore, that the great interior can be occupied by civilized people. —N. Y. Tribune.

A report from the United States Bureau of statistics at Washington, just issued, contains an interesting table of the population of the earth, taken chiefly from the work on that subject issued this year at Gotha by Drs. Behm and Wagner, and founded on the most recent authorities. By this statement the aggregate population of the earth is given at 1,391,032,000, Asia being the most populous section and containing 798,000,000, while Europe has 300,500,000, Africa 203,000,000, America 84,500,000, and Australia and Polynesia 4,500,000.

In Europe the leading nations are credited with the following numbers: Russia, 71,000,000; the German Empire, 41,000,000; France, 36,000,000; Austro-Hungary, 36,000,000; Great Britain and Ireland, 32,000,000; Italy, nearly 27,000,000; Spain, 16,500,000; and Turkey, nearly 16,000,000. The other countries do not exceed 5,000,000 each.

In Asia, China, which is by far the most populous nation of the earth, is credited with 425,000,000; Hindostan is credited with 240,000,000; Japan, 33,000,000; the East India Islands, 30,000,000; Burmah, Siam and Farther India, nearly 26,000,000; Turkey, 13,500,000, and Russia nearly 11,000,000.

The Australian population is given at 1,674,500, and the Polynesian Islands at 2,763,500, New Guinea and New Zealand being included in the latter.

In Africa, the chief divisions are West Soudan and the Central African region, with 80,000,000; the Central Soudan region, 39,000,000; South Africa, 20,250,000; the Galta country and the region east of the White Nile, 15,000,000; Samauli, 8,000,000; Egypt, 8,500,000, and Morocco, 6,000,000.

In America two-thirds of the population is north of the Isthmus, where the United States has nearly 39,000,000, Mexico over 9,000,000, and the British Provinces 4,000,000. The total population of North America is given at 52,000,000, and of South America 25,500,000, of which Brazil contains 10,000,000. The West India islands have over 4,000,000, and the Central American States not quite 3,000,000.

Price, $1.25.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

Price, $1.35.

That the book is one of great interest and value is shown by the following

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;' "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abducted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS. in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.

The eighth of November is appointed as a day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of secret societies. All Christians who realize that Freemasonry is a false religion and causes the ruin of multitudes of precious souls are requested to observe that day with prayer for the overthrow of the order. But many could pray more intelligently and effectively if they read the Cynosure and knew how much work was being done and where. We ask all our friends to devote as much time as possible to the work of getting subscribers among Christians, before this fast day comes.

Do not infer from the fact your neighbors took the Cynosure six months or a year ago that they take it now. We adhere to the rule of removing names from our list unless ordered continued, and in this way many lose the Cynosure who perhaps would be glad to take it again if a friend would invite them to do so. This we trust will be a very busy winter. Two State meetings will probably be held next month. Will you not devote at least half a day each week to the work of soliciting subscriptions for the paper?

Five hundred and forty subscriptions expire during the present month. Is yours among them? Please send your renewal immediately.

An intelligent lady said the other day the influence of college secret societies was very pernicious, and lead men into the Masonic lodge after they left school. A gentleman said that his eldest son went to college, joined a secret society, and became a drunkard and I was nearly shipwrecked. When his second son left home for college the father told him, that he might stay until he joined a secret society but no longer. He finished his college course without joining, and to-day thanks his father for not allowing him to do so.

If you have any young friends that are members of college secret societies make them a present of our pamphlet on that subject. Price, single copy, post paid, thirty-five cents.

He, who will observe proyidences, shall not want providences to observe So the person who will watch for opportunities to obtain subscribers for the Cynosure will not fail to find them. When you are trading, when visiting or receiving visits, when traveling, at the post office waiting for the distribution of the mail, at prayer-meetings, conferences, associations, watch for an opportunity and improve it.
